The following letter in the New York Times by "A Resident of Two Years in Denmark" is deeply interesting in its disclosure of the huge quantities of foodstuffs that have been shipped from the United States to Denmark and, unquestionably, re-exported to Germany. It is as follows:

The startling announcement made in the press recently that Germany is obtaining from Holland and Scandinavia hundreds of thousands of tons of food annually, enough to supply its entire army, has caused a considerable stir. These "neutrals" are now squealing because of President Wilson's firm determination to put an end to the traffic which to them means an inexhaustible source of riches. Sweden, an official report tells us, has exported to Germany over 250,000 tons of pig-iron in two years in addition to fully 200,000 tons of wood pulp for the manufacture of high explosives. Holland we know has exported foodstuffs such as bacon, eggs, butter, and vegetables in incalculable quantities, but I never read any mention being made of Denmark.

This little country is, however, one of the largest, if not the largest, supplier of food to Germany, thanks chiefly to her free harbour, which is a sort of bonding warehouse for goods in transit. Hundreds of thousands of tons of fat, lard, bacon, meat, cocoa and coffee are consigned to the free harbour, ostensibly for re-exportation to neutral countries and even Russia, but directly or indirectly nearly the whole of it falls into German hands. Denmark declines responsibility, for this harbour is free, and every nation has a free access and is at liberty to make purchases ex custom duties. The goods landed there are not considered landed in Denmark, and if the stuff is allowed to get there can one expect poor little Denmark to stand in Germany's way? Figures quoted in the Chamber of Deputies two months ago by M. Tardieu, now head of the French mission in this country, show that the export of dairy products from Holland to Germany has jumped from 82,000 tons in 1914 to 362,000 tons in 1916. Scandinavia has increased her imports in the following percentage: Oil, 104 per cent.; nitrates, 111 per cent.; cocoa, 205 per cent.; coffee, 312 per cent. Holland and Denmark alone exported 116,000 tons of meat to Germany in 1916. As a German soldier's ration is 250 grams, these countries have supplied 400,000,000 rations!

Official statistics show that for Denmark alone the import of cocoa has been over 50,000 tons since the beginning of the war, while the yearly home consumption is only 1,600 tons. In addition to being a valuable article of food a German chemist can extract from cocoa about 50 per cent. of fat used in the making of explosives. This country alone sent to Denmark 10,000,000 pounds of cocoa in 1916. The following represent a few essential articles of food exported from the United States to Denmark in the year following the declaration of war as compared with the year that preceded it:

Bacon	33,483	29,058,080
Lard	1,811,981	72,057,217
Oleo oil	4,972,834	13,459,913
Other meat products	3,307,602	19,440,439
Feeding stuff for cattle:
Linseed	60,500	157,552,771

One extraordinary fact is to be noticed in connection with the overseas carriage of these goods. The ships of the big Danish Shipping Company plying between this country and Copenhagen have been immune from submarine attacks, but the Norwegians and Swedes, who are less under German domination, have lost ship after ship. Furthermore, Denmark is exporting its own produce at the risk of starving itself at home. Butter, eggs, cheese, bacon, margarine, fresh meat, fish, a very large percentage of which used to be sent to the United Kingdom, are now going southward. Cattle are steadily sent to Germany at the rate of 8,000 to 10,000 head a week since the beginning of the war. These cattle are fattened on fodder, every pound of which is imported from abroad. If the blockade was effectual Denmark could not continue to provide the German Army with food and clothing, and the munition factories with material to make explosives. A special train, called the "milk train," leaves Copenhagen every morning for Berlin. Fish has been exported in such enormous quantities that, according to recent reports from Berlin, the Danes have been asked to stop for the present the export of fresh fish. Eggs are exported by the hundreds of millions to Germany. All horses available for military use have been taken away from farmers and replaced by Danish stock. Last year Denmark allowed German remount officers to come and pick up 10,000 of the very best horses for their artillery.

Uncle Sam owes it to the mothers of the hundreds of thousands of young men who will soon be on their way to France to see that he is no longer going to feed the German brute. Great Britain has been endeavouring to starve Germany into subjection by the system of rationing and agreements with neutral traders, and granting of licenses, and has hopelessly failed. Do not let America make the same mistake. A strict embargo must be declared on all foodstuffs and raw material to countries adjacent to Germany. The North Sea must be locked up. The neutral will protest, but it is up to him to see that his people consume their own foodstuff, instead of sending it across the border.

THE ORIGIN OF THE CRIME

BY EDGAR SALTUS

In June, three years ago, the Archduke Franz Ferdinand received a visit from the Kaiser. When the Kaiser had gone, the Archduke went to his grave.

For the flames that followed, the Kaiser, shifty as every criminal is, accused first Russia, then France, then England. At the public bar of his opinion the United States has not yet been indicted. Wait and see. Sooner or later he will call God to witness that it was all due to Mr. Wilson's pyromania. Yet, oddly enough, none of the defendants declared war on Serbia.

The declaration, prearranged between the Wilhelmstrasse and the Ballplatz, had, for nominal basis, Austria's horror at the murder of her Archduke. Throughout history Austria has been in the rogue's gallery. The horror was a mask.

In the Prussian Diet Liebknecht told the truth about it, not all the truth, but as much as he could. It was very injudicious of him. In Hunland truth is diagnosed as a form of hydrophobia for which the only Pasteur Institute is jail. Liebknecht went to prison, but not before he had urged that history be taught correctly and children learn that the Archduke's assassination was hailed in high quarters as a gift of the gods.

A gift of the Kaiser's he might have said, and probably would have had he not been gagged. Anyway the facts suffice. Franz Ferdinand was next in line for the throne of the polyglot polyarchy which Austria is. Thoroughly detested in Vienna, profoundly distrusted in Berlin, he was a man with ideas, poor, perhaps, but his own, who very operatically, had married a Bohemian girl. The young woman was Hoffahig but not royal. Concerning the couple the old satrap, the former Emperor, had only one desire and that was never to see them. He declined therefore to lift the lady to the empyrean. Negligently he sent her an empty title or two, but the imperialia he withheld. Consequently she could not be Empress and over the mummy of the Tower of Babel her sons could not reign.

To remedy that there were dark plots in dumb palaces. For the benefit of the heir Franz Ferdinand proposed to carve from the mummy a large Slav State, an operation which it is obvious, while advantageous to him would be the reverse to Pan-Germanism.

A rumor of it reached the Kaiser. To get the lay of the land he and Von Tirpitz looked in at the Archduke's rose gardens in Konopisht. There while Von Tirpitz monopolised the host, he condoled with the hostess. The Bohemian lady, moved by the chivalrous sympathy of the stainless War Lord, let the cat out of the bag, after pledging him, Hand auf Herz, to secrecy.

The Kaiser, seeing then what confronted him, saw too that any moment the plan might be realised, for at any moment the old Emperor might conclude to die. In considering that he considered also the second line, the present incumbent, Karl I.

There was a young man with no ideas, however, poor. It would be miraculous if he did have any. His father was cracked, so was his grandfather, and his wife is one of seventeen children, of whom several are imbecile. She, too comes of a fine old family, and together they form an ideal couple who lose no time in thought.

The charm of that appealed to Kaiser Bill. At once this thug turned snitch. For the Archduke's project counter plots were indicated. Better an heir apparent should perish than that Pan-Germanism be blocked. From those rose gardens the Artful Dodger sent Von Tirpitz to the Ballplatz and then went up to his yacht, while the artless lady and her Archduke went down to death.

Meanwhile, in the Wilhelmstrasse, from which the Ballplatz takes its orders, long since the burglary of the world had been prepared. At the time Serbia, the key to the East, barred the way. But better a nation should perish than that thugs be balked. Then, too, "the day" was dawning. The police, unsuspicious, unprepared, were asleep. The chance might come. None the less precautions were necessary. To insure a proper hit-him-again enthusiasm a fight must be so staged that the other party will appear to have provoked it. That was Bismarck's stagecraft, to which Bernhardi has since, and very badly, played the flute.

At this juncture, Franz Ferdinand vacating the rose gardens, went down to his death and Austria in feigned horror flung an ultimatum at Serbia, which she denounced as a nation of assassins.

Apparently in that denunciation were the cards, face up and on the table. The man in the subway, if he troubled to look, thought it a square deal. But the cards had been stacked.

Franz Ferdinand was done for in Sarajevo, which is in Bosnia, and Bosnia, the swag of an earlier burglary is Austrian territory—that is to say German. On arriving no military escort was provided for him, the police had been called off and the double murder was accomplished by the son of the local chief of the Austrian Secret Service. The Governor of Sarajevo who had sent the police about their business, was shortly rewarded. He was given command of the Bosnian troops. But Nemesis was eying him. He went mad.

Meanwhile on Potsdam and the Horburg there descended that joy over which Liebnecht told. Two birds had been killed with one bomb. The Archduke was out of the way. He had been slaughtered in Bosnia. Bosnia is peopled with Serbs, and nothing could be more rational than to charge Serbia with the crime and then proceed to lay her out.

The ultimatum followed. Previously, when Austria bagged Bosnia and, for good measure, Hernegovina also Russia, then exhausted by Japan omitted to raise a finger. In Berlin and therefore in Vienna it was believed that Russia would in like manner let Serbia go by the board. Consequently France would not interfere and still less England. That was the way the thugs saw it. Before them was the easy prey, the promenade over a corpse and the triumphant Drang nach Osten.

But immediately Petersburg afterward Petrograd, and now, for the moment, Retrograd, shouted: 'Stop thief!' At the hue and cry France sat up. England climbed into her conning tower, and Austria, at sight of the police, turned, backed, and would have to run to cover. But with Kaiser Bill it was then or never. By the scruff of the neck he kicked the mummy in.

The world since then has been in flames. To-day almost every man who calls himself white is trying to put them out. Those here that stand aside think it no concern of ours.

It is the duty of philosophy to supply a reason for everything. Readily it provides one for them. Either they have not studied the President's Flag Day address or else they do not appreciate the malignancy of German savagery. They have not considered that should that savagery prevail in Europe it will be repeated here. But when they do realise what the enemy is they will realise also that nothing earthly is dirtier than two dirty swine except a clean Prussian.

MUSIC IN THE HOME

OUR DUTY TO TOMORROW'S CITIZENS.

The Place of Musical Education—How the Plan Works in Boston Schools—The Church's Part—How Parents Can Help.

When Sir Douglas Haig was studying Prussian military methods in Germany many years before the war, he strongly maintained that the German General Staff would one day pay dearly for its neglect of the Cavalry. Just as this hero's belief in the cavalry proved true, so it is quite apparent that the child whose musical education is neglected will live to manhood to rue his handicap. Educationalists do not yet realise what music means in the young people's development. The failure to give music its rightful place in the school curriculum and in home training is not due to any antagonism but merely to a non-realization of what its rightful place is.

As anyone knows, a very small percentage of high school students ever make direct use of their Euclid, Latin, Chemistry and such subjects after they bid farewell to the schoolroom. But every day they do use the powers of observation, concentration, persistence, logical reasoning and resourcefulness which are the results of a regular study of mathematics, languages, and the sciences. The study of music has this advantage—not only does it cultivate these qualities as do other studies but the accomplishment in itself proves of direct use to oneself and others.

In these times it requires no argument to establish the fact that no person is possessed of an all-round equipment for life who has not a reasonably good working knowledge of music in some form. Even in war times we have only to turn to our political and military stalwarts to see in which direction the finger points. Mr. David Lloyd George stands up for music. One of Sir Douglas Haig's complaints against the war office was its failure to provide music for the troops, a neglect said to be now a thing of the past. As a life necessity, music demands more attention from the schools, homes and churches in the child's education.

IN THE SCHOOL.

Teachers realise the power to make better pupils. To illustrate: Study of the violin is being taken up in the schools in some centres. It has even advanced to that stage where last summer there was held in connection with New York University a class of instruction for teachers. This proposition was so radical that it attracted considerable attention from the press and the papers were unanimous in their commendation of the plan. In speaking of his work in the Boston schools the supervisor of violin teaching said: "When I first planned to do this work, I thought perhaps 50 per cent. of the children might be found to have musical ability. I underestimated the number, 80 per cent. of the children show ability—read ability.

"I have one school in which there are Russians, Poles, Italians, children of other nationalities. They go half mad with the joy of music. Their bodies sway to it and their eyes are rapt. They make any sacrifice to be able to buy their violins. There are teachers who tell me that the whole tone of their schools has changed since their children have been able to express themselves in music. The children are cleaner, happier, and more obedient. To every child is given a practice card with the hour of practice ruled off on it. An hour of practice a day is the rule and the card must be filled out and signed each week by the child's father or mother. If a child falls below a certain standard of practice he is dropped from the class. But few are dropped. And these are many who soon outstrip the class and make such rapid progress that they must have private teachers to supplement the class work." It is also an interesting observation that some boys who do not feel any attraction to singing will undertake the study of the violin accepting it as an instrument more for the masculine six. Violin study is, however, by no means confined to boys as out of one class of two hundred, two-thirds were girls.

Another point sometimes overlooked is the assimilating effect of music in schools where there are pupils of foreign parentage. Someone said recently: "Go among the Italians some evening and find the people playing grand opera on their mandolins and guitars. It is a sad fact that Canada does not conserve their wonderful ability in music. The children lose it on entering the schools."

IN THE CHURCH.

A hymn selected for the children is quite an established habit in many churches. And when that number is announced how the voices of the little folks stand out clearly and wholeheartedly above the others. In some Sunday-schools it is the custom to have a good musical leader teach hymn-singing for ten or fifteen minutes before the session commences. In others the leader instead of allowing a selection to be sung in any sort of way, spends a few minutes on drilling the school in enunciation, phrasing and expression. All these methods of instilling the love of sacred music into the lives of the young are commendable and can scarcely be overdone.

IN THE HOME

No school is as good for a boy or girl as the home training. If admitted this fact precludes the possibility of any dutiful parents shifting the responsibility for giving their children the advantages of music in the home. "It never rains roses" said George Eliot" when we want more roses we must plant more bushes." There are various ways parents may encourage the boys and girls to seize every opportunity for musical improvement.

Said a business man to the writer, "My two little girls are making wonderful progress in singing They are often asked to take part in a Sunday-School chorus and the like. Why just recently they had both the equivalent to three music lessons a week for six weeks free. It was a splendid training and I encourage them to go into everything of that nature."

Another gentleman when asked about this matter said he tries to make it a rule in his home to have the children hear some good music every night. His wife often would play and sing a few songs and then they would put a few records on the phonograph. If the household duties of the day had made their mother too tired to sing, the children just had the records. Indeed the music appealed to the mother for her own sake because so often it proved so restful. Fortunately too, the practicing of the music season does not interfere with the school lessons for rest is not so much an absence from work as it is work of a different kind. Again a mother should plan to teach the smallest children those simple home songs that are caught up so readily.

MUSICAL COMMENTS.

What should the lady pianist wear at her recitals? One well-known pianist who takes her art seriously has adopted a little black velvet coat-frock as a protest against the what she terms flippancy of the customary low-necked evening gown." She says a serious-minded woman artist does not want to be judged by her frocks and she contends that to most women clothes are a handicap to the serious accomplishment of a great purpose.

Dr. John Bull. That sounds appropriate for an English musician's name doesn't it? Well there was such a person and he was born in 1563. For three years he occupied the position of organist in Hereford Cathedral. Afterwards he obtained the degree of Doctor of Music at Cambridge and subsequently became a professor in Sir Thomas Gresham's newly founded college. His name and fame in his day led some easily satisfied folks to say that he was the author of "God Save the King."

An English lecturer Dr. Walford Davies is credited with the assertion that there are 9,765,625 possible variations in a phrase of six notes. Oh, well, we are used to reckoning in millions since the war started. He also says there are possible 152,000,000 variants of the single chant.

What Mr. John R. Rathom of the Providence Journal calls the German state-made mind is also seen in music. A German comet player once had an argument with the conductor of the orchestra about an extra note he had inserted and for which he was "called." When the conductor finally assured him that the note was a fly speck the cornet player said: "Well whatever he was I played him."

A somewhat remarkable American "artist" has been said to have studied in one of England's leading conservatories and finally entered the competition for the medal presented to this institution annually by the King. Also that this medal was only open for British subjects, but as this proviso was omitted from "the printed slips" this hero entered. His press agent proceeds to say that out of 800 competitors this artist was selected for honour. Then comes an account of the visit to Buckingham Palace where the medal was pinned on his breast by the King. It seems however that the institution in question is not favoured with a medal by the King. Moreover the statement that the medal was pinned on this musician's breast by "King Edward" shortly before war broke out is hard to swallow.

A CHANCE FOR INVENTION.

In the winter time when the head of the household can remain indoors he can derive high entertainment from the phonograph, but what is to be done in the summer? Most of his spare time is occupied in mowing the lawn. This year, the rest of it may be devoted to making a collection of potato bugs and cutworms. It is true that the girls may have the machine on the verandah, whence faint strains may creep in the husbandman's ears, but something more is demanded.

The time is ripe for a conference of inventors. Let the devisers of satisfying machinery get together and produce a mowing machine with a phonograph attachment. It would be necessary first to request Mr. Hiram Maxim, or his heirs, executors and assigns, to provide a silencer for the clack of the knives. Once that was accomplished the phonograph would have free course and be glorified.

The comfortable effect of mowing the lawn to music could hardly be overestimated, particularly if the selections on the records were appropriate and pleasing. One might have, for example, "Onward Christian Soldiers," for Saturday mowing. Perhaps even Sunday mowing would be permissible under such happy circumstances. The Soldiers' Chorus from Faust, the Tannhauser march, The Maple Leaf and Tipperary might be suitable, and for a very hot day the gentle ditty, Pack All Your Troubles in your Old Kit Bag and Smile Smile, Smile.

Surely there is room here for inventive genius to have play.

THE FIDDLE BANK.

A Manitoba Bank-manager who was in receipt of a good salary, and who was making money on the side in real estate as well, planned to put aside as savings the sum of five hundred dollars a year. This he did for several years but instead of depositing the money in the bank or buying mortgages, he put the money in diamonds. But did you ever know that some people consider the famous old violins a good investment, too?

The manner in which these old fiddles have increased in value, and the ready market there has been for the masterpieces, is evidence of the fact that if the owner of one of them is a musician he not only has the extreme pleasure and satisfaction of playing on one of the finest instruments in existence, but it is an investment drawing interest just as it would be in the bank or out on loan.

Many of these famous old fiddles are in the possession of the great violinists of the day. Others are in the hands of wealthy men who collect them for a hobby. In addition to these private collections, several of the crowned heads in Europe own many thousands of dollars worth of violins. There are said to be certain fiddles, that were valued in the hundreds twenty years ago, are valued in thousands to-day. It almost astounds one to look over a list of old fiddle valuations and see figures running from $3000 to $18,000.

As in the case of diamonds, a purchaser must know fiddle values before attempting to invest his money that way, or else buy through a dealer of undoubted reputation. It would be interesting to see an actual case cited showing the advance in price in a given time so that the rate of interest on the investment might be computed.

LAUGHABLE ANSWERS.

The greatest impetus human nature seems to get in developing initiative is when confronted at an examination with questions that are real posers. A gentleman who has had a good deal of experience in examining musical pupils furnishes these answers as typical of many examples he has met of youthful resourcefulness:

Q.—Can you say what the "dominant means?

A.—The Pascal Symphony, The Amount of Olive branches, the Harmonious Blacksmith, and Faust.

Q.—What does the word "Sonata" mean?

A.—I do not know because it is a German word and father won't let me learn German.

Q.—Does a "sharp" raise or lower a note?

A.—Neither it would sound out of tune if it did.

Q.—Do you know what the word "tonic" means?

"It's what they give to babies to strengthen their lungs but I never heard of it in music.

Q.—How many "beats" to a mimin?

Q.—Do "rests" correspond in value to notes?

A.—Well, they can't be as valuable because they are not sounded.

Q.—What is meant by "modulation?"

A.—Imitate Paderoosky, take him for your model.

Q.—What is an "arpeggio?"

A.—I know what it is, but father won't grow any more. He says it doesn't pay to do so any longer. You can buy them so cheaply at the green-grocer's.

LINDSAY'S TAX RATE 35 MILLS

The town council of Lindsay at a meeting held Tuesday evening, struck a rate of 35 mills on the dollar. If the assessment is on a par with the rate, the taxes will be very high, although one mill lower than last year.

RECEIVES AN APPOINTMENT IN OTTAWA

Bandmaster C. J. L. Rickwood has been appointed to the important position of organist and choir director of Knox church, Ottawa.

It will be remembered that Mr. Rickwood played a short while ago in Trinity Methodist church here, and created a very favourable impression, but of course Ottawa offers more scope for a man of Mr. Rickwood's ability.

U. S. Army of Million Looked Forward To

Washington, July 25.—An American army of one million men for service abroad at once, instead of the five hundred thousand contemplated for the first draft, is foreshadowed by the government's request for an additional $5,000,000,000 made to the Senate Finance Committee.

It is improbable that the first draft will be increased, but the Government is arranging its finances for other drafts without the necessity of going to Congress again for the money.

American Vessel SinKs U-Boat That Hit The Archbold

THEY SAY NO? FIRED ON SMALL BOATS AFTER DESTROYING SHIP.

An Atlantic Port. — After swinging his steamship around in time to avoid a torpedo which went whissing less than three feet away along the starboard side of the vessel from bow to stern, Captain Walter O'Brien turned the stern gun upon the torpedo's source, a U-boat, and after four shots sent her to the bottom of the ocean.

"And what makes the destruction of the submarine doubly agreeable," said Captain O'Brien, "is that she was the same one which sank the big oil steamship, John D. Archbold, of the Standard Oil Company.

Captain O'Brien and the crew of thirty-three of his vessel arrived here aboard a steamship which brought 119 cabin and 123 steerage passengers from France.

Captain O'Brien's vessel was taking various supplies from America to France and had not met with anything more exciting than the passing of some wreckage, when on June 16, in the Bay of Biscay, the lookout sang out, "Big ship sinking dead ahead."

Captain O'Brien steered straight for the sinking vessel, which proved to be the John D. Archbold. Her crew were in the small boats. When near enough to megaphone, Captain O'Brien asked them what had happened. "Subbed," was the laconic reply.

"Let me take you aboard," suggested Captain O'Brien, but the captain of the John D. Archbold declined, as the French Coast was only 75 miles away, and the weather perfect. "Besides," said the sinking vessel's captain, "a patrol boat will be along presently."

There had been no sign of a submarine up to that time, but then the lookout shouted, "Periscope off the starboard quarter!"

At the same instant a wake was seen approaching and Captain O'Brien just had time enough to swing his vessel around, when the torpedo which was making the wake, passed by, scarcely three feet from the vessel's side.

The U-boat had now come to the surface and presented a splendid target for the stern gun aboard Captain O'Brien's vessel.

"Three shots were wasted, but the fourth one slammed the submarine just amidships. She had begun to submerge again when we began firing but there was enough of her surface left for the shell to reach. And I guess there was not much time left for prayer for the fellows inside. Oil immediately formed like a skin on the surface and a dense vapor arose above the place where the U-boat had disappeared."

ATTACKED BY SEVEN SUBS.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 25.—Twenty-one Halifax sailors, part of the crews of three Dutch ships which were transferred to the British flag in Halifax some weeks ago and sent to England, have arrived home. The men state that on their last trip east they were within three miles of thirteen American transports which were under convoy of warships and destroyers. The men witnessed the heavy firing of the Americans and were credibly informed that seven German submarines had made a concentrated attack and been beaten off. British bluejackets asserted that six of the submarines were destroyed.

MRS. LEITCH STILL KEPT IGNORANT OF GROOM'S DEATH

In Such Critical Condition Truth Cannot Be Told Her

YOUNG WIDOW DECLARES THE SHOOTING WAS LIKE SCENE FROM FILMS.

MONTREAL, July 26.—Plaintively asking for news of her soldier husband, Gertrude Sandring Leitch still lies in the Royal Victoria Hospital.

She does not guess that she is a widow, that the gallant young soldier who became her husband three short weeks ago, was carried to his last resting place on Friday afternoon.

"How is Bruce?" is the question that is constantly on her lips. It was necessary at first that the news of his shooting by William Bennett be kept from her because a shock might prove fatal in her weakened condition. Now no one has had the heart to tell her; so she lies there, impatient for news. She believes that Bruce Leitch is still in a state of unconsciousness resulting from his wounds and she expects hourly to hear that he has awakened and is asking for her.

MRS. LEITCH BETTER.

Her own condition is improving daily and it is probable that within a few days she will be sufficiently strong to undergo an operation for the removal of the bullet from her jaw.

To her the whole incident seems like some strange dream. She says that when William Bennett dashed from the wayside bushes and stood before the newly married pair with levelled revolver, the first thought that flashed into her head was that the whole scene suggested the "movies." Before another thought entered her mind her husband fell and the revolver was turned upon her. She has assumed that Bruce Leitch, like herself, was wounded badly, but not killed.

BENNETT STONE BLIND.

The third actor in the tragic drama, William Bennett, lies stone blind, in the Renfrew Hospital. His physician, Dr. James Mann, considers that the young man's symptoms are growing daily more unfavourable and that he has only a few days to live.

The Sandring family have only pity for him. They knew the young fellow very intimately and they realised that he was deeply in love with the girl who gave him up for Bruce Leitch.

Mrs. Sandring said that there had been no engagement whatever between her daughter and Bennett. Miss Sandring had openly preferred the soldier, though her previous lover had continued to visit her at her home.

Strange Tale Of Shipwreck At Sea

Sailor Ashore Hanged on Spar From Which He Had Thrust Man in Ocean

Andrew Tilloteon, a seaman of the crew of the Norwegian steamship Vilja, which was sunk by a submarine, has just arrived at an American port on board of a steamship from the coast of Africa with a strange story of retribution at sea.

According to Tilloteon's tale, a man who had escaped human tribunals where he was tried for murder, was hanged to the spar from which he knocked a comrade to death in the sea.

"There was a stowaway aboard the Vilja," said Tilloteon to a reporter, "and he had given his name as Jan Swensen. He was a surly sort of fellow, and when Captain Nielsen set him to work after discovering his presence on the vessel, he refused to obey and almost started a riot. Of course he was at last 'persuaded' to obey orders but I always felt that if he ever got a chance he would not hesitate to stick a knife into the captain's back.

"When we were submarined, Swensen and I and half a dozen others, got into the same lifeboat. After we had been drifting around for hours, the boat capsized, and Swensen and I and a third man, whose name I do not know, managed to swim to a large spar, big enough to keep a dozen men afloat by clinging to it. Swensen had grabbed hold of the spar directly across from where the other man was holding on. I don't know whether he had a grudge against that man or whether he really did not think that the spar could hold the three of us, but at any rate he shouted to the poor fellow to let go.

"Naturally the man refused to let go, and I told him to hold on as long as he could. Swensen told me to shut up, and before I could get close enough from my end of the spar Swensen had punched the man a terrific blow right on the throat, knocking him off the spar and probably stunning him, for he sank, and I never saw him again.

"Fearing for my own life—for I thought the fellow must be a madman—I humored him, but decided to denounce him if ever we should be rescued. The spar was probably part of wreckage of another submarined vessel. It had the name 'Hebe, Pireus,' painted on it. A Greek ship, no doubt. As I didn't know exactly what to say to make Swensen believe that I did not take much account of what he had done, I called his attention to the name of the spar. He made some morose reply and the rest of the time we were silent. That lasted nearly all day, but finally we were sighted by a sailing vessel, and taken on board.

"The vessel was bound for Dakar, from which we had set out aboard the Vilja. What had happened to the others of the Vilja I have not yet found out.

"As soon as I felt a little restored I told the captain of the schooner what Swensen had done, and the captain assured me he would turn the man over to the authorities as soon as we arrived at Dakar. And he was turned over and put on trial, but he lied himself out of it, and swore that I must be crazy. And so he was allowed to go free.

"About two weeks after that Swensen got into a dispute over cards with a stranger in a barroom and killed him. This time there were no court proceedings. The murder was so cold blooded that the crowd took the law into its own hands and decided to lynch him. They rushed him to the shore road and out of some wreckage which they found on the strand they erected a gallows.

"When brought face to face with the gallows, Swensen let out a yell that made my blood run cold. No wonder. Near the top part of the upright beam where the words, 'Hebe, Pireus,' It was the spar from which he had pushed the man to death.

"Even Swensen could plainly see the hand of God in this wonderful instrument of punishment, which had come drifting so many hundreds of miles to convict him. He fell upon his knees and confessed the murder he had committed at sea. He begged for mercy then; but the rope was pulled taut around his throat, and he was swung off the ground."

TELLS HOW SWEDEN SUPPLIES THE TEUTONS

They Are Taken as Proof of the Need of Strong Curb on the Neutrals.

WASHINGTON, July 26.— An official report made to the American Government showing the extent to which Sweden is furnishing supplies to Germany reveals that the Central Powers are receiving enormous quantities of materials that go directly into the manufacture of munitions.

In exporting iron ore to Germany it is shown, Sweden has supplanted shipments with imports from the United States.

What this Government will do to end this trade through operation of the Export Control act has not been announced, but some of our aliens, it is known, are urging the United States to license no food exports to Sweden until a definite understanding has been reached with the Swedish Government concerning her exports to Germany.

Iron ore shipments from Sweden to Germany, the report made to this Government declares, have reached a total of 9,000,000 tons in the last two years, all of it of the high grade required in production of fine steel. This, it is declared, represents an amount equal to Sweden's entire pre-war export.

In the first quarter of the present year, it is set forth, Sweden imported from the United States 16,000 tons of pig iron, while selling a great quantity of her own product to Germany. Her pig iron sales to Germany in two years, it is declared, have amounted to 250,000 tons. In addition to this, it is asserted, she has shipped to Germany 15,000 tons of ferro silicon and ferro maganese for hardening shells, together with large quantities of copper, zinc, manganese, sulphur, and other ores.

Germany the report declares, has imported from Sweden in two years fully 200,000 tons of wood pulp for use as a basis for cellulose, used instead of cotton for the manufacture of high explosives. It is asserted Germany also has obtained from Sweden large quantities of ball-bearings for use in the manufacture of war vehicles and submarines. The value of these shipments, the report declares, is at least $75,000,000.

Another charge against Sweden made in the report is that she has discriminated against the Allies in the use of her railroads. Overland trade through Sweden between Norway and Germany has been encouraged, it is declared, while the Allies have been subjected to every inconvenience and exorbitant rail rates. Agricultural machinery destined for Russia, the report declares, has been held up for months, Sweden exacting from Russia extraordinary bargains before delivery was permitted.

Sweden's action in holding within her ports a large amount of merchant tonnage is dealt with in the report, which declares 600,000 tons is lying idle. Her total tonnage is about 1,000,000, dead weight, of which she requires about 400,000 tons for her own export and import trade.

The allies, unable to force Swedish tonnage into the world's trade routes, now look to the United States for help, and, it is said, believe her shipping will be put into service if the United States and Great Britain come to an arrangement as regards bunkering. Coal, under this arrangement, would be refused to ships of every nation refusing to put ships into services the Allies demanded should be kept open by neutral ships.

The Tax Rate In Lindsay May Be 35 Mills

Lindsay, July 25.—It is understood that a meeting of the town council is to be called for the purpose of striking the rate for the year. Although nothing definite has been heard, it is rumoured that the rate will be struck at 35 mills on the dollar, one mill lower than last year.

In order to arrive at this rate it will be absolutely necessary that the council cut down all expenditures for the balance of the year.

HAIL CURED NEURALGIA

New York Man was Trying to Sleep Near a Window in Storm.

Charles Wagner of No. 123 Jefferson street, Union Hill, N.J., was trying to sleep at an open window when the storm began. A hailstone struck him on the forehead, stunning him and causing him to fall from his chair. At the same instant there was a searching flash of lightning, accompanied by a loud report.

Members of Mr. Wagner's family heard him fall and thought he had been struck by lightning. There was great excitement, but before an ambulance or medical aid could be summoned Mr. Wagner regained consciousness and announced he was unhurt.

"Whatever the combination was that hit me," he said, "it certainly put the medical faculty to shame. Before the storm I had been suffering from neuralgia, and a physician had failed to relieve the pain. There must have been some electricity in that hailstone, because when I came to my neuralgia had vanished. Perhaps I was struck by lightning, too."

EXEMPTION BOARD PACKED?

NEW YORK, July 25.—A Washington despatch to the Herald says: "Charges that Governor Whitman injected politics into the selection of the District Exemption Boards, which will be the tribunals to appeal in every Federal judicial district, were laid before President Wilson today. The boards as recommended by Governor Whitman, are top heavy with Repulicans, according to the charges which were made by a group of Democratic county chairmen who came to Washington from various setions of New York State, led by Mr. Keith, Collector of Internal Revenue, of the Brooklyn district.

"Consequently the appointment of the boards has been delayed, although those of almost every other state have been announced. At the White House it was explained that the appointment is entirely in the hands of the War Department.

O'CONNOR APPEALS TO IRISH.

Asks All Members of Race Here to Stand by America in War.

COHASSET, Mass., July 26. — "Since the United States has entered the war, no man can be pro-German and pro-American," said T. P. O'Connor, Irish member of the British Parliament, who is visiting friends here, in a statement to-night.

"He must make his choice," Mr. O'Connor continued, "between loyalty to the double-headed eagle of Germany or to the Stars and Stripes. You know for what things these two stand as symbols. What Irishman can be true to his faith and his traditions who has any doubt as to which flag calls for his allegiance? One little word, finally—which will be better for Irish liberty, a victorious Germany and a defeated America or a defeated Germany and a victorious America?"

Local Bankers Are Interested In Live Stock Competitions

At a Meeting of the Peterborough Clearing House Held Yesterday It Was Decided to Introduce Competition to Boys and Girls of Peterborough County—The Rules.

The members of the Peterborough Clearing House met yesterday in the Bank of Montreal Chambers and formulated arrangements for the introduction in Peterborough County of competitions open to boys and girls for the best exhibits at the fall fairs of calves and pigs.

In this competition, the Canadian Bankers' Association, acting in cooperation with the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Live Stock Branch, offers cash prizes to boys and girls who exhibit calves or pigs at their local fair, and who comply with all the rules governing the competition.

The members of the Association realize the necessity of promoting a greater and more lasting interest in live stock production. It is through the medium of the younger members of the rural communities that the Association members hope to obtain maximum results. Each manager of Peterborough's eight chartered banks is a member of the local committee in charge of the work. Arrangements are being made through the local Clearing House to send every farmer in Peterborough County a personal letter dealing with the subject. This will be done right away, as according to clause eight of the rules governing the competitions, each exhibitor must feed and care for the animals they exhibit for at least six weeks.

THE RULES.

The rules follow:

1. Only boys and girls who have not attained their 17th birthday before the opening day of the show are eligible to compete in the Canadian Bankers' Competition.

2. No entry fee will be charged.

3. No exhibitor shall be allowed to make more than one entry in a class.

4. Not more than one member of a family shall be allowed to compete in a class.

5. An exhibitor who wins a cash prize at one fair shall not be allowed to compete in the same class at another fair.

6. Calves and pigs entered for competition must have been born on or after March 15th, 1917, and must be the property of the exhibitor or the exhibitor's parent or guardian.

7. Grade bull calves, and grade boars, are not eligible to compete, and entries for same must not be accepted.

8. Exhibitors must feed and care for the animals they exhibit for at least six weeks.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS ASKED TO REMAIN ON FARMS FOR HARVEST

Last spring the Organization of Resources Committee of Ontario appealed to the boys in the high schools to assist in national service by devoting some part of their school vacation to farm work. This appeal was based on the increased production movement, and some 5,000 boys responded. In the weeks that have passed they have done well and now that the harvest is upon us, one more effort is required of them. The boys who are now at work on farms are asked to remain until the harvest is over. There is a great shortage of labour and every pair of hands is so much help. The following letters are written by those who believe that the boys of Ontario will maintain the British tradition to "stick" until the job is through.

Prime Minister's Message to the Boys of Ontario who are Working on Farms.

You are now rendering to your country, to the Allies, and to the cause of civilization, the greatest service which you can possibly render. At this time when the production of more food is absolutely essential to the winning of the war, you are helping the Province of Ontario to take the place which it ought to take.

As Prime Minister of Ontario I wish to convey to you the thanks of the people of this Province for the manful part that you are playing. But the need for your services is even greater now than it was in the springtime, when you answered the call to help in food production. Harvest will be upon us in a few days, and the country needs your help to garner the bountiful harvest which you have, in a large measure, made possible. Therefore, I appeal to you to continue your patriotic service until the harvest is over.

W. H. HEARST,
Prime Minister.

To the Boys of Ontario who are Working on Farms.

In Washington the other day, Hoover, of Belgium, now the Food Controller of the United States, asked me to carry a challenge to the boys of Canada.

There are about as many boys in the United States and Canada as in the Central Empires. German boys are required to spend nine months of the year in productive labour in a national effort to win the war for Germany.

Here is the challenge:

"Every Canadian boy by voluntarily producing food for the Allies is matching some German boy."

You have already been rendering faithful service as a food producer in the "Hoeing line behind the firing line," and the nation appreciates fully your unselfish patriotic service. You might have had a pleasanter, easier summer, or made more money elsewhere. By your action, however, you have dignified boy life and ability in the eyes of the people of Canada, and they are looking to you to stay in the game to the finish.

Harvest will be upon us in a few days. All previous farm work has been to make harvest possible. If ever the country needed your help it is now at harvest time, and, although realising to the full the value of the service you have already rendered, I am joining in this appeal, because of my conviction that you are still needed, to ask you to continue your splendid service, at least until after harvest.

Yours for the Empire,
TAYLOR STATTEN.

GRADUATED INCOME TAX

ceeds the amount which would be taken under the income tax, the higher amount only is taken.

By income is meant net income, excepting all contributions to patriotic funds, and incomes for investment in Canadian war bonds. The tax is applicable to all incomes for the present calendar year, and the first returns are to be in before February 28 of next year.

In Force for Duration of War.

Sir Thomas White announced that there was no intention of continuing the business profits tax, which expires at the end of this year. After that the income tax will supersede it. The tax is to be in force for the duration of the war. After that it will be "reviewed" in the light of conditions then existing. The resolution on which the bill will be founded was passed after a comparatively brief discussion.

Find Wealth In Kelp Beds

Fertilizer and Powder Concerns Already Busy on Pacific---Richest Kelp in B. C.

While the kelp beds of the British Columbia, Oregon and California coasts and the cactus and grease brush of the southwestern plains endure, North America need have no fear of a shortage of potash or the invaluable by-products of its manufacture, declares I. S. Hurst, of Los Angeles, who is associated with Dr. R. S. Oppenheim, of that city, in new and original processes for the drying, inginerating and extraction of potash and by-products from kelp, says the Portland.

By-Products to be Saved

Dr. Oppenheim's processes revolutionize the potash industry, declares Mr. Hurst, by eliminating the expensive updraft system hitherto in vogue and saving all of the by-products which have been lost with other methods.

"Until three years ago," said Mr. Hurst, "Germany produced eighty per cent. of the potash of the world. By the use of the potash as a fertiliser, Germany was able to produce 50 bushels of wheat an acre and five hundred bushels of potatoes as an average yield. The average yield of wheat in Great Britain is twenty-five bushels and in the United States it is fourteen bushels.

At pre-war prices kelp off the coast of California and Oregon yielded a net profit, if treated by the Oppenheim process, or $15 a ton. At present prices the profit is a little more than $100 a ton.

Powder Co. Large Consumer.

"The Hercules Powder Company has a force of 2,500 men engaged in extracting potassium muriate by the old, slow and expensive chemical process, using muriate in the manufacture of explosives. Swift and Co. have a large plant drying kelp, which they ship to Georgia to be mixed with other fertilisers and sold to the cotton planters.

"By Government surveys there are thousands of acres of kelp off the coast of Oregon that will yield 32 tons of char to each 200 tons of kelp and should run from 1 to 2 per cent. higher than kelp from the Southern California coast.

Canadian Kelp Richer.

"According to the reports of the Canadian Government the Canadian kelp is three per cent. richer than California kelp. At the present time the production of potash for use in the manufacture of munitions of war is of great importance to the United States, which has established an experimental station near Santa Barbara, Cal.

GROW STEAM HEATED SPUDS

Ground is Kept at Even Temperature---Plants said to thrive despite Snow.

The land which war prisoners have been forced to clear in Germany says the New York Herald, is now being used, according to Swiss advices for growing potatoes and other vegetables all through the winter by a new artificial process. The process consists in running steam pipes at equal distances apart through the soil and heating it to a desired temperature from a central heating plant, so that vegetation thrives despite cold and wintry weather.

Steam from Factories.

It is said that the experiment was watched by many professors and scientific men in Germany, and that they were greatly pleased with the result. The land, comprising in all, about two thousand acres, was ready for cultivation in October of last year, and as it is surrounded by large manufacturing plants each plant was directed by the Government to furnish a certain amount of steam pipes, according to its capacity, and to suppy the steam for those pipes from their boilers. The temperature of the ground was taken at regular intervals daily, so that any rise or fall in the temperature could be remedied at once.

Take Temperature Daily.

It is asserted that the potatoes thrive remarkably well, for no matter how cold the weather the ground was always kept at an even temperature, and the fall of snow instead of retarding the growth, assisted it, for it would so on melt and irrigate the ground. Potatoes in large quantities for the Berlin market were thus obtained throughout the winter, according to the story.

First tried in 1915.

The experiment was first tried on a small scale by a Prussian farmer in the winter of 1915 and 1916, it is said, and he notified the Government of his success. The matter has aroused so much interest that the Government is taking steps to induce farmers all over the Empire to try the experiment next winter, the account declares.

MAY BE A MERGER OF FRIENDLY SOCIETIES

TORONTO, July 26.—A movement is being made to form a general merger of the various fraternal and benevolent societies of the Province, to issue new certificates to members at a definite value, and then, thus combined, to approach the Government and ask for control over the new organization, similar to the control exercised by the Board of Workmen's Compensation.

A meeting was held in this city of representatives of a number of fraternal and benevolent societies in view of the discoveries made recently as the result of an investigation by special actuaries employed by several of the societies concerned.

In every case the result of the investigation has been to find that the state of the societies disclosed a very large deficiency on mortuary funds, sick benefit funds, and other branches. A serious feature of the situation is that, largely owing to war conditions, the societies are not receiving new members to any extent, and lapses are abnormally high.

The actuaries in each case recommend a substantial increase on dues for mortuary funds. It is found that in many cases members of many years' standing are unable to meet the increased dues and have to quit.

It is believed by the representatives of the societies who have studied the matter that the only solution is to effect an amalgamation of all the societies, procure actuarial reports putting a definite value on the certificates of all the members at the date of the amalgamation, and then make united application to the Government for control. It is suggested that in this way a new department will be set up similar to the Workmen's Compensation Board.

It was arranged at the meeting that another meeting should be convened about the end of September to draw up a report to be presented to all camps and lodges in the district for their consideration. It is felt that Government control will be an inducement for the various societies to enter the merger.

Father Wins Suit And Secures Child

Important Judgment Given in Copyright Case by Chief Justice.

Mr. Justice Sutherland at Osgoode Hall yesterday awarded Reuben Tuttle, of Campbellford, Ont., the custody of his pretty nine-year-old daughter, but before the girl can be removed from the custody of her mother Mr. Tuttle must satisfy the court that he has a suitable home to take her to. The story as told his Lordship revealed an unfortunate disagreement between husband and wife. The couple were married in British Columbia, but circumstances compelled the home to be removed to Campbellford, where Mr. Tuttle is doing his best to live on a smaller salary than he previously earned. Mrs. Tuttle, according to G. N. Shaver, for the husband found life in the Ontario town too slow and took her child with her to Toronto, and declined to go back to live with her husband, whom she desired to give up his job at $15 per week to try and better himself in Toronto. This Mr. Tuttle could not agree to.

Mr. Justice Ferguson, who had previously made the comment that the wife wanted to reach out and live a wider life in Toronto in delivering judgment did not discount the view that the woman might be more capable and more ambitious than the man, but when people joined hands at the altar his Lordship said they must make up their minds to put with each other's idiosyncrasies. Whether the woman's working out was voluntary or involuntary was disputed. Hundreds of women in Toronto went out to work to assist in the family income. His Lordship could not ignore the fact that the husband was a good, steady, industrious man who had a home which the wife left ostensibly to pay a visit and then wrote back that she did not propose to go back and bury herself in a little place like Campbellford. If a woman broke up a home like tha she could make no claim in future upon her husband and could make no claim for the custody of the child.

Some Licensed Bars Profit From The Heat Even On Sunday

Last Sunday's parching heat drove crowds into the bars of some of the licensed hotels for two per cent. beer, ginger beer and other harmless "fizzes" that are parading in the place of the old aristocrats of the brew, the stuff that put Pilsen in Milwaukee on the international maps. In these broiling days, those who have always been considerate of their thirst, have turned their patronage to former days and drinks and the sufficiently quenching cereal or the more delectable juice of the grape clinking its a long time ago. The beers of the pre-prohibition days now loom up in memory like a procession of departed spirits crossing the bar. Tall beers with their high fussy Elizabethan collars, sparkling and effervescing, looking for long thirsts to chase around the corner. But the end of the line, passed by on September 16th last to be followed by hatless, insipid two per cent. Under the new regulations the licensed bars may remain open at all hours, and the Sunday sales on a hot day is seemingly a feature the Lord's Day Alliance has overlooked or at least condoned. Some may regard it as rather strange that this oversight continues, and that persons are permitted to drink the diluted beer when the city provides iced water at two fountains down town.

BANK CLEARINGS

The bank clearings this week still continue to show an increase in business in Peterborough, and are almost twice the amount of the same week two years ago.

Same week last month, $584,089.
Same week last year $484,899.
Same week two years ago, $339,313.

8,286 MEN UNDER CARE OF M. H. C.

OTTAWA, July 26.—The Military Hospitals Commission on July 15th, had under its care 8,286 men, as against 7,578 a week earlier. Of the total, 6,850 are convalescents, 1,087 are undergoing treatment for tuberculosis at sanatoria, and 309 are in other institutions, chiefly general hospitals. The increase in Canada is nearly matched by a decrease of 700 in the Old Country.

Magistrate Dumble Ordered Five Labourers To Get Busy

Five foreign labourers, an Austrian and four Russians, who arrived from Trenton, last night, to work for the Leonard Construction Company, decided when they arrived here to take a holiday by the passive resistance method. They appeared in police court this morning charged under the vagrancy law with being able to work and refusing to do so. They were Capora Popura, A. Palahnyouch, Charley Stanweis and Pete Hureco, Russians, and Steve Hotylak, an Austrian. Apparently if any racial bitterness existed between the quartette and the lone representative of the Hapsburg people, they were forgotten in their common disinclination to work.

Magistrate Dumble endeavoured to make it clear to them that they had to go to work in spite of the heat, and gave them until noon to get busy otherwise they would go to jail, where it is cool and the boss is lenient and there is really nothing to do until to-morrow. Each of the labourers owed somebody $9.05 for his fare, plus supper and breakfast, and the labour agent's fee. Evidently they commence operations with a financial deficit which made it all the more necessary that they should produce.

WAR JOBS FOR OLD MEN.

Pennsylvania Railroad Annuls Rule Against Hiring Those Over 45.

The Pennsylvania Railroad announced yesterday that its rule prohibiting the hiring of new employes more than forty-five years old had been suspended and that persons as old as seventy would be accepted if competent.

"In view of the fact that the younger men of the country will shortly be called into military service," the statement says, "the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad has decided to suspend, temporarily, the regulation covering the age limit for employment. The rule heretofore in force prohibited the hiring of new employees, in any branch of the service above the age of forty-five years. Under the new rule, which has been adopted to meet war conditions, persons between the ages of forty-five and seventy years may be employed during the war and for a period of six months thereafter. Inasmuch as such employment is not to be considered permanent, it will not carry with it the privileges of the Pension Department."

At a recent conference with the district representative regarding the result of the use of tractors this year, Deputy Minister C. F. Hafley reported that those in commission this year had proved entirely satisfactory.

It is the intention, commencing right away, to place 60 tractors to do continuous ploughing until the cold weather sets in and no more can be done, so that the acreage to be sown next year will be far greater than what could be sown this year.

King Edward Park In Splendid Form

King Edward park has become one of the coolest and prettiest spots in the south end. During the past week its crop of hay has been harvested and the closely cut lawns present a very pleasing appearance. Under the trees benches, painted a dark red have been placed about the park, the grandstand has finally been fitted with lights and chairs and the general effect is one of which Ald. Saunders, as chairman of the Property Committee may be proud. Having provided the park, the city's next step is to acquaint the people that it was provided for their comfort. It is supposed that most people find some pleasure in public places, or are the south end homes sufficiently comfortable in themselves. At any rate the King Edward space is fast becoming one of the finest parks in the city, and some day will repay in its beauties and service, the hopes of the men who urged the city to buy it.

HELD PRISONER BY HIS FIANCEE

American Eccentric Millionaire Was Duped By Model and His Chauffeur

For seven months, shackled by a dog collar and heavy chain in the barn of the French estate which he had rented at the request of a pretty Paris mannequin whom he intended to make his wife, kicked, beaten and starved into signing cheques for large amounts by this woman and his chauffeur, Samuel Slater, eccentric American millionaire, paid the price of his infatuation for the model. He was freed only when the rustic who had guarded him during that time, under the impression that he was a maniac, talked of his charge in the village while under the influence of liquor. In telling his story, however, the peasant embellished it with the statement that his prisoner was a German spy, and this aroused the interest of the superintendent of police, who searched the chateau and liberated the American.

Samuel Slater's life for many years had been one of almost fictional romance, and this was the third time in twenty years that he had been duped by a woman. More than two decades ago, while walking through the great woollen mills of his brother at Webster, Mass., he noticed among the 1,200 girls employed there one who seemed to him to be above her surroundings. He took her away, educated her, and later they were married. Soon, however, the mill girl bride had her husband adjudged insane and committed to an asylum from which he escaped and sought haven in Europe. On the steamer which carried him across he met a woman whom he married soon after their arrival in London. They went from England to Monte Carlo, and there he separated from the second Mrs. Slater after her flirtation with a young British officer.

Just before the war in Europe started, Slater, while on a fleeting trip to America, employed Andre Biscaye, a Swiss, as his chauffeur. The influence of the Swiss over his eccentric employer soon became apparent and rapidly grew until soon Slater was subordinate to his servant in his own household.

One day, shortly after war was declared, Slater, strolling alone through the Rue de la Paix, noticed a beautiful diamond lavalliere in the window of a jeweler. He stepped inside to price it, remarking to the jeweler that he didn't intend to buy it, but, if it had been shown him to a pretty shop girl, he might have bought it and given it to her.

MANNEQUIN BECOMES A HOUSE KEEPER.

"Come back to-morrow, and the prettiest girl in Paris will wait on you," responded the jeweler.

The next day Slater returned and met Aimee Roosmale-Nepveu, who told him she was of Dutch birth, but that her father had committed suicide following the failure of his tulip crop the year before and that her mother had died from the shock. She had come to Paris to earn her living as a model, she said.

An engagement for dinner was made, and the following night, when the model lifted the serviette from her plate she found beneath it the 20,000 franc lavalliere. After she had thanked him, Slater who had been coached by Biscaye the night after his first meeting with the girl, asked her to become his housekeeper. She accepted and soon came to live in the home of the millionaire.

When the pinch of war began to be felt in Paris, Biscaye suggested a motor trip through Southern France Slater acquiesced, and the mannequin housekeeper was delighted. On one thing the American insisted, and that was that his photograph, which had been his constant and only companion during the days of his life in Paris, should be taken with them.

In the heart of the mountainous Auvergne region, near Clermont-Ferrand, Biscaye announced the discovery of a magnificent, beautifully furnished chateau, which might be rented for only 14,000 francs a year. Aimee rapturously begged Slater to make her mistress of the place, and the millionaire rented it.

This was the beginning of his adventures, which rival tales of horror in medieval dungeons. Following a dinner for the trio, during which Slater drank too much wine, he awoke in the dingy cowbarn, a heavy dog collar clamped about his neck, and fastened by a heavy chain to a post in one of the stalls. Beside him were his photograph and records, a dozen bottles of win and one of whisky. A young man, Raymond Barreau, sat near by on guard. Biscaye had told Barreau, whom he had hired in the village, that Slater was a maniac, and the wild cries of the American for freedom merely strengthened this belief. The millionaire started his photograph and devoted the remainder of the day to the wine and whisky, which had been left him by his captors.

The next day Aimee and the chauffeur appeared with demand for 10,000 francs. Slater at first refused but, after being knocked down and kicked by the pair, he finally signed a cheque for the amount. His jailers soon learned the advisability of doubling his whisky allowance the day before they made demands for money and they fed him regularly.

Six months elapsed and then Biscaye and Aimee went in the Slater limousine and spent a ten days' honeymoon. This proved to be their undoing for, while they were away, Barreau began to fraternize with his captive and to drink his whisky. He went to the village one night following one of their orgies, and gave wild accounts of his prisoner, whom he described as a spy, to his cronies. Soon the whole town was gossiping of the mysterious captive.

At the great gate of the courtyard of the chateau, as they returned from their honeymoon, M. and Mme. Biscaye met the superintendent of police and two gendarmes from Saint-Remy-en-Rollat, who demanded the right to search the premises. Biscaye's bride became pale, but the Swiss retained his composure and acquiesced. The search was made of the chateau and the police convinced the report they had heard in the village was merely gossip, were preparing to leave, when the strains of "You Made Me Love You," floated across the courtyard from the direction of the stable. Mme. Biscaye collapsed as the police ordered her husband to lead the way to the barn.

The commissaire saw Biscaye take a packet from his pocket and toss it into the grass as they crossed the courtyard. He picked it up and found it to be a vial of deadly poison.

Slater was sitting on the edge of his dirty cot, ragged, unkempt and unshaven, as the officers entered.

"Yes, it was pretty bad being tied up a prisoner like that," he said, in commenting on his case afterward. "And the worst of it was that Barreau, my guard, broke most of my records monkeying with the phonograph. Do you know, for the last three months I had only five different records left!"

The authorities discovered the millionaire had spent $160,000 on the mannequin, whose bank account shows a credit of $100,000. Slater is prosecuting the pair in the French courts.

SOLVING PROBLEMS OF TRENCH FEET

Several Measures Urged—Among Them Are Massage, the Application of Salt Lard, and Proper Rationing.

One of the most distressing physical conditions that soldiers have had to endure in the war is "trench foot." Concerning its causes and treatment American Medicine says:

"In their article on this subject Walker and Rideal (Journal of the Royal Army Medical Corps) state that 'trench foot' may provisionally be defined as a condition due to prolonged action of water on the skin combined with circulatory disturbance due to cold and inaction.

"Water is an abnormal environment for the skin. Theoretically, there are three actions of the water: (1) Loss of heat due to increase of conductivity and thermal capacity of the surrounding medium; (2) effusion of salts from the skin; (3) infusion of water into the skin. A normal skin can, of course resist these actions, but when the exposure is prolonged and the circulation is diminished the osmotic action may become important. This is proved by experience and by experiments.

"Fishermen and otter hunters find that after several hours' contact with cold water there may be some pain tenderness, and even swelling of the feet, lasting perhaps a day or two. Workers in paper manufactories, who have to stand for a day at a time in several inches of warm water and paper pulp, have similar symptoms. These are not entirely due to circulatory disturbance.

"'Trench foot' is said to occur in cases in which water has been excluded. Experiments were made with various kinds of grease in order to find one which would be impermeable to sweat, and would thus prevent the accumulation of water in the sock.

"For each ointment tested a control experiment was previously made on the naked hand. The average amount of sweat was three grames per hour with ointment.

"It is suggested that a salted ointment such as salted lard would be beneficial in protecting the foot against water. The salt would further act as an antiseptic. A liberal amount of ointment would be necessary —e. g., 100 grams for each leg, with five or ten per cent. salt.

"All other practical precautions should have been taken, such as foot inspection, so as to insure the men using the ointment provision of dry socks with the waterproof trench boots, loosening of the puttees, etc.

"Officers' spiral puttees contract five to six per cent. of their length when they are soaked in water.

"Hughes in his article on the same subject (British Medical Journal) gives the following suggestions:

"1. Keep the feet raised whenever possible so as to prevent stagnation, especially after a period of standing while on sentry-go or in listening sap.

"2. Keep the soldier fit by getting the full caloric equivalent out of his rations, thus keeping the blood-pressure up and warding off fatigue.

"If congestion has occured he has always detained the men at the regimental aid post for twenty-four to thirty-six hours. If a regimental aid post has not existed in the part of the line to be held he has immediately made one, and has always been supplied with a fatigue by the commanding officer to erect it in minimum time. This dugout will usually accommodate six to eight men, and timely massage with rest have rendered the men fit to go back to trenches in thirty-six hours. They report each day for three days for further massage, and at the end of this time, with instructions as to the keeping up of their legs whenever possible, the writer had no further trouble.

"By this means many men were kept in the firing line who would otherwise have been temporarily lost to the unit, and this is a point the importance of which need not be emphasized."

Slight Retirement

Special to The Examiner:

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, July 26. — The retirement of the British forces on a small front east of Monchy was forced" out of a class of thirty. Principal the Tommies' trenches in German shell fire and an attack by about four hundred of the enemy, armed with flame throwers. This was the only spot on the British front where there was infantry activity, except in raids. The artillery fire, however, was exceedingly intense in many sectors.

To-day it appeared that the coast sector was likely to rival Lens as the storm centre for the German shells. Nieuport, in this section, was bombarded from 1 o'clock last night to five o'clock this morning. Projectiles of all calibres up to 9.2 shells were hurled by the enemy guns. The shower was in continuation of several previous nights' bombardments.

2,000,000 Men On Firing Line Before Prussians Are Crushed Is The War Department's Aim

Lack of Transportation Facilities is the Only Drawback Now —Officials Believe United States Will Be the Deciding Factor in the Victory.

PREPARE FOR THREE MORE YEARS OF CONFLICT

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 27.—One hundred thousand American soldiers will be in France by January 1, 1918, and more than six hundred thousand will be there by next summer. That revelation of the programme of the War Department came from a high official source. More men would be sent, except for the lack of transportation facilities.

The programme is the best the General Staff thinks it can accomplish the first year. If transportation conditions improve more than a million Americans will be fighting the Prussians by next summer.

The next troops to go to France will be the National Guard units, which are now being mustered into the federal service all over the country and sent to concentration camps. They will be moved across the Atlantic as rapidly as possible. Between forty and fifty thousand National Guard troops will be in France by the middle of the winter to augment the American army already there, according to present arrangements, and by spring approximately four hundred thousand militiamen will be behind the French front in training for the big allied push of next summer.

PREPARE FOR LONG WAR.

The War Department is making its preparations for a long war, in which the United States probably will be the deciding factor.

The least the General Staff is permitting itself to consider is peace three years hence, and even that is not limiting preparations.

The government is making its preparations on a grand scale. No army officer who is acquainted with the real situation expects the war to end until the United States has sent at least one million men to the firing line, and perhaps two million may be needed.

They all agree that the tide has turned against Germany, but they know that the wearing down process will take a long time, many men and practically unlimited supplies of all kinds. The United States, they say, must finish what the French and British have so ably begun. It must furnish the final overwhelming force that will cause the Prussian giant to topple and fall.

To that end the War Department is preparing to call out the second army of 500,000 men as soon as the first draft army is trained.

ONE MILLION READY FOR THIS YEAR.

Long before next January more than one million American troops will be ready to send to France. Only the lack of transportation will delay their going. Within three weeks a total of 548,000 militiamen will be encamped in the Southern States. Nearly 300,000 regulars are already in camp. The first national army of 500,000 will be in camp by October.

These organizations are in addition to the American regulars and marines already in France under command of Major General Pershing. The exact size of his force has not been disclosed, but it is known to be much larger than the public realizes.

Treaty changes with America's Allies to make their subjects in this country elegible to the draft were considered Wednesday by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Senator Stone and Senator McCumber were named to confer with President Wilson on the resolution proposing treaty negotiations. Committee sentiment was said to favour subjecting all aliens to the draft, except enemy subjects and neutrals.

Senator Stone was advised that the subject had been considered favourably at a Cabinet meeting. All the Allies except Russia were said to have indicated their assent.

Representative Tague, of Massachusetts, introduced a resolution to empower the President to make treaties or other arrangements with foreign governments to define the military status of foreigners here.

The Late William Brown Carried Two Cups Of Explosive Instead Of One

Inquest Concerning Death of Man Who Was Killed By An Explosion at the Lindsay Arsenal

LINDSAY, July 27.—The adjourned inquest held to enquire into the cause of the death of the late William Brown, was resumed before Coroner Dr. F. Blanchard. Mr. T. H. Stinson, representing the crown, called upon Colonel Weatherbie, who in answer to the coroner's questions, stated on oath that he was in command of the arsenal plant, and knew the deceased Wm. Brown. The Colonel produced a plan of the building and a sample of the carrying cup which was used as a container for the carrying to and fro of the explosive. The witness stated that strict orders were given the employees to only carry one cup at a time, so as to leave one hand free. The summing up of the Colonel's evidence would be to the effect that the deceased presumably in carrying the explosive to the receptacle in which he was supposed to deposit it, did not abide by the order, but passed it to hand it to Stinson. In giving it to the latter he may have let it fall, causing the explosion. The deceased had been engagde on the work for four or five days, but had been working around the plant about six weeks.

Mr. H. McKeown.

Mr. H. McKeown, foreman of the filling plant, was the next witness and said at 5.45 p.m. Wm. Brown took the cup containing the explosive from the receptacle in his left hand, and instead of placing it in the proper receptacle handed it to Stinson, who probably took the cup by the lid, permitting the bottom to drop to the floor. He saw Brown lying on the floor, but was immediately taken to the door, where he died in a few minutes after. A doctor was summoned and everything possible done for the victim of the fatality. Stinson was given first aid and did not lose consciousness. He said Brown's instructions were to carry one cup at a time. The men are fully instructed as to their duties, and that it is a high explosive they are handling, but they frequently get too familiar with the work and grow careless.

Lewis McKeown.

Lewis McKeown on being sworn said he was foreman of the mixing department and had Gordon Stinson working for him. He spoke well of his efficiency in the department, and told of his duties, which were to mix the component and carry it from one point to a given one.

Mr. Dan. Curtin.

Mr. Dan Curtin also gave testimony as to what he saw and heard on that day when the explosion took place.

Miss E. Grozelle.

Miss Effie Groselle saw Brown a few minutes before the explosion, but did not see him carrying the cups or see the accident.

Coroner Blanchard said that he would adjourn the inquest until Friday, August 3rd inst., at 8 p.m., when the testimony of Black, Herring and Stinson will be taken.

CASH WHEAT PRICES FIRMER

Flour Situation is Steady—The Cattle Market

Cash wheat prices were firmer yesterday on the basis of an advance of 3c. on spot prices at Winnipeg. Toronto Board of Trade quotations, in store Fort William, are nominally 2 1-2c. higher than Wednesday. The October option at Winnipeg closed 3 3-4c. above Wednesday's close. July wheat at Chicago closed 5 1-2c. above Wednesday. Corn, steady. Oats strong, and 3-4c. to 1 1-2c. higher. Flour situation, steady and unchanged.

American corn—Nominal; not quoted.

Ontario oats—No. 2 white, not quoted.

Ontario wheat— No. 2 winter, per case lots, $2.55; No. 2 winter, $2.52, according to freight outside.

Peas—No. 2, nominal.

Buckwheat—Nominal.

Rye—No. 2, nominal.

Manitoba flour— First patents, in jute bags, $12.90; second patents, $12.40; strong bakers, $12.

Ontario flour—Winter, according to sample, $10.75 to $10.85 track, Toronto, prompt shipments.

Mill feed—Car lots, delivered, Montreal, shorts, $40 to $41; bran, $35; feed flour, per bag, $3.25; middlings, $44 to $45.

Hay—Baled, track, Toronto, car lots, No. 2, $11.50 to $12; mixed, $9 to $11; straw, $9.

Cattle Market.

Union Stock Yards— Receipts 12 cars, with 52 cattle, 28 calves, 450 hogs, and 43 sheep and lambs.

The cattle market is still suffering from heat prostration. Trade was very dull yesterday, scarcely any demand for the few cattle offering. It was a very slow and draggy clean-up, with holders in most cases forced to make concessions. Wholesale butchers say there is very little demand for meat during the hot spell. The packers, therefore, are not loading themselves with supplies that for the present are not in demand. The run of fresh cattle in to-day was extremely light and this helped to clean out the staler stuff at about yesterday's prices, averaging about a dollar below last week for the same class of cattle.

Calf trade was slow.

Sheep and lambs weak.

Hogs are firmer with this week's light runs, and prices to-day were up again to the $16 mark for fed and watered hogs.

Most Peaceful Warfare Is Carried On In Carnia Alps

Miss Boultbee Felt Absolute Security After Trips to Carso Front—Mountainous Positions Are Well Defended —Charming Little Chalets Are Concealed Among the Pines.

SAW GREAT OFFENSIVE

(By Rosamond Boultbee.)

UDINE, Italy—My last trip to the Italian front was into the mountains, up into the Carnia range, northwest of the Carso and Isonzo fighting. We passed beautiful country, quiet rivers, pretty mountain villages, and saw but few signs of war. Long routes were gone over without passing another vehicle. It seemed more of a pleasure drive than one to see the struggle of nations.

Little torrents fell over the precipitous mountain sides. In some parts the rivers reminded one of a mild Niagara, where the rapids toss and play with each other, throwing over their sparkling white foam. As we passed through villages one saw how unused the people are to the racket of war. Women and children stroll up the centre of the roads, never thinking that urgent motors might be passing that way.

In one little village hanging on the side of a mountain we passed along the main road running beside the river a little child was keeping us anxious —just in front of us. Two women—one but a girl—were walking at the side of the road. A butterfly fluttered across the scene. The girl with a very pretty gesture threw out her hand to catch it; the child held up its fat arms in delight, and we inside the motor were thrown forward off the seat with a sudden and just-in-time halt of our chauffeur. The girl laughed, and the child gazed at us with unconcern. Life and its hurry doesn't pass that way.

MUST BE WELL DEFENDED.

Occasionally we passed carts of provender, and some filled with soldiers' boots and clothing. At bridges soldiers were always standing with fixed bayonets. But this is so usual everywhere in Europe nowadays, at railway stations and crossing, in front of any important building, that one has got used to seeing those murderous-looking spikes and knows that one must behave. Occasionally we heard the roar of cannon in action, sometimes we heard a mine going off where they were blasting the roads. But after my trips to the Carso I felt in absolute security.

Yet perhaps I was wrong. The Carnia Alps have to be well defended, and over the steep mountains often a shell will come. Enemy aeroplanes are continually overhead searching out the well-hidden Italian artillery positions.

We got out of the motor at the entrance to a mountain gorge and walked up a little distance to the temporary housing of amounain section. There were the most charming little chalets sheltered among pine trees. The officers' rooms left nothing to wish for, paper on the walls, linen on the beds. Several small shops had their signs in three languages. One had "Hairdresser," 'Coiffeur," "Barbiere." We had an early lunch with some officers. There was even a centrepiece on the table, with a cannon design embroidered on it.

Out side what interested one most was not the enormous cannon, with their noses all covered up with leaves, but the mountain pulleys, working all the time taking materials, munitions, and food to positions higher up. And even when necessary the wounded are brought down on these little railways in the air. We reluctantly said good-bye to this peaceful warfare —if war can be so—and from the cool air of the mountains and the scent of pine trees. We descended again to the plains. A group of women carrying scythes over their shoulders passed us. Everywhere they are doing men's work.

HAVE SEEN GREAT OFFENSIVE.

And now I am leaving the front and am satisfied. I have seen a great offensive, I have been in battle, and I have seen our allies secure in their positions, with the knowledge that surely that which is theirs by right, will again and soon be a part of the greater Italy. And I have some new friends to say "Au revoir" to; people who have been friends, indeed.

During the last nearly three years of war, I have often thought I would like to write about the profession of scribblers to which I now belong. Of one's own importance, one has no opinion, until one meets other journalists. Then, from their anxiety to know what you are up to, of where you are going, and why? one sees, that no matter how insignificant—one is worth competing against. Every journalist is a "good fellow" to everybody, but other journalists; then he is a person to ge got the better of. In all the countries I have been in, I have tried because of this, to avoid my confreres —except socially. But in a seething group of English, French, and Italian war correspondence, I found myself at Italian headquarters.

"She has only come to spy on us," said one. "She can't write for nuts," said another. I wanted to run away. Whether intentionally or not, I do not know but all the trouble was eliminated for me. The head of the Press —the colonel—arranged for my trip while here. He sent me out always with the commandant—the second in command. And the censor, who read all that I have written to you; told me I couldn't write, but it was nice to have me around!

However, all I can say is, that I have been very well treated, perhaps because I was the only Canadian, perhaps because my three friends saw to it that I didn't have too much to do with the other correspondents. Anyway, I have just one final word to say — and that is: "Thank you," my Colonel—my Commandant, and my Censor.

Lindsay Engineer Stricken With Heat

On Wednesday Mr. Harry Reeves, the well-known G.T.R. engineer, was stricken with the heat at Campbellcroft, near Garden Hill, and as a result, his left arm and leg are paralyzed.

Mr. Reeves was engineer on the engine attached to the work train, with Mr. P. Murphy as fireman. It had just pulled out of the gravel pit at Campbellcroft, for Port Hope, when Mr. Reeves was overcome. Everything possible was done for him, and it was decided to take the engine and caboose off the hauling train and bring him to Lindsay.

The special reached Lindsay shortly after ten o'clock last night, and Mr. Reeves was at once taken to his home on Henry Street.

Dr. Wood is attending Mr. Reeves, and the Post was informed that the prospects were most favourable for a complete recovery.

Mr. Reeves is one of the most popular of the G.T.R. employees and regret is expressed on all sides at his sudden illness.

The total number of recruits reported in Canada for the British expeditionary force under the same auspices was 6,795.

Sir Edward Kemp stated that as yet no commanding officer of any Canadian expeditionary force unit had been authorized to recruit in the United States solely for his own unit, although under an order-in-council passed on June 8 the Minister of Militia was empowered to detail selected officers, non-commissioned officers and men to act in co-operation with the British recruiting mission in the United States.

The minister of militia said that during June the total number of recruits in Canada was 6,347, while casualties of all kinds in the Canadian expeditionary force totalled 4,351.

Careless Shampooing Spoils The Hair

If you want to keep your hair looking its best, be careful what you wash it with. Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Bread crumbs can be used as a substitute for flour in making cakes, cookies, muffins, etc.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

By this time Winter, sweeping Peters aside, was within ten feet of the maniac, who turned and ran into the shop. The door, a solid one, fitted with a spring lock, slammed in the Chief Inspector's face, and resisted a mighty effort to burst it open. A few yards away stood an empty, two-wheeled cart, uptilted, and Winter demanded the help of a few men who had gathered on seeing or hearing the hubbub.

"I call on you in the King's name," he demanded. "We must force that door! Then stand clear all of you!"

He raced to the cart, and, when his object was perceived willing hands assisted in converting the heavy vehicle into a battering ram. The gradient of the hill favored the attack, which was made at an acute angle, and the first assault smashed the lock. There was a couple of seconds' delay while the cart was backed out, and the detectives rushed in. Furneaux leading, because Winter gave his great physical strength to the shafts. But the Chief Inspector grabbed his tiny friend by the collar as the latter darted around the counter and into the dispensary in the rear.

"Two of us can't go abreast, and you'll only get hurt," he said, speaking with a calmness that was majestic in the circumstances.

"The nicotine is gone!" yelped Furneaux; both saw that the safe stood open.

Behind the dispensary was a small passage, where the stairs mounted, and a door led to the kithen. That door was closed now, though it was open when Furneaux ransacked the house. Therefore they made that way at once. No ordinary lock could resist Winter's shoulder, and he very soon mastered this barrier. But the kitchen was empty—the outer door locked but unbolted. Since it was practically impossible for the strongest man to pull a door open, the two made for the window, and tore at screws and catch with eager fingers. Furneaux, light and nimble-footed, scrambled through the first, so it was he that found Siddle lying in the orchard beyond the wall of the yard. The unhappy wretch had swallowed nearly the whole remaining contents of the bottle of nicotine, or enough to poison a score of robust men. He presented a lamentable and distressing spectacle. Some of the more venturesome passers-by who had crowded after the detectives, and Peters, could not bear to look on, and slunk away in horror.

Furneaux soon brought an emetic, which failed to act. Siddle breathed his last while the glass was at his lips.

In that moment of crisis only three men did not lose their heads. Winter cleared away the gapers, while Furneaux remained with the body. P. C. Robinson came up the hill at a run and was sent for a stretcher, bringing from Hobb's shop the very one on which the ill-fated Adelaide Melhuish was carried from the river bank.

But where was Peters? In the post office, writing the first of a series of thrilling despatches to a London evening newspaper. What journalist ever had a more sensational murder case to supply "copy"? And when was "special correspondent" ever better primed for the task? He wrote on and on, till the telegraphist cried halt. Then he hied him to London by train, and began the more ambitious "story" for the next morning. What he did not know he guessed correctly. A fagged but triumphant man was Jimmie Peters when he "blew in" to the Savage Club at 1 a.m., to seek sustenance and a whiskey and soda before going home.

Furneaux was white and shaken when Winter escorted the stretcher-bears to the orchard.

"Poor devil!" he said, as the men lifted the body. "Foredoomed from birth! We can eradicate these diseases from cattle, why not from men?"

The villagers could not understand him. Already in some mysterious way, the word had gone around that Siddle had murdered the actress, and taken his own life to avoid arrest, after shooting at the detective, who was hot on his trail.

Not until Peters's articles came back to Steynholme did the public at large realise that the chemist undoubtedly meant to kill Doris Martin. He was going straight to the post office when the way was barred by Furneaux. The bullet which missed the latter actually pierced the zinc plate of the letter box, and scored a furrow, inches long, in an oak counter which it struck laterally.

The village did not recover its poise for hours. Grant and Hart, to whom Bates brought the news about one o'clock, rose from an untasted luncheon and hurried to the high-street. Knots of people stared at Grant, some sheepishly, others with frank relief, because all who knew him liked him. One man, a retired iron-monger and an impulsive fellow, came forward and wrung his hand heartily. A few prominent residents followed suit. Grant was very much embarrassed, but managed to endure these awkward if well-meant congratulations. There could be no mistaking their intent. He had been tried for murder at the bar of public opinion and was now formally acquitted.

Even Fred Elkin, ignorant as yet of his own peril, yielded to the influences of the moment and bustled through the crowd.

"Mr. Grant," he cried outspokenly, "I ask your pardon. I seem to have made a d—— fool of myself!"

"Easier done than said," chimed in Hart. "But among all this bell-ringing can anyone tell what has actually happened? Where's Peters?"

"In the post office."

The two went in and found the journalist scribbling against time. Hart coolly grabbed a few slips of the manuscript and commenced reading. Grant looked about for Doris. She was not visible but Mr. Martin, pale and nervous nodded towards the sitting room. The younger man, taking the gesture as a tacit invitation, entered the room.

Doris was sitting there, crying bitterly. Poor girl! She had seen that portion of the drama which was enacted in the street, and the shock of it was still poignant. She looked up and met her lover's eyes. Neither uttered a word, but Grant did a very wise thing. He caught her by the shoulders, raised her to her feet, and after kissing her squarely on the lips, gave her a comforting hug.

"It will be all right, now, Doris," he whispered tenderly. "Such thunderstorms clear the air."

An eminent novelist might have found many more ornate ways of avowing his sentiments, but never a more satisfactory one. At any rate it served, so what more need be said?

Certain rills of evidence accumulated into a fair sized stream before the night fell. P. C. Robinson, for instance, scored a point by ascertaining that Peggy Smith had seen Furneaux dropping from the bedroom window of the chemist's shop. She was some hundred of yards away and could not be positive that some man, perhaps a glazier, had not been there, legitimately effecting repairs. Still, when she met Siddle hurrying from the station, she told him of the incident.

Living Icicles.

A problem of the zoologist is the endurance of freezing by many animals. Collecting the records, Mlle. France and Paul Portier, entomologists, of Paris find that fish have survived 5 degrees F., frogs 8 degrees below, mollusks 184 degrees below and bacteria have come out alive after exposure to 300 degrees below zero. The two French experimenters froze certain caterpillars—Cossus cossus—at a temperature just above zero. They became quite solid and brittle and could be broken like icicles. On warming, however, even broken ones returned to life. Several freezings and thawings were endured, but recovery became slower each time and ceased after the sixth thawing. Other genera showed like results. There seemed to be some physiological preparation for the cold, for caterpillars that survived the winter freezing all succumbed to similar temperatures in the spring.

Imagination.

The gift of imagination appears to be the peculiar privilege of man. The architecture of the beaver is clever and ingenious, but the work of one beaver differs only from that of his fellow in the shape and nature of the wood at their respective command. The cells of a honeycomb, beautiful and mathematically correct as they are, differ in no particular from those in every other bee's construction. Every village boy knows that one thrush's nest is repeated character for character in that of another. With you it is different; each one of you can put something of himself into his work, and unless he does so he becomes a mere copyist, an echo and not a sound, a purveyor of "white robed innocence" and "flower bespangled meads."—Samuel Johnson.

How War Comes.

The precedents of history show that the great majority of the world's conflicts have been begun before formal declarations of war were made. According to authorities on international law, a condition of war arises in three ways:

First.—Declaration of war.

Second.—A proclamation or manifesto declaring that a state of war exists.

Third.—Through the commission of hostile acts of force.

One authority on international law, describing ways in which hostilities may begin without formal declaration, says, "Acts of force by way of reprisals or during a pacific blockade or during an intervention might be forcibly resisted, * * * hostilities breaking out in this way."

In a French War Hospital.

Serving a community of fifty a three course meal—soup, meat and vegetables and dessert—is a man size proposition, says Elizabeth Frazer in the Saturday Evening Post. Serving it on bed tables, often cutting up the food and feeding the armless patients, further complicates the task. The first day I completely lost my head. My clamorous young brood, nine of whom were under twenty-two, reminded me of nothing so much as a nestful of yawning baby robins waiting to be fed.

It was: "Look out for my leg, mees!" "More bread, mees!" "My serviette, mees!" "Have you forgotten me, mees?" "My soup's tipped into my bed! I'm afloat, mees!" And all in a rapid bubble of French that made my head spin. At last in sheer desperation I addressed them in the American language: "You darned kids!"

The Little Oyster Crab.

The captain of a foreign ship, in port at Baltimore, at an entertainment given by friends was delighted with the oysters which were on the menu. Just before the ship sailed these friends sent to it several barrels of these oysters as a present to the captain. When he made the trip back to this country his friends asked him how he liked the oysters. He said: "Don't you know, we had to throw nearly all of them overboard. They were no good. Practically every one of them had a live insect on the inside, and, knowing they were not fit to eat, we let the whole lot go to Davy Jones." Investigation showed that the insect was the little oyster crab, which is a great delicacy, preferred by many to the oysters themselves, and which the epicure knows as a sure guarantee of the quality of the bivalve. It was a good joke on those sending and the one receiving the present, at which neither side laughed very much.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

MAKING HISTORY

Only It Pertained to Two Persons Instead of a Nation

By ALAN HINSDALE

I was driving my auto along a country road, enjoying the constantly changing scenery. The spring had developed into summer; the leaves on the trees were full blown, birds were singing in the trees, a range of distant hills stood soft and mellow against the horizon, light, fleecy clouds sailed lazily over an azure sky.

I am one of those who love to ride slowly, that I may see each vista, each landscape, near objects, enjoying them while I look. I have no patience with those who must be always tearing along so rapidly that no sooner does one get an eye on a green velvet slope with cattle feeding upon it than, presto! it has vanished and its place is taken by a ragged height covered with scrub trees, past which the road may be so uneven as to require a three mile an hour gait. Such drivers will get over twenty miles of beautiful scenery in a jiffy, to drag and jolt along beside a quarry or a street lined with hovels.

On this summer morning of which I speak my heart had been warmed by the beautiful flecked sunlight beside the road, and I felt especially charitable toward all the world. I was motoring along a narrow dirt road, but extremely smooth, lined with a broad space of turf on either side to the fences, when I saw before me a feminine figure whose lines and dress indicated that she was a young girl. She was carrying a satchel of ample dimensions on her arm and used a staff. When I came up with her I brought my machine almost to a standstill, she turned her face toward me, and I noticed that it was comely.

"Shall I give you a lift?" I asked.

"Thank you, sir. I have far to go and am aweary," she replied with that Scotch accent which in a woman is especially musical, though from a man the words usually come like bullets from the muzzle of a pistol.

She was about to climb into the rear seat when I opened the forward door, and she took the seat beside me.

"Where do you go?" I asked.

"I diana know at present," she answered. "I am to meet my brother at Medbury. Where we shall go from there I canna tell."

I got out my road map, asked the girl to unfold it and while I held the wheel with one hand held the map with the other. I saw that Medbury was a matter of ten miles as the crow flies, but it was fifteen by road and nearly thirty by such roads as would be suitable to an auto.

"At what hour do you expect to meet your brother?" I asked.

"This afternoon."

It was 9 o'clock in the morning. I was not required to be at any particular place at any particular time. There was plenty of time to get the girl to her destination before she was due there. She was pretty, her voice was very sweet, and I saw no reason why I should not enjoy her companionship for the greater part of the day instead of riding alone.

I jogged along till we came to a fork in the road, and as I was about to turn into the right road the girl made a move to alight, saying that her route lay over the left road, which was only a lane. I told her that I would take her to her destination over motorable roads, and she consented. Again I examined my road map and laid out a course involving a fifty mile ride, and since I preferred a slow gait we would make Medbury at noontime. As we rolled along I led my companion to talk about herself, for I felt some curiosity concerning her. She was not dressed as a farmer's daughter, and, although her accent was Scotch, it was not a peasant accent. I could not understand why so refined a person should be trudging along on foot, and I did not consider the lonely roads a proper place for a young girl to be unattended.

During our conversation she gave me her name as Edith MacDonnell. Her father and mother had come to America from Scotland when she was about ten years old, which accounted for her retaining only a portion of the dialect of her native country. Her father had been a landed proprietor to a very limited extent in Scotland and, having been seized with the desire to extend his possessions, had sold his property and come to America, where the proceeds of the sale would purchase a more extended domain. But it did not appear from what the girl told me that he had utilized his American acres except in devoting some of them in the cultivation of fruit.

As we do not realize that we are making history, so we do not recognize in small events that we are shaping our lives. I often revert to that pleasant summer day when I took into my auto for a lift a girl I had never seen before, intending at the start to set her down where our paths diverged; how I resolved to make her my companion for a ride; how she communicated to me a brief statement as to her social position. It was under the warm sunshine, tempered by a delicious cool breeze, while we rolled along through a beautiful country that I was making history for myself as well as the girl beside me.

In remembering the several small incidents that were tending to divert my life's path from what it had thus far been I have often thought that the matter of good roads played an important part. Had the roads been stony or filled with hollows my attention would have been necessarily fixed on them and my temper would have been sorely tried. Instead the roads were perfect. For miles the dirt roads were dry and hard packed. When we entered upon the turnpikes they were either covered with the finest stone or were of asphalt. My machine worked to perfection. On these accounts I was not only able to give my whole attention to my fair companion, but my heart was free to warm to her.

The history that I was making for myself and my companion was in a way more important to her than to myself. But why this was so I did not learn for a long while afterward. During that eventful day I set her down as a most demure Scotch lassie in whom there was no disposition to act for herself. Indeed, she impressed me as barely having escaped from the nursery.

At noontime we came upon a grove in which stood a cottage, with a sign, Wildwood Inn. There were rude tables in the grove, and I inferred that a luncheon would be obtainable, so I turned my machine into the place. A woman with a white cap and apron came out, and I asked her to produce the best she had in her larder.

That luncheon tastes delicious whenever I think of it to the present day. There was no dainty fit for the gods, biscuits such as were never made before north of Mason and Dixon's line, so light that I almost feared they would fly up among the branches of the trees above us before I could get them to my mouth. As for the butter, I doubt if it had been churned an hour. A hearties course was spring chicken served with cucumbers, so that the heat of the day was nullified by the coolness of the other, while both heat and coolness were enjoyable. A cup of tea smoothed by the richest cream was what we drank; for dessert a great dish of strawberries as large as walnuts. And all the while I was looking into a pair of brown eyes opposite me and listening to a musical voice.

One thing more of a different kind was needed for our history making. It was not important except in a small way; there was nothing heroic, scenic, lurid, romantic about it. Indeed, it was very commonplace. A punctured tire. Nothing more, nothing less. Who would suppose that so unromantic a happening should have been the capstone of incidents shaping the lives of two human beings? Nevertheless it was.

Never before had I driven without an extra tire. I would not have been without one this time had there not been a delay in filling an order. I had expected one to be delivered to me that morning. It had not arrived, and I was obliged to set out without it. Thank heaven that it was not forthcoming!

I had barely started from the Wildwood inn when one of my forward wheels was let down on the road. Fortunately we were so near the inn that my companion could go back there to wait while I tried to extricate myself from the dilemma. A short distance down the road was a house, where I found a telephone, but I spent a long while before I could get a man to come from a garage with implements to repair the break. And it would not be safe to use the tire for an hour or two after he had done so. It was 3 o'clock before the patch was put on and half past 4 before I dared start again. Then I drove back to the inn and informed Miss MacDonnell that we were twenty miles from Medbury, and since I dare not strain the newly patched tire we should have to proceed slowly over such portions of the road that were inferior. It might be 6 o'clock before we reached the place.

"How long will it take to go home?" she asked.

"I can get you back to where I overtook you in an hour," I said.

"Take me home. I dinna care to go to Medbury noo."

"Will you be too late to find your brother?"

"I dinna care to go there noo," was all I could get out of her.

We were fortunate in reaching her home without further mishap. When we came near the house my companion left me and went on alone. Before parting I arranged for a call and another ride. The call I made at an early date, and after that we had many rides together.

One matter turned up a mystery. It soon came out that Edith had no brother. Upon my accusing her of having deceived me she confessed that on the morning I took her into my auto she was going to meet a lover for an elopement.

It was then that I understood her words, "I dinna care to go there noo." And this is why I have said that I was making history more for her than for myself. She changed her intended husband during our ride.

It turned out well for her that I invited her to ride and that the bursting of the tire delayed our reaching Medbury as it did. Had she arrived there at the time appointed she would not have found the man she had expected to meet, for he had no intention of keeping the appointment. Some years after our marriage I learned through friends of my wife that the man with whom she had expected to elope had at that time already more wives than the law allowed. He had been born a gentleman, but was the black sheep of the family. The reason why she wouldn't have found him at the appointed place was that wife No. 2 had got wind of his intention and had had him jailed. I never allowed my wife to know how serious a fate she escaped.

Miller's Falls, Mass.—"Doctors said I had displacement very badly and I would have to have an operation. I had a soreness in both sides and a pulling sensation in my right side. I could not do much work the pain was so bad. I was also troubled with irregularity and other weaknesses. My blood was poor. We had been married four years and had no children.

After using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier I became well and strong and was saved from the operation. We are now the parents of a big baby girl and I praise your remedies to others and give you permission to publish my letter."—Mrs. JOSEPH GUILBAULT, Jr., Bridge Street, Miller's Falls, Mass.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is famous for restoring women to normal health and strength. When this is done wives no longer despair of having children.

A woman should be reluctant to submit to a surgical operation until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial. If you have a case that needs special advice, write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

Tiny and Tireless.

Heat is not a substance. It is merely the vibration of the molecules composing the material heated. Every material is made up of molecules, and each molecule is composed of atoms. Molecules of matter are held together by a force called "cohesion."

At absolute zero, colder yet than liquid air, or minus 270 degrees, all molecules are at rest. As the temperature rises the molecules begin to move to and fro. The higher the temperature is raised the further and faster swing the molecules.

Molecules are so minute that there are about one sextillion of them in a cubic inch of air. These at freezing temperature oscillate back and forth at the rate of 1,470 feet a second. The average length of their path between oscillations is about one two hundred and seventy-seven thousandth of an inch. Each comes into collision with its fellows about 5,000,000 times a second.

Foe of the Tarantula.

Tarantulas prefer loose, stony ground for their habitat. The foolish creatures come out for a stroll just before the sunset hours, at the very time when the tarantula hawk—which is not a bird, but a wasp—is out looking for them. The vicious wasp is quite sure to find them, and, although the fight may be long and the tarantula may make a tenacious defense, the wasp's lance will finally pierce and stupefy the tarantula, whose body will retain warmth during the required number of days for the incubation of the eggs which the wasp will deposit in her victim.

When the grubs of the baby tarantula hawks appear the ungracious little things will immediately proceed to devour the warm husk that gives them protection and life, thus fulfilling their destiny and incidentally protecting the children on the border.

Night Light in the Sky.

In studying the amount of light in the sky on a starlit night Lamberius Yutema, in Germany, reached the interesting conclusion that the luminosity of the sky is caused partly by direct starlight and partly by some other source of light. This latter he calls earth light and suggests that it may be due to a permanent aurora attending the earth. The light is variable not only on different nights, but at different hours of the same night. He found it to be from seven to fifteen times the amount of mean starlight, but it is believed that this ratio is exceptional and does not prevail everywhere. Some observations indicate that the light has its origin close to the surface of the earth. It has been suggested that it may have a similar origin to that of the light emitted by the coma of a comet.

Norway's Capital.

The name of Christiania dates back only 300 years. The city which preceded it was Oslo, the site of which is now included in the area of Christiania. Oslo was the ancient capital of Norway and existed some 600 years before its name was changed to Christiania, in 1624, after Oslo had been destroyed by a fire. King Christian IV. resolved, in spite of the protests of the citizens, that the site of the capital should be moved a couple of thousand yards westward to be nearer the fortress of Akershus and at the same time decided that the town when rebuilt should be named after himself.

A Fish That Looks Like Seaweed.

It is a well known fact that many insects, birds and animals have a way of simulating leaves, twigs, foliage and tall grasses among which they seek shelter, but who ever heard of a fish imitating seaweed? The Australian sea dragon is a kind of sea horse, but one strangely transformed by extravagant trappings. It is so richly ornamented with loose and flapping ribbons of skin that it looks like a bunch of seaweed when traveling through the water, and the ravenous wolves of the sea searching for food may pass it a dozen times a day without suspecting that the innocent looking bit of seaweed is really a fish.

Bone Fragility.

That fragility of the bones is a dominant characteristic in some families and is handed down through the generations according to the regular Mendelian laws of descent is the conclusion reached by Davenport and Conrad, American eugenists. They find it rare that a fragile child has not had parents and other ancestors with the same weakness. A striking example of this failing is a child that had both thigh bones broken soon after birth, and at thirty-four months had had not less than a dozen fractures of important bones, although the bones showed no deformity or softness.

Dogs in the Bible.

The dog is an animal frequently mentioned in the Bible. An English traveler mentions that he saw on the very site of Jezreel the descendants of the very dogs that devoured Jezebel, prowling on the mounds without the walls for offal and carrion thrown out to them to consume.

Making It Personal.

"Did you ever long for death?" asked the soulful, dyspeptic young man of the practical young woman. It was the fourth long call he had made on her that week, and she was sleepy.

"Whose death do you mean?" she asked in a dry, discouraging tone.

PERIL IN RHUBARB LEAVES.

The Medical Record Tells of Several Poison Victims in England.

The London correspondent of the Medical Record warns against using rhubarb leaves as food. They contain oxalic acid, and several persons have been poisoned in England recently as the result of eating them. He writes: "Several cases of poisoning by rhubarb leaves have been reported lately. There is no new experience. As a substitute for spinach, these leaves have long been employed, but those who use them are generally acquainted with their disadvantage. At the inquest this week on a clergyman who died soon after eating cooked leaves it was stated that analysis showed oxalic acid salts were present to the extent of 10 grains to the pound. Dr. Splisbury attributed the death to poisoning from this, and said that in the ordinary way 20 grains to the pound might not be sufficient to cause death, but that amount would be on the border line, and might affect some persons while others might escape.

"Though the use of the leaves as a vegetable is inadvisable, the stalk may be used provided that no soda is employed in the cooking. For a century or more the stalks have been used on an enormous scale as a substitute for fruit and have come to be looked upon almost as the fruit itself. In some very rare cases of idiosyncrasy every part of the plant seems to disagree. In all cases the leaves should be rejected."

Put a pinch of salt in the white of eggs and the time for whipping will be less.

Tit-Bits:— They were a very tired battalion and a very Cockney battalion, and when they spoke to the members of the battalion who had met them their speech was rich with expletives.

Said a sympathizer of the other battalion:

"You look jolly tired, mate. 'Ave yer bin far?"

The spokesman of the weary ones answered shortly and sweetly:

"Bin fer! Why we've walked over nearly the 'ole o' France, and wot we ain't walked over we've got in our sand bags."

Vacation and Efficiency.

It is the change really more than the rest that is of so much value in a vacation. Besides the absorption of the fatigue products, there is an opportunity given those functions which have remained inactive and sluggish, and even atrophic, to exercise and develop. It is a restoration of balance. For confined and sedentary workers even hard and coarse country work is restful and invigorating. For indoor workers this sort of a vacation means a new lease on life. Very often a border line case of tuberculosis is maintained a little longer above the line by a proper vacation. The increased tendency to arteriosclerosis and other degenerative conditions, as well as premature senility, nearly all the result of high pressure and efficiency, can be much neutralized by periodic vacations, a vacation free from the grind, of course, but also from the worry incident thereto. The vacation is a therapeutic measure come to stay.—New York Medical Journal.

Effect of Wind Upon Sound.

One of the government scientists gives an interesting explanation of the action of the wind in preventing the spread of sound.

It is, he claims, not the wind as such that prevents sound from traveling against it, but differences in the strength of the wind. If, for instance, the wind is stronger above than below or stronger at one side its effect will be to tilt the sound waves in one direction or another. Differences of temperature in the air also cause deflection of the waves of sound. Other atmospheric causes exist which deflect sound from a straight course. Some of the sirens in this country, says this scientist, produce sounds which ought theoretically to be audible at a distance of 1,500 miles; but, in fact, the authorities are satisfied if they are heard only two miles away. The reason for the discrepancy between calculation and experiment was probably atmospheric deflection of the sound.

Origin of "Mississippi."

"The original spelling of Mississippi," says the Magazine of American History, "and the nearest approach to the Algonquin words 'the father of waters' is 'Meche Sepe,' a spelling still commonly used by the Louisiana creoles. Tonto suggested Miche Sepe, which is somewhat nearer the present spelling. Father Laval still further modernized it into Michigpi, which another father, Labatt, softened into Misisipi. The only changes since have been to overload the word with consonants. Marquette added the first and some other explorer the second s, making it Mississippi, and so it remains in France to this day, with only one p. The man who added the other has never been discovered, but he must have been an American, for at the time of the Louisiana purchase the name was generally spelled in the colony with a single p."

Taste and Temperature.

The sense of taste resides in little flask shaped pockets imbedded in the spin of the surface of the tongue and in the upper part of the throat. Each of these bulbs has a fibril of a nerve connecting it with the larger nerves of its region. Anything to be tasted must be in a dissolved or gaseous condition so as to reach the interior of the bulbs, and differences in taste depend upon the varying intensity with which the impression is transmitted through the nerves. It is not surprising, then, that taste is much influenced by temperature and may temporarily be stopped altogether by extreme heat or cold. The sense of taste is, it appears, strongest at a temperature between 50 and 60 degrees F.

India Paper.

Processes used in the production of certain kinds of paper are trade secrets.

Thus the methods employed to produce the thin, tough, opaque variety, known as the Oxford India paper, have never been divulged. It was first made in England at the Clarendon Press paper mills in 1875 and was used for printing an edition of the Bible.

The Steeplechase.

The first steeplechases were literally "chases to a steeple." The earliest we can discover was a match in 1752 between Edmund Blake and Mr. O'Callaghan over four and a half miles of stiff country between the church of Buttevant and St. Leger church spire.—London Tatler.

Drawn Glass.

On account of its great strength drawn glass is used for many purposes. It withstands sudden changes of temperature, resists fire to a great extent and is very strong.

GERMANY'S IRON HAND.

(Chicago Tribune).

So long as the Hindenburg line stretches unbroken from the sea to Switzerland there is an iron hand resting on the American future, and for the sake of the future every American activity may have to be directed against the hand.

That is our work, and it may come to be the only work to which an American can give a thought or activity.

U. S. TO USE FRENCH CANNON

WASHINGTON, July 28—The War Department has announced that it will be impossible for the United States to furnish artillery for the American armies abroad, and that France will be called upon to supply them. The official statement announced it would be useless for this country to try to build guns fast enough, and that the comparatively few now on hand would be used for training the new armies.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

Free access to water and salt is essential for the best results in dairying.

A belt of trees adjoining the pasture field in which cattle pasture is a real comfort to the animals, now that hot weather has set in at last.

Spraying potatoes once with the Bordeaux mixture is not enough. The spraying should be kept up at intervals of two weeks until the end of August.

Millet should be cut for hay about the time most of the heads have appeared, and when it is in full blossom, but before the seeds begin to ripen and get hard.

A rancher from Islay, Alberta, recently returned from Iowa, where he purchased thirty head of pure-bred Aberdeen Angus cattle, paying as high as $1,000 each for some of the cows.

Spraying with some preparation to keep the flies off cows is the price that must be paid for a normal milk flow from now on. Unchecked attacks by flies may easily reduce production 25 per cent.

No better place is available than the farm for raising young chicks, but too often they are placed on the same ground year after year. The orchard or corn field make fine runs for the chicks sheltered at night in houses.

Grass cattle are reporting numerously everywhere in the United States and a liberal August movement is on the horison, says the Breeders' Gazette. The burden of commission house advice to the country is to market everything with a decent kill without delay, adds the same journal.

Help to Save Canada's Fruit Crop

A Practical Thrift Suggestion

This year, as never before, every quart of Canada's fruit crop should be used to the very best advantage. Though it all ripens within four months, it can be made to supply every table, every day in the year, at moderate cost.

Canning and preserving, done at home at the time when each fruit is cheapest, provide in delicious and economical form the daily fruit so necessary in a wholesome diet. Fruit put up at home is much cheaper than that which you buy, and the slight increase in its cost, due to the higher price of sugar, is small compared with the mounting cost of other foods.

Successful preserving and canning are by no means difficult, either, if you are careful to boil everything, and use

Redpath SUGAR

In Canadian homes, for the last Sixty Years, REDPATH Sugar has been the standby for preserving. It is always absolutely pure, and can be depended upon to do everything that sugar can do to ensure success.

Buy it, according to the quantity you need, in 2 or 5 lb. Cartons, or in 10, 20, 50 or 100 lb. Bags.

250 GUNS ON A THREE MILE FRONT FAIL TO SHAKE FRENCH

Five German Assaults Along the Chemin des Danes Are Repulsed With Terrible Losses to the Enemy ---French Hold Completely the Plateaus at Craonne and Californie---Seven Days' Fighting Fail to Gain For the Germans.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

(By Henry Wood, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, July 27. — Two hundred and fifty guns were massed over the three-mile front on which the German Crown Prince last night tried for the seventh successive night to wrest ground from French lines on the Chemin Des Dames. It was probably the most concentrated violent assault of all the seven days' fighting the French have withstood. Eleven German sausage balloons were sent aloft for artillery range work, and German guns massed only a short distance apart on the three-mile front poured an inferno of fire on the French troops. They attacked with bitter desperation. The Crown Prince's plan of strategy this time was suddenly to transfer his attack from the east of Hurtebise to the west of that town. The two-mile concentrated attack, however, won nothing more for the Germans than the previous six days' battle over a mile front. Between Chevreaux and Hurtebise to-day the French has regained all positions lost during the first few days of the fighting. They hold completely the plateaus of Craonne and Californie and the Casemates. At some points they even had extended their lines behind the original position. Supporting the belief of tremendous losses inflicted on the attacking troops it became known to-day that in Tuesday's attack alone the Prussian regiments lost half of their effectives in a few hours.

PARIS, July 27.—Five violent German attacks southwest of Moronvillers, Champagne front, following an intense bombardment, were without gain to the enemy, to-day's official statement asserted.

LONDON, July 27.—A great battle may be impending to-day in the sea sector of the western front. Parts of London to-day reported having felt the concussion of drum fire somewhere to the east that at times seemed to approach the intensity of that which preceded Field Marshall Haig's drive against Messines.

PETROGRAD, July 27.—For the first time in history, a Russian will soon be assigned to the Vatican at Rome as an Ambassador from Russia. M. Lisseskviky was named for the post.

PETROGRAD, July 27.—Nickolai Lenine, anti-war agitator and suspected German spy, was again at large to-day following a pitched battle at Tornea, Finland, between Governments Agents and Anarchists.

Madame Kolentay, one of Lenine's most ardent supporters, and also suspected of being in pay of the German Government, was arrested there with a dozen other agitators.

PETROGRAD, July 27.—The rout of disloyal troops continued to-day. Without hardly a blow struck in defense, the Galician regiments which fled from Tarnopol and Stanislau, have turned their backs on the enemy and are hurrying further from the front. The way to Czenerovitz seemed open to the fast pursuing Teutonic armies. A little greater penetration of the Russian line in this section will gravely endanger the staunchly vigorous Russian and Roumanian troops south in the wooded Carpathians.

The new order is aimed at spies.

PETROGRAD, July 27.—Russian troops yielded Plotysc and Czystyrlov, north of Tarnopol, to the German advance to-day, the War Office announced. In the region of Tudorov, however, enemy attempts to advance were repulsed.

Around Korosmiatin and Komardvka on Wednesday the statement recounted successful engagements by Russian cavalry which threw back enemy infantry attempting to attack northwest of those points.

Berlin's version of it was complete success everywhere "with thousands upon thousands of Russians mown down."

PARIS, July 27.—The withdrawal of Allied forces "as soon as possible" from Greece, ending the military occupation of the Greek provinces of Thessaly and Epirus, was resolved upon to-day by the Allied War Conference.

NEW YORK, July 27.—German troops have been unable to make a further breach in the great 150-mile Russian line, but north of Tarnopol their advance continues rapidly. Official statements to-day indicated a hardening of the Russian lines, and at some places severe checks administered to the German advances.

MAJOR A. W. McPHERSON, Peterborough doctor, who has sailed for home after two years' service overseas.

FRESH RUSSIAN TROOPS RUSHED TO GALICIAN FRONT

Russian-Roumanian Armies Are Still Victorious in South Where Three German Regiments Were Cut to Pieces

LOSSES WERE HEAVY

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, July 27. — Fresh Russian troops are now being rushed to the Galician front to stem the tide of the German advance past Tarnopol, say cables to the Russian Embassy to-day. Russian arms are still victorious in the Smorgon-Krevo sector. The three German regiments sent from China to reinforce the Kaiser's army, have been literally cut to pieces, cables say. Deep forests in this theatre of war are covered with corpses of Russians and Germans.

The Child Was Killed Instantly

Further particulars concerning the death of the three-year-old daughter of Mr. F. E. Ellis of the editorial staff of Farm and Dairy, are contained in the following despatch from Guelph:

Guelph, July 27.—A fatal accident occurred at the entrance to the bridge on the road leading into Milton from Campbellville, when Marguerite, the three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ellis, was killed instantly. Mrs. Ellis left Campbellville early in the motor car with the little girl for Milton, where she expected to catch the train for Toronto. At the entrance to the bridge something went wrong with the car and it turned turtle, landing upside down in the creek, with the occupants underneath. Mrs. Ellis was not seriously hurt, but when she succeeded in getting her child out she found that she was dead. She carried the child to the nearest house and was driven back to her home.

GAVE HIS THURSDAY HOLIDAY TO A FARMER.

A certain butcher decided to spend Thursday with a farmer friend helping him bring in the hay crop that dotted the fields in all the array of a bountiful crop. He was assigned to the mow to spread, and experienced a busier afternoon than he had probably expected. Big hay forks and other machinery seemed to tumble the hay cocks into the mow in a rapid and unbroken succession, and the tall, genial butcher had a Trojan's task to keep up with the work. Had he been hardened to the severities of handling the harvest in the mow, it might have been easier going, but he confessed after giving a good account of him elf that "it was cruel," which was simply a reference to his muscular reaction on the morning after.

Officers To Be Interned

Special to the Examiner:

LONDON, July 27. — The agreement reached by the British and German Governments regarding the exchange of civil and military prisoners has been ratified. All commissioned and non-commissioned officers who have been in captivity 18 months or more shall be eligible for internment in neutral countries.

The agreement affects officers taken at St. Julien. Vivian Fessenden, of Peterborough, is one of these.

BUILDING PERMITS

Two building permits, both for small sums, have been issued from the city hall during the past week:

Sam. Kempt, 659 George street, kitchen, $500.

F. Barnette, 75 Park street, alterations, $150.

Increased Acreage In Old Country

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 27.—The 1917 harvest of wheat, barley, oats and potatoes in England and Wales will show an increase of 347,000 acres over 1916, the Food Control Department announced to-day.

Germans Claim 1,450 Prisoners

Special to the Examiner:

BERLIN, via London, July 27. — French prisoners of the German army along the Chemin des Dames were increased to more than 1,450, with great quantities of supplies, as a result of the German drive there, to-day's official report asserted.

Promised To Hire With Farmers But Were Missing When Wanted

"Here's the kind of men I should like to see conscripted first," said Mr. G. A. Gillespie this morning as he recounted the broken promises of men who had promised to go out with farmers.

"Three of them this week gave me their word that they would hire with farmers, and just yesterday a man drove in six miles after I had 'phoned to him that I had a labourer who would hire with him. But like the previous two, the fellow failed to report, and the farmer had to return empty-handed."

This is not an uncommon experience, Mr. Gillespie states, and the condition in Peterborough is characteristic of the entire province to the Farmer's Sun, published in Toronto, which has lost all faith, if it ever had any, in the promises of the city dwellers. In Toronto, as elsewhere, the men who are looking for work and praying that they will never get any, have promised to engage with farmers, but once they get out of the farmer's sight at the employment offices they are exceedingly careful to keep out.

Major A. W. McPherson Among Officers Who Have Sailed For Home

Several Peterboro' Soldiers Including Ptes. David Babbs and Chas. Booth Have Reached Halifax—Changes Among Officers in No. 3 District—To-day's General Military News.

Several Peterborough soldiers were in the big quota of invalided men which reached Halifax a few days ago, mentioned in the list of Ontario soldiers who are home are Ptes. Chas. Booth and David Babbs. A number of other wounded Peterborough men are expected shortly while among the Canadian officers who have sailed for Canada is Major A. W. McPherson, Peterborough's medical health officer, who is returning after two years' service overseas..

DISCHARGE OF MEMBERS ON HOME SERVICE.

Military orders from the headquarters, Ottawa, contain the following: "Numerous requests are received for the discharge of members of Active Militia units and Special Service Companies on the ground that their detention in the service is a cause of hardship to their dependents. The urgent requirements of Active Militia units on guard duty and of Special Service Companies are fully appreciated and it is not the intention to release members of these units unless for very special purposes. There may be, however, special cases where the retention of married men in these units is the cause of undue hardships to their families, and authority is granted for the release of such cases as are absolutely deserving, but only after a thorough investigation of each case has been made.

KINGSTON, July 26.—Capt. Marion now has some sixty-three men of the 2nd Battalion draft, in training at Barriefield. The company has been moved, and on Wednesday morning tents were issued. The company is being located below the site of the Special Service Company. This is the second draft that Capt. Marion has recruited, the first being now overseas.

TORONTO, July 26.—The large proportion of Canadians in the Imperial Royal Flying Corps has often been noted. Less than one in ten of the British army is a Canadian, but the number of Canadian aviators is rapidly increasing, and estimated at from 35 to 50 per cent. of the total.

"Can you explain," asked a reporter of a local officer of the Flying Corps, "Why there is such a large proportion of Canadians in the Royal Flying Corps?"

"Well, you may depend upon it they are not forced in," was the reply. "All that can be said is that the service is specially attractive to Canadians, and they offer themselves for that service and are accepted if they are suitable. There is no other explanation. They are not selected or pressed into the service. They simply prefer it and qualify for it."

"Could there be a Canadian Air Service?" was the next question. "Is the idea practicable or is there anything against it?"

"Oh, I know what you mean by that," came the smiling reply, "There is an impression that the British authorities discourage the idea of a special Canadian Flying Service. There is nothing whatever in the idea, so far as I know. If anybody discourages it, it is our own Government. If you want to know the reason for this, you must ask Sir Sam Hughes. He was at the head of affairs when I was in France and there was practically no encouragement given to us by him. We were not allowed the extra pay that is given to flying men by the British authorities."

"You suggest that there has not been proper encouragement to Canadian flying by the Canadian Government."

"Undoubtedly, I do."

"Why?"

"Oh, because they did not understand the importance of it, I suppose. But, if you want this explained, you must go to Sir Sam Hughes. He was responsible."

Newcastle, July 26.—One of the boys of the 235th Battalion of Durham and Northumberland counties writes: "The 235th officers are being gradually separated after more than a year's comradeship, never to be associated again. Capt. the Rev. W. G. Clarke, pastor of Bowmanville Methodist Church, has been given an appointment in Epsom Hospital. Lieut. Lloyd, M.D., our medical officer, is remaining for the present at Otterpool Camp. Lieut. Lane has been transferred to the 18th Reserve Battalion. Major Dunlop, we are all sorry to hear, is still in Liverpool Hospital and will likely return to Canada. Capt. C. W. E. Meath, Adjutant, has been transferred to the 6th Reserve Battalion at Sanford. Thus it will be seen that our identity as a battalion is fast passing away. It is reported that the 235th Batt. Band will probably be sent over to France within a fortnight as a full band, which is a distinguished honour.

"One of our good fellows, R. B. Martin, from near Peterborough, who had been sick since we landed, died of pneumonia.

"The officers here (at West Sandling) are mostly quartered by themselves. They have a very nice officers' mess, with large dining-room, canteen, smoking room, with piano and Victrola. Several officers are good pianists and they have plenty of music. It is said that most of the officers here are from Toronto. We met Lieut. Walsh of the 216th Bantams, Toronto. It is good to meet a Durham County boy anywhere.

"The heat here for the past week has been a scorcher, and as I have been out with the men in the open much of that time I have got as brown as a berry. No one need tell me that the heat won't scorch a fellow in England.

"An unpleasant feature in connection with our arrival was that the officers who have been in command over us since enlistment were told to fall out and new officers took command. We men were dismantled of our antiquated Oliver equipment and supplied with the Webb variety. Ever since we have had an average of five inspections per day to see that every man has a complete overseas equipment. It would seem as if a man's personality disappears entirely here and he becomes a cog in the big wheel of war.

"Part of our battalion are leaving for Witley to join the 134th Highland Batt., and others to be attached to the 208th Irish Batt."

ROWELL IS FOR THE MILITARY SERVICE BILL

"Must Be True to the Men at the Front" He Tells His Constituents —Measure Has Cut Clear Across Party Lines.

CONSCRIPTION NECESSARY

Hickson, North Oxford, July 26.

In a personal statement to his constituents this afternoon, Mr. N. W. Rowell, leader of the Opposition in Ontario, spoke as follows:

The Military Service Bill has cut clear across party lines. The majority in the House of Commons and the minority as well are made up from members of both parties.

You all know my position. For nearly three years I have been giving my best thought and attention to the issues of this war and Canada's participation in it. I am convinced that by a proper organization of our man-power and resources we can reinforce and maintain our present divisions at the front without interfering with agriculture which is also vital to the nation's life, or with other essential industries which must be maintained if the war is to be successfully prosecuted. The experience of other countries at war proves that we can do this. And when this has been done, in view of what other nations have already accomplished, our sacrifice will be less in proportion than that of any nation which entered the war at the time we did.

In order that I might better understand the real situation, I visited the battle-front last year and have endeavoured to keep in touch with conditions at the front ever since. I spent some weeks looking into the situation in Great Britain and France. I found both countries putting forth unprecedented efforts and making unparalleled sacrifices to achieve victory. I have been in close touch with the recruiting situation in this province, since the outbreak of the war, and I know something of the recruiting conditions in the other provinces.

A Definite Conclusion.

Applying my best judgment to the conditions as I found them and knew them, I reached the conclusion some months ago that Canada could not continue to reinforce her men at the front, could not maintain her position in the battle-line, could not continue her struggle for her own freedom under the voluntary system. Having reached the conclusion that compulsory military service was essential for the defence of Canada and the preservation of our liberties, it was my duty to say so; not because I liked compulsion for I did not; not because I believed it would be popular, for I knew it would not be popular; but because I believed it was necessary, and that the people of Canada if they once realized the necessity would be prepared to make any sacrifice required to achieve victory.

Strongly as I differ from the manner in which this grave issue was presented to the country, wise as I believe it would have been to consult with labour, agriculture and other interests vitally affected, before the proposal was submitted to Parliament, firmly as I believe it should have been presented as a national and not as a party proposal, these considerations would not excuse me

RUSSIAN WOMEN FIGHTERS FEARLESSLY CHARGED THE ENEMY

When Men Comrades Deserted Women Swept Over Shell Torn Field and Took 102 Prisoners

ENEMY CHARGINED

(By William G. Shepherd, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 27.— Charging fearlessly over a shell torn field when their men comrades had deserted, Russian women fighters in their first battle took 102 prisoners, two of them officers. Dispatches from the Dvinsk front to-day added to the glory of the women's legion of death. They gave an additional casualty list of a dozen wounded, including Madame Bochkarlova, commander of the battalion. The second in command, Mlle. Skrybleva, was suffering from severe shell shock. All were sent to Minsk for temporary treatment and will later be brought back to Petrograd.

The girls "went over the top" in the charge with fierce impetuosity, doing as they hurried forward to meet the enemy and utterly without fear. Their example shamed unstable troops nearby, who had started deserting. And it was undoubtedly the heroism of the women soldiers that turned the tide of battle in favour of the Russians. The prisoners captured by the girls expressed the utmost astonishment and chagrin when they learned the sex of those who had so fiercely attacked their position. A hundred thousand citizens and soldiers at Poltava assembled with bands and flags to give frenzied greeting to several of the wounded women who passed through there from the front to-day.

ARTILLERY OFFENSIVE BY HUNS

Nieuport Sector is Being Almost Continuously Shelled by the Germans

Special to The Examiner:

(By Wm. Philip Simms.)

With the British Armies in Field, July 27.—Germany is conducting an artillery offensive.

The Nieuport sector is being almost continuously shelled. Teutonic shells of every calibre and description fall in the back as well as the front areas of the British lines. The enemy keeps up his hammering incessantly.

Last night between 10.30 and 11 an average of a shell a minute of the asphyxiating variety was counted as being hurled over the British trenches.

Around Hennecourt this incessant pounding obliterated a British trench and granted a successful capture of several prisoners in a raid. Then the prisoners tried to hold the position. A hail of British gunfire ejected them in rapid fashion. As they fled across "No Man's Land" back to their own lines, the British field artillery accurately and cleverly "sniped" most of them off.

The first cable message that came across the Atlantic from England to Canada was received by Mrs. Hopkins. Three sons surviving are Judge Hopkins, Cayuga, Jas. H. Hopkins, Lindsay, and Major E. "Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, JULY 27, 1917

WASTED MONTHS.

The other night at a meeting of the Great War Veterans in Riverside a resolution was adopted urging upon the Prime Minister and the Government "that the possibility of a general election be not allowed to further retard the reinforcing of our comrades at the front by the only practical method," says the Toronto Star.

These men have fought in the war; they know what their comrades at the front are doing and enduring. They look about them here and they see little or nothing being done to raise reinforcements for the troops at the front. They look to Ottawa, where they find a Parliament talking by the month, and a Government willing evidently to sit and listen indefinitely. It may be quite satisfactory to Sir Robert Borden to feel that as leader of his party he is speaking on the right side in a debate. But as Prime Minister and accredited leader of his country as general manager of the whole business of government, it is not enough that his talk is unobjectionable; that among all sorts of talk his is better than some. The fact is that Parliament has furnished the country with a debate, when that which the country needed was an army.

Is there an army somewhere at the far end of all this political disputation, or is there not? If there is, there ought to be some early indication that practical results are beginning to take shape.

It was two months ago, on Friday, May 18, that Sir Robert Borden exploded his conscription announcement in the House.

Two months before that, early in March, the last desperate efforts at a recruiting campaign in Toronto and in Hamilton failed.

For four months before that again, going back to November, voluntary recruiting had almost come to a stop. Over a period of eight or nine months past, there has hung over the situation the prospect of conscription. It hangs there yet, and from present indications may do so for months to come.

Take the first six months of 1917 and consider what the Government has done towards providing men to reinforce Canada's troops. Nearly five of these months went by with conscription being talked about everywhere before the Government declared its purpose in regard to it. All this year, in fact the work of army making has been at a standstill, little or no effort being used to raise men on any basis. There has been desultory enlistment for various branches of the service — if men come forward there is always a sergeant to enrol them. If men are wanted to go to England or France and run sawmills in historic forests, officers come to Toronto and enlist clerks out of shops and offices. At first men for this work were supposed to be specialists and were sought for in the mills and camps, and men of experience were got for railway construction work. It has been found easier to get boys in Toronto. But the enrolling of a hundred thousand non-combatants to go away in uniform to chop wood would not help much in supplying the need expressed by Gen. Currie for more fighting men to strengthen his ranks.

The political situation is, no doubt, very interesting. Perhaps the debates of the past two months at Ottawa have been spirited and full of merit as debates go, but the need of the past eight months has been men for service in the war, and little or nothing has been done to produce them. They are as far away to-day as they were eight months ago. In all that time the Government seems to have been content to square itself with public opinion by means of its words and professions, but it is not turning out the goods and is not making delivery. A Government that is willing to be retarded, that submits to it a Government that is willing to sit down for five, six, or eight months to talk, and while the talk lasts suspends all action—is, we submit, not a Government that one can cheer for while a great war is in full progress, a war that is waiting for nobody's debates to end or their hesitations to be decided.

And we say with the Great War Veterans assembled at Riverside that "the possibility of a general election" should not be allowed to suspend entirely and indefinitely all effort on the part of the Government to perform its duty in the reinforcing of the men at the front.

WOULD-BE FARMERS.

It is a healthy sign of after war development that at a meeting of the Great War Veterans' Association plans for the taking up of Quebec farms by returned soldiers at present back in Canada should have been discussed and a petition prepared asking the Legislature to assist in the work.

This is the sort of thing we have been hoping to hear for some time.

This is the sort of thing we There have been plans innumerable for the creation of veteran colonies upon farm lands, some of them very elaborate and involving the retention of a measure of military discipline. Hitherto, however, the returned soldier, for whose benefit all these schemes were prepared, has been entirely silent as to his intentions regarding them and, as has already been pointed out, there is little use in preparing farm colonies if the farmers are lacking. Now that the Montreal veterans have spoken out, we know better where we stand in this Province, and it may be assumed that what is true of the returned soldier here is equally true elsewhere. Certainly these men deserve every assistance we can give them.—Montreal Star.

PRINTERS IN THE WAR.

Forty-two crosses have been erected to mark the graves of members of the International Typographical Union killed in the war. A booklet published by the union, and entitled "Somewhere in France," contains extracts from a very interesting letter written by Private Rothwell. His language is modest and unaffected. He is glad to know that he is doing his bit with more than six hundred members of the union.

"I have met quite a few American typos here in the Canadian army, and was proud to call them brothers in arms as well as brothers in unionism. I have met many of these same boys on my various trips in the good old U. S. A., some in job shops, others in newspaper offices. Yet we meet again, fighting for the great cause of liberty, freedom, and equal rights, which our grand old union has advocated and stood for all these years. Let me tell you the union printer boys here doing their 'bit' are to be commended, and are worthy sons of the great democratic centuries we spring from."

The union has paid $12,225 in mortuary benefits to the relatives of its dead soldiers, and in every case the check was mailed within twenty-four hours after the official notification of death. The names are given.

There is a sentence in this little book that deserves to be read and pondered. "We are in favour of peace, national, international, and industrial." The aim of a labour organization is not, as some imagine, the stirring up of strife. It seeks to protect the rights of its members, and so performs a function similar to that of a nation. But it also provides a means for the orderly settlement of industrial disputes. It is a safeguard against tame or helpless submission to injustice; it is likewise a safeguard against industrial anarchy. Its goal is peace with justice, as the goal of a nation ought to be.

The other day the New Republic had an article contending that the recent troubles in Arizona and the conflict between the employers and the I.W.W. was due to the refusal of a mine manager to recognize the labour union. The labour union being ignored, the I. W. W. entered the field. In the same journal it was contended some time ago that there should be a national recognition of labour unions, because they afforded that opportunity for "collective bargaining" without which it is impossible to secure either justice or order.—Toronto World.

MR. KERENSKY'S STUPENDOUS TASK.

All the world has its eyes turned toward Russia and the tremendous task which confronts Mr. Kerensky. It is a job for a Titan, but the new Premier has accomplished other Titan jobs in the last two months, and a man who can march toward the enemy's guns and so inspire a whole army can be depended upon to have other qualities in reserve that will carry him over apparently insurmountable barriers.

Of the magnitude of Mr. Kerensky's task there can be no doubt after a reading of Mr. Herman Bernstein's special despatch from Petrograd printed in the Herald to-day. There are so many divergent interests to be conciliated, so many political parties to be harmonized, so many Teutonic plots to be discovered and uprooted that it seems almost impossible that one man, even though he has dictatorial powers, should be able to keep the new Russia in the straight path that leads to national safety and national happiness.

Mr. Bernstein's despatch makes it clear that the same sinister influences which tried to force Russia into a separate peace with Germany and which instigated peace with Germany and which instigated last week's abortive rising in Petrograd are attempting to cause further internal dissensions by inciting Jewish massacres. Dark as the picture is, the situation is far from hopeless. Three times the new Russia has surmounted grave crises and each time the forces of right and justice that overwhelmed the old autocracy have triumphed. It is unbelievable that these forces of which Mr. Kerensky is the leader can be put back under the yoke now that they have entered the long desired land of freedom. —New York Herald.

awrence Ginnell Ejected From The British Commons

LONDON, July 27.—Lawrence Ginnell, independent Irish Nationalist member, was forcibly ejected from the House of Commons yesterday and suspended from his seat as the result of a sensational charge which he levelled against the Government. He declared to the House that the authorities were plotting his life in order to manufacture a conspiracy which they could blame on the Irish Sinn Feiners.

Ginnell asserted that detectives were sent by the Government to the gallery of the House of Commons, armed with bombs, which they were to throw on the floor of the chamber. The scheme was to charge the bomb outrage to the Sinn Fein party and thus enable a cleaning out of this political party.

This is not the first time that Ginnell has been a disturber in the House of Commons. Months ago when the Irish Home Rule Bill was being debated he created such a row that the sitting was adjourned.

FREED, KISSED JURY.

San Francisco Music Teacher Acquitted After a Long trial.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 26.—Mrs. Rena Mooney, one of five defendants in the murder cases growing out of the bomb explosion here during the Preparedness Parade last summer, was acquitted late yesterday. After a trial that had lasted nine and one-half weks, the jury deliberated fifty hours. Thomas G. Mooney, her husband, and Warren Billings have been convicted and sentenced to death and life imprisonment, respectively. Two other defendants remain to be tried. As the foreman announced the verdict, Mrs. Mooney, a comely young music teacher jumped from her seat and kissed each juror.

Another Earthquake In Chile

Special to The Examiner:

You say

That party politics should be dropped until after the war.
That a National Non-partisan Government is essential for doing our full duty in the war.
That all patriotic citizens MUST unite to get such a government.

You will find

That the Win-the-War Convention at Toronto, Thursday and Friday, August 2nd and 3rd will help mightily.

We want

The help and support of everyone who wants what we want.

Therefore

Please send us your name and address, and those of others who agree with you.

MASONIC FRATERNITY HAVE FINE OUTING

Sports at Idyl Wyld, Dinner at Harwood and a Good Time Coming and Going—The Sports Were Strenuous.

A BIG TUG OF WAR

Taking advantage of the Thursday half-holiday, now a settled institution for all who may take advantage of it, the Masonic fraternity organized a small jaunt down the river, quite on fraternal lines, and appreciated. Enjoyed so much that the event will be made an annual affair and possibly grow in importance. Over one hundred participated. Those who did not missed the time of the summer.

The steamer Rainbow carried the party. Idlewyld was the objective. Reaching the island a series of sports were run off, these being participated in and contested by those who seemed to like to work off a quantity of energy. The programme gives the routine, and the winners and avails. For to make the events worth while certain very valuable prizes were secured and awarded. It is understood that the General Committee sanctioned and the Sports Committee expended so much as 75 per cent on the batch of prizes, without counting a box of good cigars. The prizes were valued, not for intrinsic worth, but for the tremendous efforts put forth to be a winner.

Want of time interfered with the finish of a very sanguinary baseball game. As the game started off one side, threatened by the way they went at it, to wipe the other side out of existence. Hostilities closed down to go to dinner. That seemed the more important thing for the larger part of the gathering.

Dinner was served at the Harwood Hotel. The tables had to be laid three times before all were served. A good well-cooked fish dinner; enjoyed by all, being hungry from the outing in the lake air. A threatening storm cleared away and the run home was very pleasant up the river.

50 Yards' Running Race: Won by Ira Moore; second, J. Downing. Prizes: Diamond ring and silver watch fob—(Said to be).

Fat Man's Race: Won by Ward Patterson and A. D. Jardine. Prizes: Complete set of garden tools and a hammock. Prizes should be seen to be appreciated.

Hop, step and jump: Many entries, everybody participating. Won by Fred Roy and Mr. Reid. Prizes: Dinner gong and flute. Both prizes well worth the price of admission.

Backward Race: Many contestants. Many tumbles. Won by Chris. Graham and Louis Bowles. Prizes: special bull pup, (bestowed on Chris.) and silver cup to Bowles. Prizes greatly admired, especially the pup.

Standing broad jump. (The jump was broad, not the men). After fearful efforts and much energy, won by Frey Roy and J. M. McKone. McKone jumped in real business college style, but Fred Roy is a self-starter at jumps. Prizes: Pair of Motor Goggles, (very choice and stylish), and a reading lamp. When Roy dons the goggles, his best friends won't know him. The Lamp of Knowledge McKone will take care of.

Shot Put. All the modern Hercules participated. As was to be expected Chief Thompson put the rock all over the lot. He had elevation, weight, length of arm and authority all in his favour. Still Ward Patterson made a good second. Prizes: Pair of very fancy and restretch suspenders, (a mile too short) and a game of chance. (The latter well bestowed for Patterson took all the chances).

Tug-of-war. Between a variety of teams. No less than four. This event was a screamer. The hotel guests turned out en masse to discern the cause of the excitement. Everybody howled themselves hoarse in delirious shouts of encouragement. Won by the team, chauffeured by J. G. M. Wilson, of the C.G.E. Co., staff. Wilson has the pull, no doubt of it. The sod will need to be renovated. The team captained by Chief Thompson, Pete Laing, Chas. Adair and Bro. Wilson, as before mentioned. Prizes: A box of cigars. N. B. The weeds were burned on the way home. N. B. B. It is darkly hinted that H. Abramson, the "anchor" for the Pete Laing team, held to his tracks, and that the evidence of the opposing team winning was that the rope stretched. Fact.

Base Ball Game. Team of Shriners, (whatever they are) and "All Comers." Walter Stocker captained the Schriners, as any man might be proud to do, and Chris. Graham the All Comers. Shriners won by a score of one to nothing. But Chris. did not get fairly started, and his team were expecting dinner to break out at any moment.

The General Committee-in-Charge was made up of the officers of the local lodges, with Alex. Weddell, as chairman. The Sports Committee was looked along by Ross Dobbin, W. Richardson, Ira Moore and George Evans. The quartette looked and worked the part. A good share of the fun was due this committee. Ross Dobbin chairman. This committee discharged the onerous duty of selecting the prizes on a very much attenuated appropriation with elegance and precision. It will be noted, that some one had to decide who and who were not for men. The pleasurable duty had to be given to some one impervious to public opinion. Walter Stocker was elected Official Weight Guesser. No appeals from decision.

The excursion was indebted to Mr. Britton, of the Heintzman Co., local depot for the use of a very fine Victrola or Sonora. With an ample repertoire of records. The refrain of "Roamin' in the Gloamin," and "Parted on the Shore" and many other vocal gems floated from the boat to the shores of the river on the trip home. Leader has a good, strong voice, suitable for aquatic reproduction. All enjoyed the music.

A vote of thanks was tendered to Bro. Thos. Hooper for the use of Idlewyld, where hostilities of the games were carried on. And, further, on motion of W. R. Morris, it was decided to make the affair an annual one.

There were proceeds. Sure thing. And the balance it was decided should be handed to the Red Cross.

Dear Mary:—

If you want to have the time of your life just go down to Zack's and see their new furniture and rugs. They are glad to show the new things to you even if you do not want to buy.

But it will be a hard thing to go to that store and not buy something, for they have so many pretty new things at such reasonable prices and such attractive terms of payment.

I'll go with you. Let me know. Haste—Helen

Lecture Was Much Enjoyed

Mount Julian Branch of Women's Institute Hear Miss S. Campbell

MT. JULIAN, July 26. — The Mt. Julian branch of the Ontario Women's Institutes were fortunate in having for their lecturer this year, July 4th, Miss S. Campbell, of Brampton, who is well fitted after several years of study and experience, to give information of interest and value to the members.

Miss Campbell could not fail to be gratified by the number present and the attention paid to her lecture, and also by the programme given by the members, of amusing readings, recitations and patriotic songs.

An evening meeting open to all was also held and was well attended.

The Institute has carried on its work well and we may say that the success is due to the capable and energetic women who have acted as officers and by the members in general who do their very best to help in the work.

In conclusion it may be mentioned that the Institute has lately donated ten dollars to Red Cross work for our soldiers.

Information Wanted Of Mrs. Alice Taylor

Law Office, George C. Otto,
Chicago.
Chicago, July 25, 1917.

To the Mayor,
Peterborough, Ont., Canada.

Dear Sir,—I write this letter in the interest of Mrs. Alice Maude Lavashere Taylor, an Englishwoman, born at Manchester, England, and now ill in the Three Rivers Hospital, Three Rivers, Michigan, U. S. A. Mrs. Taylor wishes to locate her sister, Mrs. Ada Jarvis, who some ten years or more ago lived in your city. Mrs. Jarvis was the wife of a labouring man, and had three sons. Both Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Jarvis were born at Manchester, England, and were the daughters of William L. Lavashere and Mary Ellen (Moore) Lavashere. They had one brother William. There was also a third sister, whose name I do not know.

Mrs. Taylor is alone in the world, and is so ill that the chances are she will never get out of the hospital. She would like to hear from her sister, or any other of her people. Mrs. Taylor's brother, William Lavashere, when last heard of, was on the ship Shapire, in the English Navy. Mr and Mrs. William L. Lavashere, Mrs. Taylor's parents, are both dead.

If you can locate Mrs. Jarvis, or any of her family, you will confer a great favour upon Mrs. Taylor. I shall be, indeed, obliged for your kindness in any effort you may make to aid her.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) George C. Otto.

Any information regarding the members of this family should be communicated to Chief Thompson.

Peterboro' Delegates Were Present

The annual meeting of the Oddfellows' Relief Association was held in Kingston. The question of largest interest was the question of the proposed changes in the constitution, which were thoroughly discussed in committee, and in the annual meeting, and with the result that the whole question was remitted to a special committee composed of the directors and representative men from Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Quebec. The expectation is that this large committee will be able to work out the details of a modified scheme of readjustment, and one which will be generally acceptable to the membership.

Mr. J. Garrow and Mr. W. H. Barrie, of Peterborough, were delegates at the meeting.

for now failing to support a measure which I am convinced is essential to meet the war conditions we are now facing.

Must be True to Men.

I know some of my friends in this county and elsewhere do not agree with the conclusions I have reached. I deeply regret that I am compelled to differ from them; but few, if any of them, have seen what I have seen of the conditions at the front, or know what I know of the fierceness of the struggle and of the patient and cheerful courage of our men, buoyed up in the confidence that Canada was behind them. I would be untrue to these gallant men and to my own convictions as to Canada's clear duty if I did not support compulsory military service now that a bill has been introduced and passed in Parliament, and appeal to my fellow-citizens to recognize their obligations to the State and cheerfully to accept and loyally to support compulsory service.

But Canada must not stop with a compulsory military service measure. Men at the front feel, and feel keenly, that while they are giving their all for Canada and for liberty, men at home are making huge profits out of the war. In justice to the men at the front as well as to the cause for which they are fighting, we must require wealth to bear its full share of the burden. Men who are profiting by the war must make a full contribution to the cost of the war, and, in addition, a radical, progressive income tax measure is urgently required. We must all proceed with the thorough organization of our resources, so that Canada may throw her full strength into this struggle in order that in this critical hour of our history she may not fail in her duty to herself, to her gallant sons at the front and to the cause of liberty for which so many of these brave men have cheerfully died.

Heavily Fined For Saying "Yellow" To Returned Soldiers

WINDSOR, July 27.—Harry (Red) Payne of Windsor, an employee of the Canadian Ford Motor Company, paid $10 and costs in police court for saying "yellow" to two returned soldiers, who had served more than two years in the front line trenches.

The trouble between Payne and the soldiers started in a Detroit saloon during a discussion on the Government's selective draft plan. Payne declared he would not be conscripted, and shouted, "You are yellow!" to the soldiers.

When Payne returned to Windsor shortly after midnight half a score of war veterans were waiting. Following cries of "Let's throw the slacker in the river," there was a near riot, which resulted in the arrest of Payne and a companion.

LENINE FEARED ENEMIES.

Surrendered Because He Feared Enemies Would Do Him Violence.

COPENHAGEN, July 27.—Nickolai Lenine, pro-German agitator, arrested yesterday in Finland after a nation-wide search by the Russian Provisional Government, surrendered because he feared his enemies might find him and do him violence, according to despatches received here via Haparanda. Lenine was arrested Tuesday at Ozerki, Finland.

BRITISH SHIPPING COMPANIES SHOW HUGE PROFITS IN WAR

Five Liverpool Concerns Report $35,000,000 Aggregete Profit Last Year—$70,000,000 Paid in Taxes

Five of the largest Liverpool shipping companies, whose annual reports have just been issued, show an aggregate profit for 1916 of $35,000,000, or $20,000,000 more than their average for the three years before the war.

This improvement of 133 per cent., moreover, is shown after provision has been made for excess profits tax, contingent liabilities and amounts set aside for every possible or imaginable contingency. The reports do not give any accurate clue to the amounts thus set aside, and from the way the accounts are presented there is room for a diversity of opinion even as to the amount of money which the Government will get in the form of the various taxes to which war prosperity is subjected.

Can Pay $70,000,000 Taxes.

One estimate puts the amount of extra taxes which the five companies will pay at $70,000,000. Some experts believe this sum is well below the mark. Two of the companies show their profits after deducting undisclosed amounts for "depreciation and so forth."

The Leyland Line does not mention the amount of profit earned; it merely says: "After provision for all taxation, depreciation and contingent liabilities and the payment of deferred dividends, the directors propose a final dividend which will bring the average rate mentioned in last year's report to 7½ per cent."

Dividend of 88 Per Cent.

This is a roundabout way of stating that a dividend of 88 per cent. has been paid to the holders of the ordinary shares, seeing that for thirteen years there was no dividend and 24½ per cent. was paid last year, thus requiring 88 per cent. to make an average of 7½ per cent. over the fifteen years.

The White Star Line has given a stock bonus of 400 per cent. and is paying a dividend of 20 per cent., equivalent to 100 per cent. on the old capitalization.

The Cunard Line pays its customary 20 per cent. dividend on a considerably larger capitalization, while its allowance for depreciation is nearly three times the corresponding figures of recent years.

Has Vast Investments.

The Leyland Line's balance sheet shows a new "general purposes" fund of $1,250,000 and a "renewals and repairs" fund of nearly $2,500,000. It also shows the big cash and liquid resources which are a characteristic feature of shipping companies' accounts since the war. Thus, the company's cash on December 31 was $4,500,000, while its investments, including war loan, totalled $25,000,000, or nearly 60 per cent. of its total assets.

PETERBORO' ENQUIRY CONCERNING THE PATRIOTIC FUND

"What Right Have Patriotic Fund Authorities to Examine Private Affairs of a Soldier's Wife?"

G. D., Peterborough.—Should not the Patriotic Fund pay the money to soldiers' wives and allow them to spend it themselves for the maintenance of their children? (2) What right have they to examine the private affairs of a soldier's wife, and pay out the money for her, instead of giving it to her and allowing her to use it to the best advantage?

Ans.—The Canadian Patriotic Fund Corporation pays the money direct to soldiers' wives, and they are allowed to spend it for the maintenance of themselves and their children. The affairs of the corporation are administered by an Executive Committee, elected by the corporation. The corporation is directed to apply or distribute the funds entrusted to it among the persons entitled to share therein in such amounts as in the direction of the corporation seems proper or advisable. The corporation has power to establish branches or local organizations throughout Canada to to co-operate with any association or organization established in any place in Canada for similar purposes. (Dominion Statutes, 1915, chap. 8). No doubt there is a branch of the corporation in the city of Peterborough. The whole fund however, is in the absolute and uncontrolled discretion of the corporation, and the committee may distribute it in whatever manner seems proper or advisable in each particular case. It is not improper for the committee to examine into the circumstances of each particular case and to apply and pay the money in such a manner as the committee may think will be most advantageous, considering the purpose for which the money was donated. Of course, the committee should not be offensively inquisitoril or so officious as to offend the privacy and self-respect of those who are entitled to receive the money. They should bear in mind that the money, given "is not a charity" or bounty, but a just, though inadequate, payment for the services of the men who are fighting for the Empire.

Funeral Will Be Held To-morrow

CHERRIES ARE "A GOOD BUY"

Messrs. Douros and Gettas Advised That the Plum Crop is a Failure

Messrs. Douros and Gettas, the well-known George Street fruit dealers, have received from one of the largest fruit producers in Ontario the following information concerning the fruit supply:

"We feel we should draw your attention to the fact that Montmorency Red Cherries are the best investment this season to the housewife who is planning to preserve or can a winter's supply of fruit. We say this advisedly and after careful consideration. The Plum crop is practically a total failure and they will command extra high prices, and the same might be said of Peaches. For these reasons, we ask you to impress on your customers, that these cherries are a "good buy," and most certainly the cheapest fruit to can, and you should urge them to buy as many as they can possibly take care of."

ALLIES TO CONTINUE

Will Fight Until Objects Are Attained, Conference Decides

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 27.—Concluding their conference yesterday the allied powers announced their decision to continue the war until the object for which they are fighting is attained. There was an unanimous agreement on all decisions reached during the meeting.

Prowlers Arrested In Ashburnham And Ordered From City

Prowlers in Ashburnham have recently created a feeling of apprehension among the residents who have heard steps on verandahs, door knobs turned and other night sounds about their homes that indicated the presence of persons apparently trying to force an entrance. This morning about three o'clock two Russians were arrested, who failed to give a satisfactory explanation of their actions. They were wandering about the East Ward, and in Police Court this morning were told to leave Peterborough immediately. They gave their names as Issie Maicovitch and John Sheifetz. They had recently been employed by the Leonard Construction Company, but they didn't agree with the work and suddenly quit. It is understood that a special constable has been sworn in for East City. He is an employee of the Leonard Construction Company. It is understood that steps are being taken that should reassure the Ashburnham people of any alarm they may have felt recently.

Richardson Fined For Discharging Gun

John Richardson's excuse for discharging a fire-arm in the vicinity of the Dublin Street bathing beach was that he had been annoyed by boys calling him names. Magistrate Dumble reminded him that he was unjustified in taking the law into his own hands. Richardson was fined $5 and $2.60 costs, to be paid in ten days. He replied that he would go to jail first, but there is a sobering influence in ten days' reflection.

Rice Lake Steamer Service

A Cool Day's Outing at a Trifling Cost—More Publicity Wanted—Mr. Merriam's Views of Rice Lake

The commencement of the regular steamer service between Peterborough and Rice Lake by the steamer "Geneva" has already been much appreciated. The opportunity thus afforded our citizens of a cool water trip down the Otonabee River to Gore's Landing and Harwood is inducing quite a number to take in the day trips and excursions scheduled in the "Geneva's" time-table. The sail is a delightfully refreshing one for anyone wishing to take a day off away from "the heat and burdens of the day," and the reduced return fare of fifty cents, enables all classes to participate in a very pleasant day's outing. Capt. Harris has his old popular crew with him again this season, and the promptness with which the "Geneva" makes her runs and the attention shown by the obliging crew, is recognized by all excursionists. It would be in the interest of the general public, as well as of the "Geneva," if the captain gave more publicity to the announcements of his weekly time-table. Many who never think of taking in these trips until the night before are uncertain about the "Geneva's" sailings, as the time-table only appears occasionally in the newspapers.

Very much the same thing might be said about the steamer "Rainbow," which makes occasional trips from Rice Lake points up to Peterborough. She might carry a good many more passengers, especially on her down trip, if her time-table was published, so that the days and hours of her departure from Peterborough were announced. Perhaps it is largely due to neglect of this kind that the management of both steamers fail, with the error sometimes of thinking that Peterborough people can't be induced to make the trips to Rice Lake more popular. The poor man can take his family on a cool day's sail to the Lake at a very trifling cost. There are no railway connections to make to get there, and with a generously filled picnic hamper and pleasant company, the day can be made a happy and invigorating occasion, with all back at their homes again before seven-thirty, same evening.

Mr. Merriam's Rice Lake Views.

The well-known Harwood citizen, Mr. Merriam, is one of the most busy and active of the oldest inhabitants of this historic village. He carries on a good general store in the village, and is well respected among the inhabitants. He has published a large number of interesting post-card view of Rice Lake, including many of the beauty and historic spots in the neighbourhood. They are on sale at his store, and tourists and others carry away many of these views as souvenirs of their visit to Harwood and Rice Lake points. Mr. Merriam's services is also much sought after as a guide by fishermen visiting the Lake. He also does considerable business in shipping frogs.

HARDLY REALIZES HE IS SAME MAN

"I Can't Describe How Miserable I Felt," Says Connell—Like New Man After Taking Tanlac

"I have improved so much since taking Tanlac I can hardly realize I am the same man, and my wife says she hasn't seen me looking so well in a long time," said Frank Connell, 196 Mavety street, Toronto, employed by the Gunn Packing Co. Mr. Connell has lived in Toronto thirty years and his many friends will be glad to learn of his recovery.

"About six months ago I lost my appetite," Mr. Connell continued, "and soon fell off from a big healthy looking man to almost a skeleton. My stomach was so weak and upset that I could hardly eat a thing and nothing tasted right. The gas that formed on my stomach caused sharp pains around my heart and interfered with my breathing. I would wake up at all hours of the night, had terrible nightmares, and would get up in the mornings as tired as when I went to bed. All my strength and energy seemed to leave me and I was just losing weight and going down hill every day. I would get so weak and dizzy I would have to catch hold of a table to steady myself. Every hour was just an hour of torture, I can't describe how miserable I did feel. I didn't have the color of life in me and my friends were talking about how bad I looked. I would come home from my work in the evenings all played out, fall across the bed and my daughter would have to take off my boots for me.

I had no faith in Tanlac, but I bought a bottle anyway, more to please my wife than anything else, and it has done me a world of good. My appetite returned, I began to eat and enjoy it and feel stronger and better. I have just started on my third bottle and there's no comparison in my looks and feelings. I am now eating three big, hearty meals a day and sometimes I can hardly wait for meal time to come. I sleep like a log every night and get up in the mornings full of life and energy. I am now putting in full time at my work every day, and when I get home in the evenings instead of dropping down on the bed like a dead man, I eat a hearty supper and go out and work around the house.

ROWLAND PREDICTS WHITE SOX V. GIANTS FOR WORLD'S SERIES

NEW YORK, July 26.—"We have a fair lead now, and we expect to play the Giants in the world's series," said Clarence Rowland, manager of the Chicago White Sox, after they had captured two games from the Highlanders at the Polo Grounds yesterday. "We are ready for the home stretch. We have the pitchers, the hitters and the fielders, and the team, as a whole, is confident of victory.

"The Red Sox still are dangerous, but we took some of the starch out of them in Chicago, and we intend to beat them some more when we arrive in Boston. We feel that the Giants are sure winners of the National League pennant; they cannot lose it unless accidents put several of McGraw's best men on the shelf. A world's series between Chicago and New York in October would be a big thing for major league baseball, and you can depend on the White Sox to make a great fight with that object in view.

"With Eddie Collins, Jackson and our other stars hitting, and our pitchers going as they are now, there is nothing in our league to stop it. Will we beat the Giants in the big series? Yes, surely."

Noiseless Blasting Is A Possibility

Although Maxim has not yet invented a "silencer" for use by those engaged in blasting rock, it is possible to split rocks noiselessly. This can be done in several ways, says "Engineering and Contracting" of Chicago. One method consists in drilling holes about 2 1-2 or 3 ins. in diameter, and filling them with small lumps of freshly slaked lime. The drill hole is filled a foot at a time and water poured in to fill the voids, then another foot of lime and more water, and so on up to within the upper sixth of the hole. The top part of the hole is then filled with tamping, well rammed. In less than a quarter of an hour the rock begins to crack.

The holes must be speedily loaded and workmen must remain away from them, for the tamping is occasionally blown out with a great deal of force.

Building and machinery foundations may be removed in this manner without endangering nearby structures.

WIFE MUST PAY PLUMBER.

Husband Had Ordered Work Done on Wifes' Property.

TORONTO, July 26.—"That is an old trick—the husband orders the work done and when the time to collect comes states that the property is in his wife's name," said Judge Morson to-day as he gave judgment against Mrs. Ida Taube for the $25 claimed by Sam Lichman on a plumber's bill. Suit was brought against Mrs. Taube, who owned the property, and her husband, Nathan, who ordered the work done. The court held that as Mrs. Taube's property had benefited by the work she must pay.

NATTY UNIFORMS AT FORT RILEY WIN WAR BRIDES

FORT RILEY, Kas.—Here is a little incident that is happening in every company every week in the officers' training camp:

"Captain, can I get eighteen hours' extra leave of absence this week, sir," a student asks his captain, after he has gone through the red tape necessary to have a talk with him.

"Is it absolutely necessary that you leave before Saturday noon?" the captain asks, in his sharp, quick, military manner.

"Well, sir, yes, sir, almost," the student stammers diffidently. "It is almost necessary. You see, it is this way. The girl I am engaged to is going to get married, and—and—and I'd like to be there."

"Well, can't she get married without you?" the captain snaps back.

"Well, hardly, sir, you see, unless I'm there they won't be any wedding, sir. You see, sir, she is going to marry me, sir," the student quavers.

Must Be Quick About It.

And maybe he gets his extra leave and may be he doesn't. If he lives in Colorado or St. Louis or some other distant place he gets it, and if he doesn't he gets about six hours' extra Saturday morning. All the students get off at noon Saturday and they are free until Monday morning.

Judging from the gossiping around the barracks, it seems that about 25 per cent. of the men have been married since the training camp opened. Every Monday more come back and start telling about their new wives until bunkies have to smother them with pillows, and many of them don't say anything about it until they are married. They just take the regular leave on Saturday noon and return as benedicts on Monday morning.

The other day an officer applied to Col. Tyree Rivers, school commandant, for ten days' leave to be married.

"Ten days to get married in," the colonel remarked, "and war time, too. I only took seven days when I got married, and that was in time of peace. Tell him that he will have to decide on less time if he wants to get away to be married."

It's the Natty Uniform.

Capt. F. B. Terrell was the only officer who could put forth a valid reason for all the marriage ceremonies taking place since the boys have been in camp.

"I think it is the natty uniforms, the leather leggings, the wrist watches and swagger sticks the boys carry when they go home," he said. "I have noticed that whenever there is a man around dressed up in a uniform the girls all flock around him like bees around a clover field, and the poor boy who remains at home and wears civilian clothing hasn't got a chance. It also makes the girls think a little when the boys go back to camp. They know that sooner or later he will be on the firing line in France and may never come back. They get to looking at the serious side of life instead of the frivolous side, and when a girl gets her mind to running along a channel like that and there is a handsome young man around what can you expect?"

Capt. Terrell should know, because he knows about sixteen marriages in his company of men who have asked for extra leave to be married, and there are probably some that he doesn't know about.

Barrier Across The Channel

A British port on the southeast coast.—(By mail)—Across the eastern mouth of the English Channel there still stretches a great barrier, which is one of the principal defences of the allies' vital channel traffic against the visits of the German submarine.

The barrage, they call it barrier in naval phrase, consists in general terms of a series of "obstructions" stretched from huge steel buoys, shore to shore, twenty odd miles. Any craft which strikes one of these obstructions straightway explodes a group of mines which spell finis to the intruder.

Fleet Patrols.

A whole fleet of naval shipping is constantly engaged in maintaining and patrolling the great barrier. Its existence is no secret to the Germans, for they are constantly sending over airplanes to chart the buoys and mark any changes that may have been made since their last visit. And changes are constantly being made.

Here and there along the line are secret opening through which naval pilots may guide legitimate craft on their way, but these openings are frequently altered, and not even the airplanic eye of the Germans can tell which buoy marks safe passage and which marks destruction. If his minelaying submarines wish to enter the channel they must take their chances. They must cross submerged, for the patrol boats are on constant duty, and if they escape the traps while submerged, it can only be said that another miracle has happened.

Night Explosions.

Such miracles seldom happen. Sometimes twice a week, sometimes oftener, explosions are heard at night from the great barrier, indicating that "something" has touched off a group of mines. Immediately the patrols hurry off in the direction of the explosion. What they find there is a well-kept secret.

Last week the Germans tried a new plan to break the barrier. They sent over three seaplanes with orders to descend low over the great barriers, at any risk, and shoot their machine guns into the buoys, thus sinking them and the barrier with them. But the patrol boats were on hand, and two of the three seaplanes never returned to their German home.

BRITISH MUNITIONS OUTPUT IS COMPARED WITH THREE YEARS AGO

At a recent session of the Imperial Parliament, Dr. Addison, Minister of Munitions, told of the following advances which had been made by Britain in the production of munitions since the outbreak of war. He said:—

T.N.T., which formerly cost 1s 9d per lb., is now being made for 8 1-2d.

After nine weeks' fighting in France this spring the supply of shells had only increased by 7 per cent.

There are 183 separate operations in gauging every 18-pounder shell.

We are now turning out 20 times as many machine guns as we did two years ago.

We are now making all the small arms and small-arm unition we require, and are entirely independent of outside supplies.

At Woolwich we had in August, 1914, 10,860 workers, of whom 125 were women.

To-day we have 73,571 of whom 25,000 are women.

EMPIRE RESOURCES TAPPED

To meet the needs of railway transport the resources of the Empire had been tapped, and more than 2,000 miles of track had been supplied, besides nearly 1,000 locomotives, apart from hundreds supplied by the Railway Executive Committee.

Twice as many airplanes were turned out in May as was the case in December last.

During the past six months 1,500,000 steel helmets have been supplied to the troops.

Waste is being prevented. Cartridge cases cost 7s each. They can be refitted at a cost of 4d each.

ONCE GERMAN PRODUCTS.

We have now the plant available for supplying from this country all we need of the following articles: Potash (entirely dependent on Germany before the war, scientific instruments, optical glass (we only produced 10 per cent. of our requirements before the war); machine tools of all kinds; sulphuric acid; superphosphates; tungsten (indispensable for high-speed steel).

INCREASED STEEL OUTPUT

Before the war we produced 7,000,000 tons of steel a year. Now we are producing at the rate of 10,000,000 tons a year. By the end of 1918 the figure will be 12,000,000 tons.

Home supplies of oil being developed.

During the first five months of 1916 the working days lost through disputes were 1,869,000. During the same period this year they were 540,700.

40,000,000 CERTIFICATES.

40,187,381 War Savings Certificates have been purchased by munition workers.

Canteens have been provided for 810,000 workers.

KORNILOFF DEMANDED THE DEATH PENALTY

Russian Commander on Galician Front Would Resign.

PETROGRAD, July 27.—General Korniloff telegraphed from the Galician front to Premier Kerensky, it developed yesterday, threatening to resign his command unless the Government decided to reimpose the death penalty under the findings of field courts martial.

WHIZZ-BANG BOYS AT EMPRESS TO-DAY

It is likely that they will be greeted by a large audience to-night for wherever they have appeared the reports of their programme have been a guarantee of their entertainment.

Cars Must Not Be Left On Streets Market For Park

Chief Thompson finds it necessary to enforce that clause of the traffic by-law which prohibits automobile owners from leaving their cars stand on the business streets for intervals longer than are necessary for the transaction of their business in the stores on those streets.

Hence, beginning to-morrow, automobiles must not be left standing on the main business streets longer than for bare shopping purposes. Chief Thompson desires the public to co-operate with him in this matter, otherwise he will be forced to take proceedings to secure the proper observance of the law. The ordinary traffic has grown too heavy to permit the street to be narrowed and cluttered up by fringes of automobiles left for hours at either curb. Every day Water street is simply a motor row, with the cars blocking the approach to the stores. George street is often similarly filled, and the avenue for traffic is thus cut down by the width of two cars. On Saturdays the streets are too thickly peopled by vehicles of all kinds to tolerate the risk of danger that narrowed streets present.

Park on Market.

Hence, car owners must park their cars on the market, where a man will be in charge to-morrow afternoon and evening. The cars will be so arranged that there will be no inconvenience or difficulty of entering or departing from the parking space. Cars will be permitted to stand in front of stores for reasonably short periods, but, otherwise, they must be parked. This applies to Saturday night as much as to any time during the week. Chief Thompson remarked that this should not be a hardship to any automobile owner, and by its observance the streets would be made safer. He has had to call draymen and drivers of other slow-moving vehicles for driving in the centre of the streets, and their reply was that they had been forced out by the automobiles that lined the side of the street. Hence, in fairness to every person, to safeguard the safety of public and to promote good order, this clause must be recognized, and it goes into force to-morrow.

THE WEATHER

There has been a most agreeable change to cooler conditions to-day, accompanied by a fresh north breeze. Highest to-day, 83 degrees, as compared with 88 yesterday. Last night had the highest temperature of any night this summer, 68 degrees.—W. P.

Britain Is Disappointed With Slow Movement Of The United States

American People Do Not Yet Appreciate the Need of Men in the Field—Wildly Exaggerated Reports of Strength of First Expedition Haven't Been Made Good.

MUST WAIT FOR MEN

(By Ed. L. Keen.)

LONDON, July 28.—(Passed by censor).—This is not a cheerful message, but one which it is believed is necessary that America may know how Englishmen feel during the closing days of the third year of the war.

It is a regrettable fact that never since the retreat from Mons has the gloom been thicker than to-day in London's streets, clubs, homes, and even some Governmental offices.

The immediate cause, of course, is Russia's sudden reversal of form after a totally unexpected and spectacularly successful offensive. But, secondly, the suspicion is prevalent that there has been no appreciative reduction in the submarine menace.

UNITED STATES' SLOWNESS.

Thirdly, there is disappointment over America's slowness in entering whole-heartedly into the war, as exemplified by Congressional obstruction to President Wilson's food programme, the shipping board muss, and so forth.

Fourthly, there is the increased cost of the war, and the prospect of higher taxes.

Fifthy, there is a general weariness of war.

One must not suppose that that whole country is irrevocably plunged into pessimism. On the other hand, it would be equally a mistake to conclude that Premier Lloyd George's cheerfully optimistic public speeches correctly reflect the general popular attitude.

If only the west front were considered, there would be no reason for uneasiness. Although England has so far not erected any "wooden statues" to Field Marshal Haig—as Germany has done to Hindenburg—the British commander-in-chief holds public confidence even more than the Hindenburg of Germany's most successful days. England is thoroughly convinced Haig has taken the Germans' measure; that the enemy is unable seriously to dent the British line, even if reinforced by his whole eastern army.

MUST WAIT FOR UNITED STATES SOLDIERS.

On the other hand, there are mighty few Englishmen so rash as to believe they will be able materially to force back the Germans until Millions of American Sammies arrive. And this despite the fact that the British have never been so tremendously supplied with munitions as now.

The hope of effective Russian military assistance is now practically abandoned. But this is not the most serious feature of the East. There the prospect of a German victory means the opening of vast resources of food and war materials, rendering the North Sea blockade useless and giving the enemy an economic advantage, even if it is granted that the submarine menace can be gradually subdued.

But so far there has been no official denial of the German official and detailed claim of over a million tons of allied and neutral tonnage sunk by submarines in June—with several commanders' reports still to be received.

Regarding American participation, public enthusiasm has been considerably dampened since it has learned that earlier reports as to the size of the first American expedition were wildly exaggerated, and since it realizes the American people do not appreciate the magnitude and the seriousness of the task ahead of them. Moreover, Britishers point out that America has done little or nothing to circumvent German propaganda and spy activities, which those well informed here assure everyone is more extensive, more dangerous, than ever.

Girl Bathers Robbed Of Their Clothing

Coney Island had its "biggest Sunday" once more, this time handling the enormous number of 400,000 persons, many thousand of whom had been at the beach, sleeping on the sands, when the sun rose. The incoming crowds were so great that the police reserves were called to handle the congested traffic. Even wrose conditions resulted when the crowds began the exodus to their homes.

Aside from these annoyances there was one incident which marred an extraordinary day at New York's most famous resort. That was the act of a particularly despicable thief or thieves who stole the street clothing of fifty bathers, of whom thirty-five were girls.

These thirty-five, of varying degrees of youth and beauty, many of them with bare knees, frowned upon by Manhattan's theatrical censorship, crowded about Police Captain Sackett with inquiries of what he was going to do about it. Fifteen young men, also in bathing suits, stood muttering threats in the background. To add to the calamity, none of the chorus of fifty persons had any money. All they had owned was in the clothes that had disappeared.

The big crowd was primarily responsible for this unfortunate ending of what otherwise would have been a perfect day for the unhappy fifty. After one o'clock it had been impossible for arrivals to get into one of the regular bathing houses. Samuel Englestein a thrifty tinsmith, had fitted his house and shop, at No. 77 West Fifth street, into bathing compartments by properly disposed curtains. Each of the fifty counted themselves fortunate to find quarters there.

Under Englestein's system the clothes and valuables of each customer, properly labelled, were placed in a large paper bag.

It was six o'clock when the first of the bathers returned from the beach and failed to find their clothes. A rapidly growing crowd of infuriated persons of both sexes had started to wreck the Englestein premises when the arrival of police reserves stopped what threatened to be a riot. Bernard Cottler, of No. 112 Goerck street, Manhattan, who was said to have been employed as Englestein's helper, went with the crowd to the police station.

There Morris Cohen, of No. 35 Chrisplaint against Cottler, accusing him plaint against Cottler, accusing him of grand larceny. Cohen said he had given to Cottler a diamond ring valued at $375, in addition to his clothing.

At the end of two hours Captain Sackett had pacified most of the young women. To some he had lent money to telephone relatives to bring their clothes. Others borrowed carfare and started for their homes still wearing beach costumes.

Great excitement was caused earlier by a runaway horse which trampled bathers on the beach at Twenty-third street and swam two blocks in the surf before being captured by Policemen John McMillan. Thirty-five persons were injured, three of them seriously. The twenty-two were attended for cuts and bruises by Drs. Harris and Smisson, of Coney Island Hospital. The seriously injured were taken to the hospital.

The runaway horse was in charge of Mrs. Reich who had stopped in front of a store at Surf avenue and Twenty-third street, while Israel Fogel, her nephew, went in to telephone. The horse was frightened by an automobile horn and bolted, throwing Mrs. Reich out of the carriage.

Kicking the carriage to pieces before it had gone a block, the horse dashed across the crowded beach, scattering picnic parties and trampling women and children. Several men attempted in vain to catch the horse when he entered the water. The policeman finally overtook him

NEW YORK, July 27.—A London cable to the Sun says:

Pemberton Billing, according to the Evening Standard, has challenged Major Archer Shee to a twenty-round boxing match at the National Sporting Club as a means of settling the encounter the two had in the palace yard Wednesday evening. Billing suggests the use of Marquis of Queensbury rules, the loser to pay $500 to the Red Cross.

The encounter followed a verbal clash in the House of Commons, in which Shee called Billing a cad, and Billing invited him to go outside and repeat the remark. The two met outside the Parliament Building at the end of the session and several blows were struck. Neither appeared in the House yesterday.

CATTLE PRICES WERE LOWER THIS WEEK

Hot Weather Largely Responsible For Sharp Decline in Prices

"Old Sol" this week joined forces with the Food Controller in the effort to bring down prices. That he succeeded so far as cattle prices are concerned a certain number of gentlemen known to the trade as "drovers" are prepared to bear voluble witness in language almost as hot as the weather itself. The market in fact all through the week has suffered from a severe attack of heat prostration. There was a heavy run of cattle on hand for the opening market on Monday, while at the same time the mercury was aviating away up in the nineties. With such a combination against them, the large packers evidently took counsel and decided that they would not for this week require the usual number of cattle for killing purposes. At all events, something of that sort must have happened, for there was a decided let-up in the demand for cattle, and for a time trade was entirely at a standstill. Under such circumstances the usual thing again happened, and prices began to give away. The give continued practically all through the week, until at the close cattle prices were a good 75c to a dollar below the current prices for the previous week. The slump was very decided in Thursday's market, when it was very difficult to clean up the few cattle left over from the earlier markets, even at the sharp declines. The hot weather spell, which continued steady throughout the week, was held chiefly to blame for the poor demand for beef cattle, and for the lower prices which prevailed.

"The people," it was said, "are not eating meat this weather, but are going in more for fruits and vegetables." This explanation quite overlooks the fact that to live on fruits and vegetables these days is apt to be more expensive than a meat diet, as anyone can testify who may be forced to take their meals in the down town restaurants. At all events cattle prices for the time being are lower than they were. How long the prices will remain so is a question difficult to decide but there are those who say the present decline is but temporary and would advise the farmers who have cattle out on grass to let them stay there for a while rather than rush them to market and sacrifice the profits which may come later.

The easier prices induced a fair demand for stocker cattle from those who have an abundance of good pasture.

Sheep and lambs were affected by the general decline, the latter going off from one to one and a half dollars.

Hogs were not very plentiful the latter part of the week and gradually recovered the earlier declines.

Yes, Builds You Up in 5 to 10 Days
Iron For the Blood and Phosphorus For the Nerves

Weak, anaemic, run-down, nervous sufferers will be glad to know that they can be restored back to their youth vigor by the discovery of this new drug called Sanford Phosphitera with Iron.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. Now you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the curse of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their grave, ruins health, makes you weak, runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron acts directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. Ask druggist today and take two or three tablets of Sanford Phosphorus with Iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger.

This drug does not act like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is dispensed by one druggist in each city. F. C. Weber dispenses it for Peterborough.

Everybody believes in signs when they pay ten cents to get into the side show.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"He never even thanked me," she said, "but broke into a run. The look in his eyes was awful."

The girl had in fact confirmed his worst fears and her neighborly solicitude had merely hastened the end.

Again, the railway officials showed that Siddle had returned from Victoria instead of taking the train to the asylum. Furneaux had guessed aright. The discovery that his keys had been left behind drove the man into a panic of fright.

It took nearly three weeks before the unhappy business was finally disposed of. A Treasury solicitor was given the chance of his career by the medico-legal disquisition which cleared up an extraordinary record. The annals of the disease which predisposed Theodore Siddle to crime went back for many years. He was a fairly wealthy man by inheritance and had adopted the profession of chemistry as a hobby. One fact stood out boldly: He was aware of his hereditary taint, and had settled down in Steynholme, believing that a quiet life, free from care or the distractions of a town, would enable him to overcome it. Probably, the lawyer held, the man owned two distinct individualities, and the baser instincts gradually over-powered the humane ones.

Of course the whole history of those trying days had to come out in open court, and the postmaster's daughter was given a descriptive and pictorial boom which many an actress envied. Peters was restored to grace when he showed plainly that his articles had kept the fickle barometer of public opinion at "set fair," in so far as Grant and Doris were concerned.

"But," as Hart drawled during a dinner of reconciliation, "you need not have been so infernally personal about my hat."

Grant and Doris were married before the year was out. Mr. Martin retired on a pension and the young couple decided that they could never dissociate The Hollies from the tragic memories bound up with its ghost-window and lawn. So the place was sold, and Steynholme knows "the postmaster's daughter" no more. Winter and Furneaux week-ended with them recently at a pretty little nook in Dorset. Hart, just home from the Balkans, travelled from town with the detectives, and Doris, a radiant young matron, was, as flippant as the best of them.

One evening when the men were sitting late in the smoking room, the talk turned on the now half-forgotten drama in which the hapless Adelaide Melhuish played her last role.

"I met Peters in the Savage Club the other night," said Hart, filling the negro-headed pipe with care while he talked, "and he was chortling about his 'psychological study,' as he called it, of that unfortunate chemist. He still clings to the theory that your wife was the intended victim, Grant. Do you agree with him?"

"Rubbish!" cried Furneaux, before his host could answer. "At best, Peters is only a clever ass. Siddle never had the remotest notion of killing Miss Doris Martin, as Mrs. Grant was then. We shall never know for certain just what happened, but there are elements in the affair which give ground for reasonable guess-work. The first thing that impressed Winter and me—at least, I suppose I really evolved the idea, although my bulky friend elaborated it" (whereat Winter smiled forgivingly, and beheaded a fresh Havana)—"was the complete noiselessness of the crime. Here we had Mr. Grant startled by the face at the window, and actually searching outside of the house for the ghostly visitant, while Miss Doris was gazing at The Hollies from the other side of the river, and not a sound was heard, though it was a summer's night, without a breath of wind, and at an hour when the splash of a fish leaping in the stream would have created a commotion. Now, Miss Melhuish was an active and a well built young woman, an actress, too, and therefore likely to meet an emergency without instant collapse. Yet she allows herself to be struck dead or insensible without cry or struggle! How do you account for it?"

"True," agreed Furneaux. "I only brought it in as a sop. But to continue, as the tub-thumper says. Isn't it permissable to assume that Siddle accompanied the lady, either by prior arrangement or by contriving a meeting which looked like mere chance? We know that she went to his shop. We know, too, that he was clever and unscrupulous, and any allusion to Grant would stir his wits to the uttermost. He would see instantly how interested Miss Melhuish was in the owner of The Hollies, while she, a smart Londoner, would recognise in Siddle an informant worth all the rest of the babblers in Steynholme. At any rate, no matter how the thing was brought about it is self-evident that Siddle brought his intended victim into the grounds and told her of the small uncovered window through which she could peer at Grant after Miss Doris had gone. He showed her which path to use, and stayed her flight when Grant rose from the chair. She was close to him and quite unafraid, finding in him an ally. They were purposely hidden in the gloom of dense foliage, and remained there until Grant had closed the window again. Then, and not till then, did the murderer strike, probably stifling her with his free hand. He had the implement in his pocket. The rope was secreted among the bushes. He could carry through the whole wretched crime in little more than a minute. And his psychology went far deeper than Peters gave him credit for. He had weighed up the situation to a nicety. No matter who found the body, Mr. Grant was saddled with a responsibility which might well prove disastrous, and was almost sure to affect his relations with the Martin household. For instance, nothing short of a miracle could have stopped Robinson from arresting him on a charge of murder."

"To the person of ordinary intelligence—yes."

"After that," said Winter, "there is nothing more to be said. Let us see who secures the pocket marvel as a partner at auction."

* * * * *

As a fitting end to the strange story of wayward love and maniacal frenzy which found an unusual habitat in a secluded hamlet like Steynholme, a small vignette of its normal life may be etched in. The trope is germane to the scene.

On a wet afternoon in October, Hobbs and Elkin had adjourned to the Hare and Hounds. Tomlin was reading a newspaper spread on the bar counter. He was alone. The day was Friday and the last "commercial" of the week had departed by the mid-day train.

"Wot's yer tonic?" demanded the butcher.

"A glass of beer," threw Elkin over his shoulder. He had walked to the window, and was gazing moodily at the sign of the "plumber and decorator" who had taken Siddle's shop. The village could not really support an out-and-out chemist, so a local grocer had elected to stock patent medicines as a side line.

Tomlin made play with a beer-pump.

"Where's yer own?" inquired Hobbs hospitably.

Elkin came and drank. After an interlude, Tomlin ran a finger down a column of the newspaper.

"By the way, Fred, didn't you tell me about that funny little chap, Furno, the 'tec, buyin' some pictures of yours?" he said.

"I did. Had him there, anyhow," chuckled Elkin.

"How much did you stick 'im for?"

"Three guineas."

"They can't ha' bin this lot, then, though I've a notion it wur the same name, 'Aylesbury Steeplechase.'"

"What are you talking about?"

"This."

Tomlin turned to the paper, and Elkin read:

"At their monthly art sale on Wednesday Messrs. Brown, Jenkins and Brown, disposed of an almost unique set of colored prints, by F. Smyth, dated 1841. The series or six represented various phases of the long defunct Aylesbury Steeplechase, 'The Start,' 'The Brook,' 'The In-and-Out,' and so on to 'The Finish.' It is understood that this notable series, produced during the best period of the artist, and at the very zenith of Smyth's fame, were acquired recently by a Sussex amateur at a low price. Bidding began at fifty guineas, and rose quickly to one hundred and twenty, at which figure Messrs. Caraioli and Brusohi became the owners.

Elkin read the paragrahph twice, until the words burnt into his brain.

"No," he said thickly. "They are not mine. No such luck!"

ECZEMA Has Stayed Cured For 15 YEARS

THE Ketchesons are well known as pioneer settlers of Hastings County, and none of them probably has a wider acquaintance than Mr. W. D. Ketcheson, who was formerly Division Court Bailiff of the Trenton Court, and is now living at 278 Front street, Belleville, Ont.

Over fifteen years ago Mr. Ketcheson was cured of an extremely severe case of eczema and piles by Dr. Chase's Ointment, and he writes now to say that the cure proved a permanent one.

In 1897 Mr. Ketcheson wrote as follows:—"I was troubled for thirty years with itching piles and eczema. I could not sleep at night, and when I got warm the itching was terrible. Eczema covered my legs down to the knees, perfectly raw. I have tried every preparation I could hear of. Seeing Dr. Chase's Ointment advertised, I procured a box, and this Ointment effected a complete cure."

On Sept. 28th, 1912, Mr. Ketcheson wrote as follows:—"I had suffered for many years from eczema and piles, and had tried doctors and everything I could hear of in vain. Reading about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I purchased it at once, and was soon completely cured. That was fifteen years ago, so there can be no doubt of the cure being a permanent one. I have met a great many people who have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

In this year of 1917 Mr. Ketcheson again confirms his cure, and expresses his wishes that others may benefit by his experience. Refuse to accept substitutes.

FRENCH GENERAL CAUSE OF CHAGRIN IN SOLDIER.

Taken for Mud-stained Poilu, He Cheerfully Obeys Request to Help Carry a Jug.

SALONIKA.—General Bailloud, commanding part of the French expeditionary force in the Balkans, is so popular with his men that nearly every good story originating in his corps is either about him or attributed to him. The latest anecdote going the rounds tells how a soldier of the rough and ready style was returning to quarters near Monastir with a water-jug in each hand. Coming across another mud-stained "poilu" sitting beside the road, he hailed him:

"Hello, old man."

"Hello," replied the other.

"Say, can't you carry one of these jugs for me?"

"Sure," and they went on together.

"Would you believe it," said the first soldier, "they've chucked me into the grade of corporal."

"What of that," replied the other, "didn't they chuck me into the grade of general?"

After nearly dropping his jug, the soldier drew closer and made out three faint stars on a mud-stained sleeve. He drew himself up at attention and saluted.

"Walk on, corporal," said General Bailloud, who wouldn't consent to give up his jug.

New Slip-On Frocks The Essence Of Simplicity

They Are Made Without Fastenings of Any Kind

Interesting Summer Lingerie

New York, July 26.

There is something new under the sun in feminine attire! The agitation for simplicity in dress which has been interesting certain designers and many women of fashion is responsible for a new type of frock, which is adjusted without buttons, hooks and eyes, snaps or any kind of fastenings. This sounds almost fabulous, but it is easily explained. These dresses slip on over the head, and the opening at the neck and the adjusting of the waistline by an elastic permit the slipping off and on to be an easy matter. The elastic gives and the neck opening is sufficiently large, so that it requires no special feat of agility to get in and out of these dresses, as was the case with some of the very first types of slip-on frocks.

If you have the least doubt as to the smartness of such a frock look at the dress pictured here. Certainly you would never suspect it of being differently constructed from any other of the smart, simple dresses that are now in vogue! The model above is developed in black satin with a white satin collar and facings of white satin for the long pocket extensions at the sides of the skirt. The belt of black satin is adjusted separately over the casing on which the dress is drawn up at the waist-line. Although the lines of dresses have been absolutely straight, for the most part, the bouffant effect at the hips seems to be growing in importance more and more. Sometimes it is acquired by soft drapery cleverly handled and sometimes by pocket extensions as in the model shown here.

A SLIP-ON FROCK REQUIRING NO FASTENING.

Summer Lingerie.

There is a great deal of interest in lingerie, even though it is long past January, the month that is usually devoted to thinking about it. Nowadays there is so much that is attractive in new lingerie that in early summer the shops display as many tempting things in the line of lingerie as it is their rule to do in the first month of the year. French underwear is the thing this season, and everyone knows how utterly charming this fine lingerie always is. The sheerest materials are used with quantities of fine Valenciennes lace insertion and edging, as well as the most exquisite hand embroidery. Lace is sometimes applied with hemstitching at the edge and this gives a much daintier effect than the plain stitching while it is just as practical.

Beige and Sand-Colored Dresses.

At every turn these days one is confronted by numbers of beige and sand-colored dresses. These are in the light weight wool fabrics, chiefly gabardine, wool jersey and the very closely knitted fabrics. It is very seldom that they are not trimmed with soutache, beads or the machine chain-stitch embroidery. And in most cases these trimmings are in self-color. Sometimes a contrasting color appears, however and dark red is one of the most effective against sand color. When dresses of this type are not trimmed with embroidery in any of the popular forms, their only finish is a collar of white satin or organdy, and sometimes a patent leather or suede belt.

Speaking of the popularity of soutache and chain-stitching, both of these now appear on hats. There are some new tam-o'-shanters of satin, with the crowns covered with either soutache or the stitching.

Why Some Girls Remain Unmarried

If a girl wishes to be an old maid let her constantly be in the company of a crowd of girls and she will accomplish her purpose without the slightest bit of strategy on her part. She might dodge and hide and send messages "not at home," sick headaches, previous engagements and a score of other stock excuses and still be unable to escape cupid's arrow, but let her place a half-dozen giggling, tittering girls about her, and she will find her path free from any signs of the tiny god of love.

No matter how much a man loves a girl he hates to break through a fortress of the opposite sex to win her. It is like making love to her upon an open stage and few men like to wear their hearts upon their sleeves. How many girls would like to have a dozen young men about when they want to say a few words to their fiance?

And what man would expect a young girl to entertain all his boy friends, and yet no man by a young lady expects dear Dick to come right into a room "filled with girls," not to blush and not to stammer and to entertain them all for several hours, while they giggle, laugh and make dear Dick wish he had remained at the club among his own kind.

Surely no girl likes a man who is constantly with the boys. She feels that he is only a "man's man" and only perfectly happy when in masculine company. She feels that he is the type of man who would laughingly say: "A good cigar is a smoke, but a woman is only a woman."

And so a man feels awkward, and ill at ease when he has stolen a girl away from a host of other girls. He feels like an intruder; that perhaps she wishes he had remained at home and not taken her away from her own sex.

A man can never be perfectly happy unless he feels that the girl he is with would rather be with him than with any other person on earth, and no man ever feels quite sure of that when he knows the girl he is with has "oodles" of girl friends. Nor does he feel that perfect confidence in her that he could if he knew she was not constantly in girls' company.

Surely no man wishes to play the role of lover in a clown's cap and bells! Usually the average young man about to make love or seek a girl's hand in marriage dreads her relatives. Some spinster aunt or red-faced father is the bane of his life, but family obstacles are nothing compared to this "bunch" of girls.

The relatives are soon conquered when once "a declaration" has been made, and the bashful youth begins to think the spinster aunt might have been pretty in her younger days or that after all the old, red-faced father isn't such a bad sort. But those girls! They are always there, and just when he wants to see her most of all alone! Strange to say, time only makes matters worse; the more he knows them the worse he dreads meeting them!

There is a certain type of girl who is never alone. She has a chum who knows more about her than her own mother, and who has complete control over her. This type of girl practically has two homes—her own and the home of her chum. She must have whatever the chum has, and if she is separated for any length of time she is blue and life loses its joy and thrill. But the young man in the case begins to think. Does he have to marry the chum, too? If he married the girl some one would have to be neglected, either the chum—or possibly he would be.

If love has to stop to think or to reason cupid grows tired of his little game and falls asleep. When a man begins to delve beneath the surface of questions and put his thinking cap on, his heart turns to ice.

Therefore if a girl really wishes to marry it is well for her to live her own life without depending too much upon the smiles of a chum and it is well for her not to build a living fortress of giggling, simpering girls about her. For few men are heroes, and care to fight their way among a throng of girls to reach their goal, and even if they were heroes, they haven't tried to stand about and wait for the ladies to disperse. Remember, no man ever cares for the limelight when he is making love; he prefers the moon!

This is a busy, practical age, and when a man is ready to marry, he proposes in a practical way; in ordinary, everyday talk, free from poetical phrases or endearing terms, and he expects his wife to be a busy, practical woman. When he calls upon her he doesn't care to meet a bevy of girls whom he cares nothing about; he wants to see his future wife, and at once. Perhaps he can only spare half an hour before returning to his den and the chase for the dollar.

So if a girl wishes to marry, let her show her good common sense and let her be dressed and ready; let her be alone and free to give this busy man the time to talk that he needs. The days of our grandmothers have long since passed, when it was thought proper for a young girl not to appear too anxious, to be late in dressing and to fully illustrate that one is a very popular young lady.

RECIPES WORTH KEEPING AT HAND.

Cornmeal Loaf.

Boil until tender two pounds fresh lean pork. Run through meat grinder, and season with salt and pepper. Add to the water in which the meat has been boiled enough more to make two quarts. Turn in the meat. When near the boiling point stir in slowly enough cornmeal to make a thick mush. Let cook slowly 40 minutes, then turn into molds. When cold slice and fry. This makes a delicious, nutritious, and inexpensive dish.

Rive Au Gratin.

Steam or boil one cup rice, allow 1 tablespoon salt for seasoning. Butter a baking dish and cover with a layer of the rice, dot with butter, sprinkle with grated cheese, and a slight sprinkle of cayenne. Repeat alternate layers until rice is used. Pour on milk to half the depth of cracker crumbs, and bake in oven until the cheese melts and crumbs are brown.

Whipped Cream Tarts.

Make a rich pie crust, and bake in tarts. When cool add the whipped cream in fancy designs and place a crystallized cherry on the top. These are delicious and easy to make.

CEREAL AND MEAT.

Place alternate layers of cold cereal (cut or mashed into fragments) and minced left-over meat in a baking dish. Make the top layer of minced meat and bread crumbs. If the mixture is too dry, pour over it enough milk to moisten. Place in medium oven until heated through and browned a little on top.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Flesh and Blood Fortune

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Edward Clavering inherited $10,000 on the death of his father, and not being inclined to settle down to a humdrum business life he looked about him for something more exciting. That was a time when gold was discovered in the Klondike, and he decided to go out there, look about him and if he saw a chance for a fortune invest his money.

The first thing he came across to interest him was a girl in the house in which he lodged. She was not the daughter of the proprietor, but an orphan who was trying to keep soul and body together as hired help. He noticed her from her personal attractiveness, a sadness that was on her young face and the fact that she was far more refined and better educated than her employers. He wondered that she did not occupy a higher and more lucrative position than servant in a boarding house in a mining district. But this was explained by her having been left unprotected and uncared for when she was but sixteen years of age. She was only eighteen when Ned first saw her.

Her father, a well to do merchant in Pennsylvania, had been seized by the gold fever and taken her and her mother to Alaska. Her mother had died on the way out; her father had been relieved of his money by mining sharps and had died from disease induced by exposure in a vigorous climate.

This is a bare synopsis of the story Ned got from Alice Woodville and was quite enough to excite his sympathy. Sympathy induces love, and he soon found himself interested in the unfortunate girl. But Ned was one of those fellows who look upward instead of downward in all that pertained to the life on the threshold of which he stood. His family held their heads high, being all persons of social prominence. The bare thought of writing his mother that he was about to marry a servant appalled him. He therefore refrained from making love to Alice Woodville, and in order to separate himself from her went into an unoccupied cabin, where he kept house as a bachelor.

Wherever there is money for investment, especially in new countries, there are persons who are intent upon getting it without a return. Clavering had listened to Alice Woodville's story as to how her father had bought a worthless mine and resolved to profit by the information. He would hold on to his money till he had proved that what he proposed to purchase was what it purported to be.

One day a woman came to him, who said that she had understood that he was looking for mining property. Her husband had been prospecting for a long while and had finally struck a vein that would make him rich. He owned, however, but fifty feet of ground, and it was essential that he should buy at least fifty feet more on the west of his property, since the vein widened in that direction. He dared not reveal his secret because there were so many rascals about that he feared he would be beaten out of his find. She had, unknown to him, come to Ned to beg him to help them out and share their good fortune.

Ned spent some time, looking into the matter, which seemed to promise a large return. He finally agreed that he would select from the mine himself certain specimens of the earth, have it analyzed and if it was as had been represented he would buy the adjoining ground, put in what other money was required and take a half interest in the whole.

He selected an assayer whose reputation for integrity was of the highest and gave him the specimens of dirt he had taken from the mine. The report was far beyond what had been claimed. Ned's sense of honor led him to give the results of the analyses to the wife of the owner, offering his consent that she should use it elsewhere to her and her husband's advantage. After consulting with him she told Ned that they would prefer to carry out the arrangement with him, since he had convinced them that they could trust him. The papers were drawn up, an option was secured on the adjoining property, and the transaction was to be signed and sealed on the following morning.

That night Ned went to sleep thinking of the fortune he was to take back with him when he returned southward. In the middle of the night he was awakened by a rap on the cabin door. Getting out of bed and putting on a fur overcoat, for the night was cold, he opened the door. There stood a girl, whom he recognized by her voice as Alice Woodville.

"Don't sign those papers," she said hurriedly.

"Why not?"

"The mine has been salted."

"How do you know?"

"Mr. Hawkins told those people about you. They have planned to swindle you." Hawkins kept the boarding house where Alice was employed, and "salting" a mine means mixing gold dust with the ore to be assayed. "They were talking about the matter tonight in the next room to me, and I heard them."

"But I selected the ore myself."

"I heard them say that they had spent a lot of money for gold dust to put in the hole they had dug."

The papers were not signed. Clavering took a fortune back with him when he returned, but not in gold. It was a flesh and blood fortune in the person of Alice Woodville.

LUTHER BURBANK VERY LOW.

Noted Horticulturist Stricken with Appendicitis at Santa Rosa.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 26.—Luther Burbank is lying at the point of death at his home in Santa Rosa Avenue, Santa Rosa. The noted horticultural scientist was stricken on Tuesday with appendicitis, and attending physicians only hope for his recovery. Late Tuesday night Dr. Joseph Shaw, one of the physicians who have been at his bedside since he was taken ill, said:

"While Mr. Burbank's condition is somewhat improved, it is extremely serious. He is suffering from appendicitis. I am hopeful we may be able to avoid an operation. There is a chance of his recovery."

SEEMS EVERYONE HEARD ABOUT IT

All Want to try new drug that dries up corns so they lift out

Good news spreads rapidly and druggists here are kept busy dispensing freezone, the ether discovery of a Cincinnati man, which is said to loosen any corn so it lifts out with the fingers.

Ask at any pharmacy for a quarter ounce of freezone, which will cost very little, but is said to be sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You apply just a few drops on the tender, aching corn and instantly the soreness is relieved, and soon the corn is so shriveled that it lifts out without pain. It is a sticky substance which dries when applied and never inflames or even irritates the adjoining tissue.

This discovery will prevent thousands of deaths annually from lockjaw and infection heretofore resulting from the suicidal habit of cutting corns.

ARENA FOR WIN-THE-WAR CONVENTION

TORONTO, July 27.— The Ontario non-partisan Win-the-War Convention on Thursday and Friday of next week will be held in the Arena, the largest building in the City. The announcement of the convention has already produced so many requests for enrolment, said Mr. Gould, the Vice-Chairman of the Executive, to-day, that the other halls under consideration for the great war conference had to be abandoned.

It is evident that the call for a truly popular convention looking for deliverance from the bondage of partyism will be the most welcome event in Canadian national affairs since Confederation. Citizens who have called themselves by every political name unite in saying that the convention is just what is needed to express the deep patriotism of the people who care intensely for success in the war and wish to translate their feelings into effective non-partisan action during the coming election. We have been obliged to take the arena because no other place would do.

Ladies organizations want to be present at a gathering which promises to be epoch-making in Ontario and Canadian history. We are assured of unique support. From one riding alone fifty liberals and fifty Conservatives will attend and every mail brings lists of public spirited men who are with us heart and soul.

Asked as to the attitude of the political parties to the convention, Mr. Gould said he knew very little about that and was not worrying. One prominent politician from a riding near Toronto, who had been in to see him, had said that there was mighty small chance of his being re-elected unless he got "under the wing of the Win-the-War Convention."

While a woman may not care for a vacation she hates to admit that she passed the entire summer at home.

POISONED SALT KILLS STOCK.

SACRAMENTO, July 26.—Poisoned salt placed on the stock ranches of Modoc County, North California, has caused the death of a large number of hogs and cattle, in the opinion of Dr. Charles Keane, State Veterinarian, who completed an investigation the other day.

In making known the result of his work Dr. Keane indicated a belief that enemies of the Government or of stockmen were responsible for the poison plot.

Three Babies Born Infirm Allowed To Die By Doctor

CHICAGO, Ill., July 26.—The Meter baby, "sentenced to death" by Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, because of physical and mental infirmities, died this afternoon just twenty-four hours after she was born. An investigation was started at once by the Health Commissioner despite an announcement by State's Attorney Hoyne that there was nothing criminal in Dr. Haiselden's action.

"I can see absolutely nothing criminal in the attitude of Dr. Haiselden toward the Meter baby," said Mr. Hoyne. "Certainly, from all I can learn of the case there is no basis for prosecution."

In the afternoon, before the baby's death, Dr. John Dill Robertson, Health Commissioner, sent detectives to the German-American Hospital. They met Dr. Haiselden and were assured everything possible was being done for the child.

It was learned two other babies were being permitted to die. The information came from Dr. Haiselden.

"There are two other hopeless babies under my treatment and they, too, are being permitted to die," he said. "I suppose the authorities would raise a great disturbance if they knew I had three cases in all.

But, as with the Meter baby, there is no suffering. The Meter baby was brought to me from West Pullman yesterday a few hours after she was born. Her father was a mechanic, less than twenty-one years old. Her mother is twenty years old. Her grandmother—who, by the way, became a mother just eleven days ago—is the mother of twelve children, only one of whom is dead.

"When I saw the baby I knew she had lived too long already. The case was absolutely hopeless. Her death was only a matter of a few hours, and there was no suffering.

"The first of the other babies is five months old, born to a family named Mattys. He was brought here a month ago, paralyzed and with the head incurably affected.

"The third baby is Paul Hadsima, three months old. The head is defective and there is a malady that makes breathing an agony for the infant. I am prescribing enough paragoric to keep him drugged until death ends his suffering.

In doing this I feel I am doing the greatest service to humanity."

Germany Is On The Offensive On Whole Of The Battlefronts

Teutonic Armies Are Still Assaulting the Broken Russian Lines on the Eastern Front---Crown Prince Attempts Powerful Drive on French Positions on the West Front---Seventh and Eighth Russian Armies May Be Cut Off.

FRENCH REPULSE HEAVY ATTACKS

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, July 28.—Germany is really on the offensive on all the battle fronts, according to official statements to-day.

Her armies are still assaulting the crumbling Russian lines in Galicia and Bukowina on the eastern front.

On the west front, the Crown Prince has for ten days been conducting a powerful drive on the French positions in Champagne and along the Chemin Des Dames.

To-day's British official statement mentioned considerable activity of enemy artillery in the neighbourhood of Armentieres (on the Belgian-French line) and north of Ypres into the Nieuport coast sector. Front despatches have indicated long continued duration of this fire and detailed its character as sufficiently violent as to indicate possible bombardment, preparatory to an infantry attack.

Russia's resistance was apparently solidifying the disastrous breakdown in the Tarnopol-Stanislau sector, but in spite of growing resistance, the Teutonic armies are still advancing.

SUBS. COUNTED TWO VICTIMS.

LONDON, July 28.—The American bark Carmela and Norwegian steamer Thorsdale, were sunk by German submarines. The crews were rescued.

FRENCH REPEL GERMAN ASSAULTS.

PARIS, July 28.—A series of new German attacks following violent bombardments around Bray en Laonnois, Epines de Chevrigny and Hurtebise (on the Chemin Des Dames), were hurled back by French defenders, to-day's official report declared. Heavy losses were inflicted on the assaulting waves. In the Champagne the War Office detailed great artillery activity around Mont Haut, and on both banks of the Meuse.

ONE RUSSIAN ARMY MAY BE CUT OFF.

BERLIN, via London, July 28.—The Tageblatt correspondent with the Austro-Hungarian armies in Southern Galicia, reports that vital railroad communication from Kolomea to Csernowitz is seriously menaced and threatens to cut off the Russian eighth army and remnants of the seventh. Since the fall of Tarnopol sixteen towns north and south of the Dniester, and more than a hundred villages have been cleared of Russians.

HAIG REPORTS ENEMY ACTIVITY.

LONDON, July 28.—Field Marshal Haig's report to-day says: "In the neighbourhood of Armentieres to the North of Ypres and in the Nieuport sector, the enemy artillery was engaged in considerable activity.

"South of Armentieres at night we raided the enemy. East of Oostaverne an enemy raid was repulsed."

Unofficial front despatches have recently described the German fire around Nieuport and Oostaverne (in Belgium) as approaching the intensity of drum fire.

FIFTY RUSSIAN WOMEN CASUALTIES.

LONDON, July 28.—Russia's women fighters in the "Legion of Death" suffered fifty casualties in their brilliant baptism of fire, according to a Reuter's despatch received here to-day. The roll included two killed and eight taken prisoners.

GERMANS PREPARING A NEW MOVE?

LONDON, July 28.—Hint that Germany was preparing some new move on the west front was given to-day in a continuation, for the third successive day, of the violent enemy artillerying in the seacoast sector of the British line, and of an attempted raid around Costaverne.

AN EUROPEAN PORT July 28.—Another contingent has safely arrived and disembarked. Representatives of the General Staff watched the disembarkation.

Note—Presumably they are United States troops.

NOT MOVING PRISONERS FROM ENGLAND.

BERLIN, July 28.—It is officially announced that the German government has been informed that no negotiations are in progress with the United States for the purpose of transferring German war prisoners from England to America.

COLONEL SAM SHARPE ON MISSING LIST.

He has been at the front with his battalion six months, and his unit has suffered casualties.

RUSSIA NEEDS A BILLION DOLLARS.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Russia wants ships and munitions, the Russian Embassy declared to-day. She can get these through American credit, and her needs are such that $1,000,000,000 at least would be required to fill up the gaps.

Russia is willing to place her rich resources of oil, timber and minerals as collateral for a great American loan.

(By Henry Wood, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, July 28.—Germany has used one-third of her whole army since April 16 in the fighting on the Aisne and Champagne fronts. The terrific losses inflicted upon this great force has been such that the enemy is now entirely without reserve of human material—except the 1918 class of youths. Calculations to-day showed that since April 16, the Germans have used seventy-one divisions—approximately one-third of the total fighting forces at Hindenburg's disposal. Raids have developed the fact that in many cases German regiments have been totally abolished, their offensives being transferred to fill the ranks of other units decimated in fierce fighting against the French.

C. P. R. Conductors In West Want 40 Per Cent. Increase And 8 Hours

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, July 8.—Canadian Pacific conductors of western lines have asked from the company an increase in wages amounting to forty per cent. over the present schedule, and an eight hour day.

Australia Spreads Kitchener Rumour

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, July 28.— Australian war prisoners in Germany are sending back home vague references such as "K is here," supporting the rumour that Lord Kitchener did not perish on the battleship Hampshire, according to Miss Kate Rooney, of Douglaston, L. I., to-day. She has just returned from Australia. One letter, Miss Rooney declared, said: "The world will be astounded when it is known who is a prisoner here."

SHOE FACTORY IS PLANNED BY THE B. F. ACKERMAN CO.

Harness Business Has Shrunk Before the Encroaching Automobile —Ask City For Fixed Assessment at $23,790

BY-LAW VOTE ON SEPT. 6

The decline of the harness and saddlery business as an effect of the automobile's displacement of the horse, has moved the firm of B. F. Ackerman Son & Co., Ltd., to consider the establishment of a boot and shoe factory. This announcement was conveyed to the Manufacturers' committee of the City Council last night by Mr. W. C. Ackerman and Mr. E. W. Borbridge, representing the company, with a request that their present assessment of $23,790 be fixed at that sum for ten years.

After the details of the proposal were discussed, the committee decided to prepare a by-law embodying the agreement with the company and present it to the people for their approval on September 6th.

Mr. Ackerman stated that it was the general experience of harness factories that the expansion of the automobile industry and the increasing employment of motor driven vehicles and machinery that hitherto have been drawn by horses, have seriously affected their business. Some factories have been forced to discontinue operations because of the decreased demand for harness. Realizing the recent trend in their industry, the Ackerman company have been planning to engage in the manufacture of shoes. If these plans materialize Mr. Ackerman stated that the company would at the outset install machinery to produce three hundred pairs of boots a day. One employee turned out on an average of ten pairs a day. This would mean that in the beginning thirty hands would be employed and the maximum output of the machinery would be 900 pairs a day. It was expected that the proposed boot making department would begin with thirty-eight hands, and it was expected that this would soon be doubled. In the agreement which is to be drawn up, the company will be received to employ thirty hands within six months after beginning operations. In the past, Mr. Ackerman stated, the company had never turned away help. In fact it never had sufficient for its requirements. If the city would fixe the assessments as requested, the company would be certain of the amount of its overhead charges during the first years of its new industry, and it would preclude the necessity of considering any location other than Peterborough.

Mr. Ackerman added that in the beginning the present building would provide the space required. An addition or a new building might be needed later, and in that event the company owned the lot immediately north of the factory.

Summer Reading At Trebilcock's For Sixty-Five Cents

Hundreds of Excellent Books Offered at Sixty-five Cents—A Mistake in Price

In Wednesday's issue of the Examiner appeared an advertisement concerning a list of summer novels for sale by Trebilcock Bros., at fifty-nine cents each. The price advertised should have been sixty-five cents each instead of fifty-nine. At the correct price of sixty-five cents each of the books offered are excellent value. The list advertised represents but a fraction of the stock in hand. Trebilcock Bros. have over one thousand titles to choose from. During the hot weather there is nothing more enjoyable than a good book. Holiday seekers should take a number of books on their vacation.

BROTHERS MEET DEATH FIGHTING SIDE BY SIDE

PTE. BENJ. RIPPINGALE

PTE. STANLEY RIPPINGALE

Peterborough Brothers Are Killed In Action On The Same Day

Ptes. Benjamin and Stanley Rippingale, Sons of Mr. Alfred Rippingale, Parnell Street, Fall Fighting Side by Side —Went Overseas With 93rd Battalion and Had Been Serving With Same Machine Gun Section in France—To-day's General Military News.

Two Peterborough brothers, Ptes. Benjamin and Stanley Rippingale, the sturdy bright young sons of Mr. Alfred Rippingale, 464 Parnell St., have fallen on the field of honour, fighting side by side in the same machine gun section. "Killed in action" was the tragic message received from Ottawa yesterday, and broken to the grief-stricken parents by Rev. Mr. Grobb, of All Saints' Church, of which church the two young soldiers were members. It is one of the saddest tragedies of the war from a local viewpoint, and the community will unite in expressions of sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Rippingale upon the terrible loss they have sustained. The two boys, who enlisted here in the 93rd Battalion, and went over with Lieut.-Col. Johnston's unit, went to France in the same draft, and lived and fought alongside each other in the machine gun section to which they were attached. Now comes the tragic news that both were killed in action on July 16th, just one year from the day upon which, with so many more brave Peterborough boys, they sailed for overseas. Pte. Stanley Rippingale was only eighteen years of age, while his brother was twenty-two.

18th Can. Machine Gun Co.,
Whitley Camp, 30/6/17.

My Dear Mother,—I have a little spare time this afternoon and take great pleasure in writing you these few lines. I have got the use of a typewriter for the afternoon and I am writing to you and some more of my many friends. I might say my hand is all better again, but I have a big scar left.

Changing the subject we are having very cold weather here now, and it has been raining for the last three days. I might say that we are going to France for sure the first of August. All the commanding officers of this division were called up the other day to headquarters and the head officer said that our whole division was going over for sure in the first week in August. That means that we will be in France when the cold weather starts this fall but, however, we have certainly got a bunch of perfect gentlemen in our section, and I would willingly go over the top with any one of them.

We were out for a three-day bivouac last week. Each of us took two blankets, overcoat and rubber sheet. The first day we marched about 20 miles, and our officer picked out a nice camping ground beside a river where we camped for the night. Everybody was very tired when we reached our destination, but we had some stew cooked on the cook waggons and made a very good meal. I went to a private house near the woods where we camped and got some milk and fresh butter from the lady, and had it for breakfast the next day. We got up about 7:00 a.m. in the morning after having a peaceful sleep in the pines, went down to the river and had a swim before breakfast which everybody enjoyed and found quite refreshing. After having some porridge, bread and coffee we took our guns out through the woods and practised a little open warfare until eleven o'clock, when the officer got us all together and treated us to cigars. I want to try and get six days' leave next week. I am going to have every day I can get before the first of August, because I might come through it all right. I France, although I have been very lucky so far since I joined the army. I might come through it al right. I hope so anyway, because I sure want to get back to dear old Canada again some time. I would just love to get back home for Xmas, 1918, but I know right now I won't, so what's the use of worrying, the war will last for five years yet, and I want to spend one year in London after the war is over, providing I am alive.

I am enclosing a snap for you of part of our section. We had it taken last week while we were out on the three-days' bivouac. As you will notice we all have steel helmets on our heads. Don't they look very funny. You can't see me in this one because I took the picture myself, but I just thought I would send it home. I will like to look at it perhaps some day after the war is over. I had a letter from Fred last week. He said he had been up to see you on the Sunday.

I had my first strawberries this season to-day, and believe me, they tasted good. I suppose you have a good garden this year. I sure would like to have some cabbage and cream, but you will have all the more when I do get back. I hope you got the photographs of my two friends, because I want them saved for remembrance sake.

Well mother, my time is limited. I will write you again in a few days. Hoping you are all well as this leaves me, I remain,

Your loving son,
PTE. L. FRANKS.

Mrs. Wm. Stanley, of the Soldiers' Wives and Mothers' Club has received the following letter:

France, June 29, 1917

Dear Friend:—

Just a few lines to thank you very much for your kindness in thinking of us boys in the trenches. I received your socks when we were in the front line and appreciated them very much indeed. I will put my address in so you can send a line.

PTE. C. A. WELLS, 806339,
No. 4 Company, 15th Platoon,
2nd Canadian Infantry Battalion
France.

The following ruling by the Canadian Patriotic Fund at Ottawa, and made public by Capt. Burnham to-day, will be of interest to soldiers and their families:

Some time ago a soldier at the front wrote to Mr. Burnham complaining that his wife had to undergo a serious operation, and that the Patriotic Fund in Peterborough had expressed the opinion that they would be unable to pay anything towards it. Mr. Burnham took the matter up with Sir Herbert Ames, who has made the following ruling to the Peterborough Patriotic Fund:

"In respect to the case of Private Blank, who I understand is making application for help, in order that his wife may be admitted to the hospital to undergo an operation, we certainly feel that in cases of this sort the Patriotic Fund should by way of a compassionate allowance, help a deserving woman. Probably you could manage to have some surgeon operate without charge, and to have the hospital fees abrogated or reduced. Having done this, however, the Patriotic Fund should make whatever additional allowance is necessary. I can hardly imagine that there would be many cases where women would undergo painful operations were it not a matter of vital importance to her future health. It is customary to manage this way in other branches."

5,000,000 MEN ENROLLED IN THE BRITISH ISLES

ON WAR WORK

PARIS, July 28. — David Lloyd George, the British Premier, yesterday gave a breakfast to a number of editors of important French newspapers, during which he conversed fully with them on the military situation and replied to questions. The Temps gives a summary of his talk.

Mr. Lloyd George said that Great Britain now had between 5,000,000 and 5,500,000 soldiers enrolled, without counting between 400,000 to 500,000 belonging to the navy, or nearly a million men from the Dominion and colonies. Great Britain had placed at the disposal of her allies, he added, from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 tons of merchant ships. Next year's building programme for merchant ships, which already has begun, amounts to 4,000,000 tons, or twice as much as in a good year during peace time. Alluding to the campaign against submarines, Mr. Lloyd George said:

"The diminuition in shipping losses is incontestable. It is impossible to abandon this subbject without paying homage to the aid given by the American navy, both regarding the organization of convoys and by torpedo-boat destroyers, which have rendered excellent service.

5,000,000 on War Work.

Continuing, Mr. Lloyd George said that five million men and women now were engaged in war work in the United Kingdom. More women could be employed if the trades unions did not fear the competition of women after the war but other countries seemed to have experienced the same difficulties. It could be said that at the present time, no English industry is working for individual interests, except agriculture.

"Although the English people sincerely hoped that the present war would be the last war," Mr. Lloyd George continued "the country intended to avoid its previous error, and in future would be able to support itself." He said he recognised that the latest news from Russia already had shown that she possessed infinite resources and was the land of the unexpected.

In bidding farewell to his guests, Mr. Lloyd George said the world's future depended on Great Britain and France acting together.

CITY TO OBSERVE ANNIVERSARY OF WAR DECLARATION

Public Meeting on Sunday Evening August 5th—Council Takes the Lead For Fitting Commemoration

OUTING FOR VETERANS

The Reception committee of the Council last night, with Acting Mayor Duncan presiding, decided to hold a public commemoration of the third anniversary of the declaration of war on Sunday evening, August 5th at a mass meeting to be held in one of the parks. The arrangements for speakers and resolutions were left with the Reception committee. It is expected that a band will assist in the observance, that a number of prominent citizens will speak and that resolutions expressing the determination of the people to carry on to victory will be passed.

Saturday is actually the anniversary of Britain's famous answer to the challenge of Prussianism, but the committee felt that a meeting on Sunday night would be most convenient to all the citizens.

Outing For Veterans.

Upon the suggestion of Mayor Duncan it was arranged to charter a steamer, which would be placed at the disposal of the returned soldiers and their families for an excursion and picnic to Rice Lake. A conference to fix the details will be held with representatives of the Great War Veterans' Association. Saturday, August 4th was suggested for the occasion, but this date is dependent upon boat facilities. The essential feature of this outing is that it is a little recognition from the citizens for the service of the veterans during the past three years.

The excursion will be confined to the returned men and their families, including a representation from the Council. The committee realised that the families of all the men overseas could not be accommodated in an outing of this kind.

Replying to a query on this point, Ald. Dobbin stated that 3,400 complimentary tickets had been distributed on Dominion Day, and that the entire fleet of steamers in this district would be insufficient to accommodate the soldiers' families in an outing to Rice Lake.

NEW YORK, July 27. —A cooling breeze to-day brought relief, following New York's hottest day of the summer yesterday, when the mercury touched 99. Two deaths and seven prostrations were reported.

Special to The Examiner:

Fair Will Give Prizes To Amateur Gardeners

Three Prizes For Best Exhibit of Vegetables

The Board of Directors of the Peterborough Central Exhibition, in an endeavour to encourage production, have offered three prizes to be paid: First, $5.00; Second, $3.00; Third, $2.00, to the winners, who must be amateur gardeners, for the best assortment of vegetables to be grown either in their own back-yard garden or on a vacant lot. With the hundreds of fine gardens this year it is expected there will be a big entry list. This class is not in competition with the market gardener.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1917

THE MODERN FRENCH OFFICER.

While we hear much of the fervent German prayer "Gott Strafe England" there are some personages in France who do not enjoy the unadulterated agection of the whole of Germany. When the Huns decided to open the gates of war in 1914 they anticipated no more trouble from the French General Staff than they had from those with whom Napoleon III. had surrounded himself in 1870.

Intoxicated with their own arrogance, they were incapable of appreciating how keen and professional the French officer had become since he succeeded those of that year of bitter memory. In their conceit they contemptuously refused to credit the possibility that forty-four years had wrought any real change in the calibre of the officers holding important commands in the French army.

But as soon as the stop—in spite of the German overwhelming superiority in numbers and munitions—began to be put to their early triumphal progress through France, a ray or two of sobriety began to penetrate the Huns' inebriated vanity, they began uneasily to suspect that the genius of the Generals they were up against this time was very, very different from that of 1870.

This uneasy suspicion received daily confirmation and had its grand corroboration at Verdun. There all their drunken illusions were dispelled; thenceforth they were thoroughly sobered, and became fully able—very fully able—to appreciate the calibre of the modern French Army Commanders.

French Generals whose names are now no doubt particular anathema to the Huns are: Joffre, De Castlenau, Petain, Mangin, Nivelle, Fayolle, D'Esperey, and Foch. The names of a good many other French Generals would probably arouse their ire, too, but to these "eight" it is pretty certain they would accord an encore "Hymn of Hate."—Montreal Herald.

NORWAY'S HUMILIATION.

How will the Commissioners sent from Norway to plead for exports of American foodstuffs explain their country's meek acceptance of repeated humiliation by Germany and its failure to resent a long series of acts which were virtually those of a hostile nation? What will they say about the sinking of 537 Norwegian ships by German submarnes, the murder of scores of sailors in lifeboats, the employment of spies at their ports to give information afterward used for the destruction of merchant vessels? If they point to an occasional message of regret from Berlin they will have to admit that each message of this kind was followed by the sinking of more ships. To the reports which have been published in the last two years The Associated Press has now added a record of recent events, with a statement showing the attitude of the Norwegian people.

Cargoes of meat on their way to a Norwegian port from Denmark were taken a few weeks ago by submarines, with a shipload of hay sent to relieve fodder famine in the northern part of the country. Submarines sank small boats near the coast carrying men who, it was well known, were catching fish for the Germans. Norwegians hired by Germany to send reports which were used for the pursuit and sinking of Norwegian vessels and the murder of sailors have been punished by imprisonment for only a few months. Indignant protests in Norway's Congress have drawn from the Government no explanation of its course. Crops are deficient and there is a scarcity of food. Demands from the people that no more food shall be sent to Germany have had no effect. Export shipments continue to be made. For what is called a neutrality guard $200,000,000 has been expended, but not a dollar of this sum has been used in defence of Norway's rights.

The Government's curious policy is denounced by the people and the press. Prominent newspapers are saying that Norway is in danger of losing her self-respect and that such a loss would be worse than war. The royal family is hostile to Germany. That is the attitude of a great majority of the people. But the Cabinet Ministers and a few men enriched by war trade have thus far exercised control. Why do the people and the King and Queen submit? Are they to be powerless until Norway's entire merchant marine is destroyed? It may be that the Commissioners will explain.—New York Herald.

LIMITATION OF INCOME TAX.

We think that a large slice should be taken from incomes of over $20,000, comments the Montreal Star on the income tax. The unmarried man with an income of $20,000 pays, under the provisions of the bill, about $1,200, and has over $18,000 left to get along with. This, we submit, can hardly be called severe taxation of wealth at a time when world circumstances decree that the measure of financial sacrifice should be not what one gives but what one has left. Perhaps, also, there might have been a deeper cut into unmarried incomes.

ALL MAY BE NEEDED.

But the weakening of Russia is an additional and a very powerful reason why the other nations leagued against Germany should increase their war efforts. France cannot. Her power is waning. Britain is now putting forth her maximum effort. It will be many months before the United States can do much in the land war. This is a poor time for Canadians to talk as though Canada could safely slacken her military endeavours and afford to mark time. Every man that this country can send to the front will soon be urgently needed there.—Hamilton Herald.

UP, OR DOWN?

Nothing — to speak in customary terms—can break down this nation. It is too big and has too much good in it. But the war will either make it a much greater nation or set it back in possibilities. Shall we go up or down? Our immediate business is to win the war. Those who oppose the effort to win the war must be promptly punished. Those who merely do not co-operate must ultimately be coerced. But this is a democracy, not an autocracy, and a democracy is efficient and valuable only in proportion to the general opportunity of its people for co-operation. Unless the mighty stirring of national emotions that accompanies war is wisely directed it will result in something definitely evil. Unless the probably 90,000,000 people in this country who hate war—not this war, but war in general—as flatly as they hate murder, can be made to see that out of this huge evil good can come, they are going to make less and less willingly the sacrifices which are absolutely essential, and so hamper the prosecution of the war more considerably than all the German spies that ever were littered.—Chicago Herald.

Germans Call In Marks To Sell Them As Silver

LONDON, July 28.—A despatch to the Times from Amesterdam says: "The Telegraph's Zevenar correspondent says all the gold and precious stones in private possession have to be requisitioned at Westphalia this week, and must be delivered to the bank. The requisitioning of precious stones following the withdrawal of the German silver florins from circulation is significant."

See Further Fall in Marks.

On the latter subject the Times' financial editor, under the headline, 'Germany Prepares for the Worst," says: "No other construction can well be placed on the latest currency development in Germany than that preparations are being made for the fall of the mark to even lower depths. In German papers which reached us yesterday there was an official announcement of an order issued by the federal council, that on January 1 next the silver two-mark pieces, which have popular circulation in Germany, and are known as florins here, shall no longer be legal notes.

From now until July 1, 1918, however, currency notes, loan and bank notes will be taken in exchange for them if paid into the imperial state banks. This withdrawal of the mark coins from circulation has only one meaning

Sell Them as Silver.

"The German Government obviously intends to market them abroad as silver owing to the high price to which the metal has risen, whereas the exchange value in English currency of the paper two marks abroad to-day is 13.96. The value of the two mark piece melted down in silver at the present price of silver in the London market is 13.8 perce.

"We can only come to the conclusion that the German authorities anticipate a further drop in exchange, but it is pointed out to us that the market in Holland, where the two mark pieces would be sent for sale, gives about six per cent. better price for silver than is obtainable in London. This might fetch there an equivalent of 14.6 pence, on which there would already be a profit.

A Cunning Device.

"If so the device is a cunning one for taking profit on the depreciated mark. In any case, the step proves how desperate the problem of German credit becomes as indicated by the depreciation of German currency."

Presentation To Roy Rutherford Of South Monaghan

The presentation to Roy Rutherford of the prize for passing highest in the recent Entrance examinations in South Monaghan, took place at No. 3 school house, South Monaghan, last night. Reeve Greer, who was in the chair, opened the meeting with pleasant and appreciative references. The school house was filled to capacity with residents of the surrounding country and a large number of children who took an intense interest in the proceedings.

Watch Presented.

Mr. Burnham, M.P., in presenting the watch, spoke upon the necessity of careful reading with a view to remembering if the acquirement of knowledge is to be a success, not a mere pastime soon to be forgotten and therefore wasted time.

Mr. John Riddell.

Mr. John Riddell, of this city, formerly of South Monaghan, accompanied the party in the absence of Mr. Gillespie, M.P.P., who was unable to go. He spoke strongly, urging upon people to take an earnest view of life. It is not necessary to be serious or sad, but nothing good can be done without earnest effort. He himself has been born in the neighbourhood and in looking back over his long life was proud to see South Monaghan was continuing to advance.

Rev. Mr. MacConachie.

Rev. Mr. MacConachie, who was present, spoke very profitably upon the cultivation of the finer side of life. Messrs. Lang, Rutherford and Dawson also made suitable acknowledgments.

Miss Finnie.

Miss Finnie, the teacher, on being called upon, made reference to the success of her prize scholar and to the pleasure it gave her to teach for the school.

Prize Won Three Times.

The Bailieboro section has won the watch, No. 3 once, and No. 1 and 2 once. There are five sections in the township, so it will be seen that the level of teaching is fairly uniform.

Closed With Music.

The ladies present served dainty refreshments, and after some delightful music the meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Heliotrope embroidery is charmingly used with lemon-coloured crepe.

Crow-blue satin with gold embroidery makes a dress of great richness.

Black satin coats, long and loose, are made to wear over dainty fete dresses.

Westwood Soldier Welcomed Home

The Town Hall, Westwood, was packed to the doors Friday evening, when the residents of the Township of Asphodel and vicinity gathered under the auspices of the Asphodel Patriotic Society to welcome home Private Davidson of Asphodel, who has been invalided home, being severely wounded at the Battle of Vimy Ridge. A magnificent gold watch suitably engraved was presented to Private Davidson by the Patriotic Society, and an address read by Mrs. Birdsall was also presented expressing the thanks of the community for his splendid services. Private Davidson with great modesty accepted the gifts and address, and on resuming his seat was greeted with an outburst of cheering.

A splendid programme of music made the evening a most delightful one. Mr. Knox, the chairman, introduced in quick succession a number of speakers, who delivered patriotic addresses suitable to the occasion. They were: J. A. Sexsmith, M.P.; James Thompson, M.P.P.; Warden Maxwell Brown, Reeve Fowlds, of Hastings, and Lt.-Col. Miller and F. D. Kerr, from Peterborough, and the Rev. Mr. McConnachie, and the Rev. Mr. Davis.

The Asphodel Society has been most active in all patriotic work, and nothing could be more helpful than the splendid home-coming receptions that have been tendered to the returning soldiers at Westwood by the Society.

The Society splendidly entertained Pte. Davidson, his mother, and the other members of his family, and the outside visitors at the conclusion of the evening at the residence of Mr Matthew Breckenridge.

Mr. H. G. Walker, of Peterborough, very kindly placed his automobile at the disposal of the Patriotic Committee, and motored the Peterborough visitors to Westwood.

Joy-Riding Wastes Gasoline And May Be Banned By Controller

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA July 28.—C. A. Magrath, fuel controller, forecasts the possibility of drastic action to stop joy-riding in motor cars, as gasoline is needed by the armies at the front and also for industries and agriculture in Canada.

Closes His Factory For At Least A Week

Chairman Resources Committee Sets Example—Pay Difference In Wages.

STRATFORD July 28.—Having failed to induce any large number of men to go on farms for harvest, Chairman H. W. Strudley of the local branch of the Organization of Resources committee, decided yesterday to close his own plant, the Imperial Rattan Factory, for at least one week, thus releasing the employees, who will be paid by the proprietor the difference between their wages in the factory and those offered by the farmers. A proposal has also been made to close the banks and stores one or two afternoons each week and send the clerks to the country. Warden Oliver Harris stated that crop prospects were never better in Perth. Spring wheat is over five feet high in Fullarton, and hay is a very heavy yield.

HUNTING.

Public and Police Operation Produce Best.

LONDON—The effective method of combatting German espionage system in England is to be found in co-operation between the public generally and police, according to opinions held by high officials of Scotland Yard.

From the first days of war English police and military, who have been drilling them, and he from citizens regarding suspicious persons, and through co-operation have been enabled to apprehend many undesirable aliens, as persons who otherwise might have been at large.

Scotland Yard has had considerable trouble with neutrals, but of the German Government the English police feel that the task is one which the United States have to guard against.

EASIER TONE TO THE MARKET

Sugar is Due For a Move Upward —A Number of Changes

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in Canadian Grocer this week:—

Starches, cornstarches and corn syrups were among the lines in which considerable advances were recorded during the week. Increases in the market for these commodities have been due to the acute situation in corn. Cocoa is in extra heavy demand at present. One large manufacturer is about to double the capacity of present plant in order to take care of the trade that has developed within recent months. One line of package cocoa advanced during the week. Custard powder and egg powder and washboards were included in the lines in which there were changes in an upward direction.

EASIER TONE.

Cooked meats, such as boiled and roast hams, were in slightly higher market, but smoked hams were quoted down. Trade in the latter has been dull and prices were lowered to induce business. In pure lard there was a decidedly easier tone during the week, due to the eagerness for some of the larger concerns to get business. Butter was in steady and firm market, but eggs were on the upgrade, advances having been recorded. Production in the latter is now higher.

Refiners were still quoting in a divided market so far as accord on prices on sugar is concerned. With the raw situation exhibiting strength the opinion prevailed that the refiner quoting at the low figure will in the not distant future move upward. Flour was unchanged for Manitoba, but in a fairly strong market. Millfeeds of all kinds are in better demand and prices are ruling firm at the high quotations of last week. Travellers for wholesale grocery houses throughout Ontario will not make their rounds during the coming two weeks, as it is vacation period. The arrangement has been made by common consent among the various wholesalers. Business continued somewhat quiet during the week.

The Hardware And Metal Market

"Hardware and Metal" of to-day says: A general advance has been recorded in practicaly all lines of shelf hardware during the past week and manufacturers intimate that the top of the market has not yet been reached. They state present costs of finished products are not yet in keeping with the prices of the raw materials. In some lines, such as lawn mowers, the manufacturers are accepting orders for 1918 delivery to the extent of only 75 per cent. of the purchase of 1917, and are not guaranteeing shipment of even that quantity. Wholesalers closely in touch with the situation assert their belief there is every evidence that there will be shortages in practicaly all lines wherein steel enters. Booking prices on harvest tools for delivery in 1918 have been announced by some concerns which are considerably higher. New prices on some makes of lawn mowers for shipment in 1918 have been issued and show advances of at least thirty-three and one-third per cent. over the opening prices for 1917.

Further advances have been recorded in plated loose pin butts, barrel bolts, chain bolts, hasps and staples, shelf brackets, corrugated strap hinges. Screw-drivers have again been increased in price. Horse clippers and sheep shearing machines of the power type have been moved to higher levels. Wedges and hammers of all kinds, including masons' sledges, have been increased considerably. Cutlery, cheap shotguns, snow shovels, auger bits, axle grease are also included in the lines which have been moved to higher levels. Linseed oil is in continued firm market and the price of turpentine held steady. Business with wholesale hardware houses is reported very good. There is an inclination toward quietness in the city, but from the country districts trade is keeping up remarkably well in spite of the holiday season.

Apply this method of buying to your automobile.

Mr. Frank Groch, of the Grodwards Company of Cobalt, Ontario, is an automobile expert. He sells motor cars. He is a very successful merchant and like all successful merchants realizes that his business rests on the satisfaction of his customers.

"When I decided to enter the automobile business I looked around for what I called a fool-proof car. Although I am an engineer I had had no experience with cars. I decided that there were four primary points which were fundamentally necessary in selecting an automobile.

FIRST—the reputation of the manufacturer for square dealing—I finally decided that as Studebaker wagons had been 'it,' Studebaker automobiles must be, too.

SECOND—the firm must build automobiles in quantities large enough to cut down that vast overhead expense necessary in keeping up with the times and making the car fool-proof.

I visited many plants and finally decided that at Walkerville, Ontario, Studebaker had the plant and the equipment.

THIRD—the car itself—I examined many cars and talked with many owners in Canada, paying particular attention to the motor.

Of all the cars I examined under the price of $2000 I felt that Studebaker was the best built and best equipped.

FOURTH—Service—this term I found to mean many things. Every manufacturer had talked it but none really put it into practice except Studebaker. I found that the Studebaker Corporation was spending upwards of half a million dollars a year to maintain its cars in perfect running condition after they were sold. I found that the Studebaker Service Department sends special service men wherever their cars are sold to see that anything which is not understood by local mechanics is thoroughly explained.

Ran Studebaker Three Years—Spent $25 for Repairs

One of the first Studebaker Cars I sold is owned by a mining engineer. This gentleman spent less than $25.00 for repair parts in three years. All other Studebaker Cars sold in my territory have had similarly low costs for upkeep and there is no more severe test for a car than long service on the roads around Cobalt.

From Detroit to Palm Beach, Florida, Total Car Expense $41.89

On December 7th, 1916, I left Detroit with my own Series 18 six cylinder touring car and with seven in the car drove to Toledo and Columbus, Ohio, Wheeling, West Virginia, through the snow-covered Cumberland Mountains, through Augusta and Savannah, Georgia, Jacksonville and St. Augustine to Palm Beach, Florida.

My total expense for the trip for gasoline, oil, washing the car, storage and all other car expenses was $41.89. That is why I am enthusiastic for Studebaker."

Significant Facts

When Mr. Groch entered the automobile business he had no ax to grind for any particular concern. He chose Studebaker Cars from the entire field because a careful, thorough, scientific investigation showed him that Studebaker cars were the best value for the money.

For four years Studebaker cars have been giving satisfactory service to Mr. Groch's customers. His business has grown to large proportions because of it.

It is certainly worth your while to investigate the Studebaker proposition thoroughly before you buy any car. Studebaker cars have made good for thousands and thousands of people and will make good for you.

There will be no change in Studebaker models this year, but the increased cost of materials and labor may force Studebaker to make an advance in prices at any time without notice.

Sending Out Sixty Tractors

At a recent conference with the district representative regarding the result of the use of tractors this year Deputy Minister C. F. Bailey reported that those in commission this year had proved entirely satisfactory.

It is the intention, commencing right away, to place 60 tractors to do continuous ploughing until the cold weather sets in and no more can be done, so that the acreage to be sown next year will be far greater than what could be sown this year.

Must Have Unity Says Repington

LONDON, July 27.—Col. Repington, the Times military critic, writing on the present war situation, says:

"We can certainly hope the Allied forces in Salonika, Egypt and Mesopotamia combined and such forces as the Russians in Asia Minor are able to produce can reduce the Turks to submission if all the forces of this part of the world are governed by a single intelligent will.

MUST HAVE UNITY.

"This purpose of single strategic compulsion must surely at last emerge from the urgent necessity of the case. But the main battle front reaches to Nieuport and the Carso. With the great reserves of strength England, America, and Italy possess and the additional forces of men, guns and munitions for undoing the enemy that must come, no greater, no other mission develops upon all Governments concerned.

"We hear a great deal of Germany's central situation and sometimes lament over it, but would it not be wise to make better use of our advantages, especially now that America comes into the western picture. Forty British guns in the last Carso battle are the only tribute hitherto paid to it, surely this cannot be all the strategy we can desire. If the distant overseas expeditions become more difficult, owing to the submarine this cannot affect the land operations between France and Italy.

IS UP TO WEST FRONT.

"The German higher command has taken advantage of the winters of 1915 and 1916 to conduct offensive campaigns away from the main front, and openings of the same nature are before us if we care to make use of them. As Russia fails away in efficiency owing to internal troubles, the western front will see more of the main shock of battle. It is necessary for us all to wake up to the full possibilities of the west in a spirit of mutual co-operation.

"The misfortunes of Russian arms on the southwestern fronts are grievous reading. Even if things in Russia go badly indeed, large hostile forces must be retained in the east. The situation in the west will not be radically altered in this campaigning season by reason of the Russian breakdown, but the situation later will certainly demand the utmost efforts of the four western powers."

Thinks Swimmers Should Be Sent To Help On Farms

ST. THOMAS, July 27.—County Magistrate Frank Hunt pointed out that there were too many boys around the ages of 16 years disporting themselves in Kettle Creek swimming-places these days. The squire said these young lads should be compelled to go out on the farms and give all the assistance possible in harvesting the crops.

Chinese Offer 1,500 Recruits To Americans

NEW YORK, July 28. — Military services of 1,500 Chinese, natives of China and American born sons of Chinese parents were offered the United States by Tien Tow Liu, a student at Columbia University in a letter to President Wilson. Under Tien's directions, 300 Chinese in this city have been driling three months and he has aroused interest among compatriots in Chicago and San Francisco so that he is now able, he says, to organize a separate unit of Chinese to be incorporated in the American overseas army.

Tien is a nephew of the late General Huang Sing, leader of the Chinese revolutionary army in 1911, and has had several years military training. Because of his activities as an aide on his uncle's staff, a price was placed on his head and he was sent to the United States.

"In order that the world may be made safe for democracy," Tien says in his letter, "everyone must give his fair share to terminate the horrible war and help to sweep away the peril—Kaiserism."

Gillette Safety Razor

YOUR beard grows its fastest in the summer. Your face is more sensitive. The sun burns your skin; the wind cracks it. Perspiration and dust settle around the roots of the beard.

Then it is that the Gillette is most appreciated. Guarded—adjustable—matchless in its keenness—it shaves smooth, as close as you like, and cool. No pulling or irritation—nothing but grateful comfort, especially for the man whose skin is over-tender or whose beard is over-tough.

If you are sticking close to the job this summer, a Gillette shave every morning will make it easier. If you're taking a vacation trip, a Gillette in your grip will be a friend indeed.

THE WHIZZ-BANGS MAKE "DIRECT" HIT

The Whizz-Bang Boys demonstrated conclusively at the Grand Opera House last night that fighting ability is not their only talent, and that they still possess the power of enjoying themselves and causing other people enjoyment, in spite of the hardships and suffering they have gone through. The concert troupe from the Whitby Convelescent Hospital, all of them returned soldiers, gave a most enjoyable concert and the audience was enthusiastic in its approval of the work of the veterans, many of whom are still showing the effect of German bullets and shells. The first part of the programme was a minstrel performance with Sergeant Annis as interlocutor, and Ptes. Janaway and Dufton as end men. The two comedians provided plenty of amusement with their fun jokes—one at the expense of the Peterborough Police Force making an especially big hit. A stirring rendition of "O Canada" opened the programme and then followed a delightful series of song numbers and choruses. The Whizz-Bangs had in their circle some splendid voices, and all the numbers were well presented. The audience probably found the most enjoyment in the trench choruses, "Blighty," "I Want to Go Home," and "Keep Your Head Down, Allemande."

"These are some of the songs we used to sing in and out of the trenches," announced Sergeant Annis.

"Mostly out," commented End-Man Dufton.

Bandsman Seddon, of Hamilton, a former member of the famous Kilties Band, delighted the audience with several most enjoyable trombone solos, playing his numbers in faultless style. Pte. F. S. Brugger, who proved himself an elocutionist of great ability, recited four of Service's war poems in dramatic fashion, making a most favourable impression with "Bill the Bomber," "Jean Duprez" and other splendid numbers. During the second part of the programme Pte. H. Bentley, of Hamilton, Ontario, who before enlisting to fight the Hun was on the vaudeville stage, gave a mystifying exhibition of handcuff work. It only took him a few seconds to escape from one pair of cuffs, while four pairs precented scarcely any more difficulty. As a climax Pte. Bentley was handcuffed to a wooden cross, but made his escape in a short time. P. C. Sandbach, himself a returned soldier, and Sergeant Dalliday, were the local committee who saw that Pte. Bentley was securely "cuffed."

All the vocalists who took part showed splendid voices, and the whole programme was greatly enjoyed. A laughable burlesque, "McNamara's Band," was an amusing wind-up to the performance.

It is likely that the Whizz-Bang Boys will return to Peterborough next autumn. If they do they are assured of a record crowd.

The programme was as follows:

Providence And The War

The pastor will preach in the George Street Methodist Church on Sunday evening on the subject: "Divine Providence and the War, or Why God Does not Stop the Conflict." This is a theme in which many are concerned, and is especially appropriate at this time, when we are approaching the third anniversary of the beginning of the war. All the services throughout the day will be very short.

SHELLED DURING AS EMPEROR LUNCHED

RULER OF AUSTRIA HAD NARROW ESCAPE FROM THE SHELL GUNS.

Amsterdam, July 28. — Emperor Charles of Austria had a narrow escape last week while visiting the battle front in Galicia, says the Wiener Allgemeine Zeitung. While the Emperor was taking luncheon at a castle near the firing line Russian artillery shelled the dwelling. The Emperor at first refused to take cover, and went on the balcony, but owing to the protestations of his staff he was finally induced to leave.

Rector's Daughter—How splendid of Joe Jarvis to volunteer for that very dangerous job! I'm so glad he got the Military Medal. Mrs. Mullins (now to be outdone)—Yes, miss. And my son could have got it, too, if he'd cared to have taken the risk.—London Punch.

Tan, Red or Freckled Skin Is Easily Shed

To free your summer-soiled skin of its muddiness, freckles, blotches or tan, the best thing to do is to free yourself of the skin itself. This is easily accomplished by the use of ordinary mercolised wax, which can be had at any druggists. Use at night as you use cold cream, washing it off in the morning. Immediately the offending surface skin begins to come off in fine powder-like particles. Gradually the entire cuticle is absorbed, without pain or inconvenience. The second layer of skin now in evidence presents a spotless whiteness and sparkling beauty obtainable in no other way.

If the heat tends to loosen and wrinkle your skin, there's an effective and harmless remedy you can readily make at home. Just let an ounce of powdered saxolite dissolve in a half-pint witch hazel and bathe your face in the liquid. This at once tightens the skin and smooths out the lines, making you look years younger.

WORK OF THE Y.M.C.A. OVERSEAS APPRECIATED

Pte. Art. Lewis, Local Boy With Field Ambulance Writes Interesting Letter From England.

GOING TO FRANCE SOON

PTE. ART. LEWIS.

The following letter from Pte. A. J. Lewis, son of Mr. James Lewis, Hunter street barber, to Mr. Meserve, of the Y.M.C. ., will be of general interest:

Witley Camp, July 2, '17.

Dear Mr. Meserve:

Well, I guess you no doubt have the idea that I have forgotten you, as I have delayed in writing to you, but such is not the case, but just because it's hard for me to get started. I wrote to Mr. Galley some time ago but I guess the letter has gone astray as I have not received any answer.

I suppose the most interesting things that I could write about to you would be the doings of the "Y" over here. Well they are certainly doing a great work over here as I am sure we could hardly get along without them.

After we landed we were in quarantine for ten days, and then I had a five day trip to "Blighty"—London. I did not know much about the city so I thought the "Y" would be a good place to stop at. They have "huts" all over London. Some are just temporary frame buildings, while others are buildings taken over by the "Y" for the duration of the war.

The place that I stayed in was formerly a theatre, but was rather small compared to some of the other theatres I saw, but was a fine place for "Y" work. I got bed and breakfast for 1s. 6d (about 36 cents). The bed was fine, a cot, and it had regular white sheets, and breakfast consisted of porridge, two eggs and meat, bread, butter and coffee. The other meals were run a la carte. I spent the first night in London there, after attending a show of course. I sure hated to get up the next morning, but we wanted to see some of the town.

We did not know where to start first so the "leader" in charge of the hut advised us to go with the "Y" guide. All we had to pay was our tram fare. As far as I know, these guides are volunteers who "do their bit" by showing the "Tommies" the sights. In this case our guide was an elderly gentleman, so we started out.

That day we visited the Law Courts and the Tower of London, Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop," and some other places too numerous to mention. Before our leave was up we had seen most of the places of international importance, and we certainly were not anxious to return to Witley. However our time soon passed, so I have been here ever since.

The "Y" but I think I may safely say is the most popular place in camp I heard a soldier returned from France remark that "the 'Y' was the link between mother and the trenches." From my own experience here it appears so to this camp anyway.

There are four huts in camp and all are busy every time I come around. The huts are all built the same, of frame, and are 200 x 75 ft. I should judge. At one end is a stage while the other end is the canteen. Between the two seats are placed or tables for writing, as some nights they have letter writing when the boys get caught up in their back mail.

The entertainments are mostly very good and some of the best concerts and speakers that I have ever heard are seen on the "Y" platform.

Most of the performances are by London parties and they are all real good. It is great after working and drilling all day to go to the "Y" and hear the best that is going on in the concert line. This is where we hear all the latest songs right from London as some of the entertainers are regular professionals.

One of the best addresses I have ever heard was by Dr. Rice of Detroit, and he certainly was great.

On fine evenings these concerts are held in the open air, and I wish that I could have you here to witness one. At the back of one of the huts here is a fine grove of trees. A stage is erected and from it the ground slopes upward forming a natural amphitheatre. Here gather some four or five hundred Tommies out under the trees and a London concert party is one of the favorite attractions. Sometimes the programme is further enlivened by one of the battalion bands, and they certainly have some good ones here. The programme consists mostly of the popular songs of the day, recitations and other musical numbers. One of the best entertainments I remember was a debate, "Resolved, that conscription should be applied in Canada." The affirmative was taken by the Divisional signallers, and the negative by our unit, the 15th Field Ambulance, and we were fortunate in winning. It's too bad our orators are not over there to settle all the conscription troubles over in Canada. A band was there also and played all the popular tunes of the day. By the way, when I came over here I had the idea that "Blighty" was rather behind us for the popular ragtime, but there are so many popular ones over here that it is hard to remember them all. A few of them are "Blighty," which is rather old here now, but was all the rage for a while; others are "Broken Doll," "If you were the only Girl in the World, and I was the only Boy," "When a Wonderful Boy Meets a Wonderful Girl," and a good comical one is "I Want to Go Home." There are lots of others, but these are the most popular.

Well, about the only fault I have to find with the "Y" is that there is too big a crowd around the canteen mostly, and it is hard to get at anything, but have to wait too long.

Mostly the huts are too small to hold the audience but that only speaks for the popularity of the "Y" and these huts seat about three or four hundred I should judge.

Well, I'm writing you a longer letter than I intended, but when I started about the "Y" I just had to finish it all, as I know you would likely be interested in "Y" work. I don't forget the good times I had around the old "Y" at home either, and I guess it was almost a second home to me there.

I suppose you know that Jack Smythe and Gerald McCarthy are back in this unit with me. They left a good thing in Hastings to get back in this unit in order to go to France, as we hope to go before many moons have passed.

Vun Lyle is in a Sanitary Section here, so you see the old bunch is almost together again. Clarence Voaden is with No. 5 Field Ambulance in France, and Charlie Richardson is in a hospital at Brighton.

As you probably know, the 52nd is here also, and also part of the 247th. The other night I met Sergts. Latimer, Dunsford and Primeau, and we hiked it over to the 52nd, and there was quite a gathering from Peterborough.

Well, I guess I'll stop for this time Give my best regards to all back there and I would be pleased to hear from you all.

Yours sincerely,

Chemong Park's Summer Crowd Seems As Numerous As In Past

All But Two Cottages Occupied By Families, Some of Whom Are Staying For Only Part of the Season—Quiet of Home Life Pervades the Park.

Chemong Park still continues to be a popular resort for the weary city people seeking relaxation and rest from the routine of city life, and at present embraces visitors from practically all over Canada and the United States. The eighty-four cottages are tenanted, except two, and the population continually changes as one family vacates a cottage to admit the next, who is anxiously awaiting its turn to come in. Fishing berry picking, dancing, yachting and all the pleasant and inviting advantages such a resort offers, are at full swing, and the young people, as well as the older are enjoying the time of their young lives.

Island Arrives.

This week the fascinating routine of the daily life at the Park was varied by the arrival of one of the largest floating islands, measuring about two acres, the cottagers can remember. This island lodged on Wednesday against the floating bridge, but with the high wind on Thursday was blown into Hopwood's Bay. The government launch, Bessie Butler, was immediately telephoned for, but the island, unpleasantly populated by scores of snakes, still remains a menace to the bathers in the immediate vicinity.

Boys' Camp.

The boys' camp, comprising several students from "Highfield," Hamilton, Upper Canada College and the Junior University arrived in the Park on Tuesday from their headquarters at Balsam Lake and for two nights livened the Park up with their college songs and their presence at the pavilion, where they kept Dan. Sullivan who is proprietor of the store this year, busy finding enough ice cream cones and nut bars to keep them going. They pitched their camp south of Mr. Eastwood's cottage.

Many Autos.

It is "the thing" to own your own auto if you are a cottager, and with the scores which visit the Park each night for the dances, etc., it has become a problem to make one's way up the main road in safety whilst preserving one's dignity. If anything, the auto has made the Park more popular amongst the townspeople.

Cottagers at the Park.

The cottagers who have arrived so far at the park include Judge Hayes of Guelph, who arrived to-day; Mr. and Mrs. Rose of Oakville, who occupy the Popham cottage; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Coulthard, Mr. Moore, in Mr. Sullivan's cottage; Mr. Desbecker, Buffalo; Mr. Rosenburg, Buffalo; Mr. P. L. Allison, in Mr. Wolfe's cottage; Mr. James Long, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Worth, in Tully's cottage; Mrs. Reid and Mrs. Cubitt, in Glidden's; Mr. and Mrs. W. Ackerman in the Eastwood cottage, Mrs. Hopwood, Mrs. Glover, Mrs. Andrew Brown, Mrs. Hughes-Charles, Port Hope; Mr. and Mrs. John Pattie, Montreal; Capt. and Mrs. Pearson, Miss Pierce, Mrs. T. A. S. Hay, Mr. Pope, Mrs. C. H. Pennyfather in Prof. Bull's cottage; Mr. Morphet, Mr. W. H. Hill, Mayor Duffus, Mr. T. F. Matthews, Mr. Lush, Dr. Morgan in Dr. Carmichael's; Mrs. Reg. Thompson in the Stevenson cottage; Mr. Harry Thompson will take the Stevenson cottage next week; Mrs. Young, Toronto, in Halpin's cottage; Mr. Langford, Mrs. Rutherford, Mr. Alex. Elliott, Mr. A. E. Dixon; Rev. Mr. Gay in the Elliott cottage; Mrs. Lyman, Syracuse, in Tooley's cottage; Mr. and Mrs. Haslam, in the Laplante cottage; Mr. Picard, and Mr. and Mrs. Roper, who have built a splendid new cottage at the Park.

No Drownings.

No drownings or hair-breadth escapes from such have been made as yet at the Park this year, though one cottager had a narrow escape in his launch in the high wind on Sunday. The fishing is splendid and it is the exceptional fisherman who has not as yet landed a fair-sized lunge or two.

SWITCHMEN GO ON STRIKE

2,500 Men From 19 Railways Are Out

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, July 27. —Twenty-five hundred switchmen on nineteen railways out of Chicago went on strike early to-day. Although the strike is in the local switching yards it will have a depressing effect on practically all transcontinental traffic.

Hundreds of switchmen from all parts of the country were pouring into Chicago to-day to aid the railways in breaking the strike. Brotherhoods of Engineers, Firemen and Conductors will remain at work.

THE BATHING QUESTION.

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The river is again taking its usual yearly death toll and nothing is done to stop it. Acting Mayor Duncan complained because Mr. Ketcheson said that the city officials were doing nothing in the latest mentioned death. In reality they were seeking the body. That is certainly a grim joke. We don't want them to seek our dead bodies, but to give us proper safeguards and swimming facilities, so that there will be no dead bodies to seek. Shortly after the above mentioned fatality there would have been another, involving two young ladies, if it had not been for the resourcefulness of a young man, whose bravery I sincerely hope, will be recognized in a tangible way. I understand that 500 bathers were counted in one evening at Inverlea Park, and I have no doubt there are just as many at Lake street and the Vermont Marble Co. if somebody undertook to count them some evening. The Otonabee river ought to be the pride of the citizens of Peterborough, but instead of that it is a source of fear to the greater part, I mean the parents. Had we now what we ought to have had many years ago, that is, supervised swimming beaches, this fear would cease and an absolutely necessary recreation would be provided for the citizens. If the city council cannot see their way clear to help us there are other ways. For example Senator Corby gave the city of Belleville $5,000 to expend on bathing facilities a short while ago. We have also big and rich men in Peterborough. A word is sufficient.

Yours truly,

J. W. WORTH.

The Story of The Stairs

Every time you go up stairs you can test your state of health—the condition of your blood.

Do your arrive at the top of the stairs breathless and distressed? Does your heart palpitate violently? Do you have a pain in your side? Perhaps you even have to stop half way up, with limbs trembling and head dizzy, too exhausted to go further without resting. These are unfailing signs of anaemia. As soon as your blood becomes impoverished or impure the stair-case becomes an instrument of torture. When this is so you are unfit for work; your blood is watery and your nerves exhausted, you are losing the joy of an active life and paving the way for a further break down and decline. In this condition only one thing can save you. You must put new, rich, red blood into your veins without further delay and so build up your health anew. To get this new, rich blood give Dr. Williams Pink Pills a fair trial, and they will give you new vitality, sound health and the power to resist and throw off disease. For more than a generation this favourite medicine has been in use through out the world, and has made many thousands of weak, despondent men and women bright, active and strong.

You can get Dr. Williams Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

(b) Be between the ages of 19 and 40 (in the case of those desiring ultimately to become Equipment Officers).

3. Applications for appointment should be made to Headquarters Royal Flying Corps, Toronto, on the accompanying form.

The application form is to be filled in by the parent or guardian of a candidate who is not above the age of 21. After receipt of the completed application form, candidates who appear likely to fulfil requirements will be invited to appear before a representative of the Royal Flying Corps, by whom they will be interviewed, and their credentials (which will be furnished with the form of application) examined.

No refund of travelling or other expenses in connection with interviews regarding appointment will be admissable.

Details of the credentials required are given in the application form referred to above. They will include report from Headmaster of the last educational establishment the candidate attended, from persons under whose authority the candidate may have been during the preceding several years, or from persons who are well acquainted with the character of the candidate. A representative will visit various large towns from time to time to interview prospective candidates. Prospective candidates should complete attached application form and will then be notified when representative will visit their particular district.

4. Candidates will undertake liability for service in any part of the world, in connection with any type of aircraft. They will be required to be attested in the Royal Flying Corps as third class Air Mechanics.

5. When finally approved of candidates will be ordered to:

(a) Report themselves at Headquarters Royal Flying Corps, Canada, in order to receive their instructions regarding proceeding to England for training, or—

(b) Report themselves at Headquarters, or any other locality which may appear convenient to the Officer Commanding Royal Flying Corps, Canada, in order to carry out their training in Canada.

6. Those selected to proceed to England will be granted transportation second class for the journey from their homes to port of embarkation in Canada. Travelling allowance at the rate of 10s. ($2.38) will be admissable for each night necessarily occupied on the journey to the port of embarkation in Canada, and passage, second class, by transport when possible, to the port of disembarkation in England.

7. No other allowance or pay will be admissable until the date of their enlistment, which will be carried out at the port of disembarkation in England, where they will be attested in the Royal Flying Corps as third-class Air Mechanics, finally approved, and attached to the Royal Flying Corps Cadet Wing to undergo a course of instruction, in order to qualify for appointment to a temporary commission in the Regular Army (Imperial) for duty with the Royal Flying Corps.

8. Travelling warrants will be provided from port of disembarkation in England to wherever cadets may be ordered to proceed in order to undergo their course of instruction.

9. No refund will be made on account of gratuities, etc., given on the journey.

10. Whilst serving in the Royal Flying Corps Cadet Wing, in England, they will receive the pay of their rank, 1s. (24c.) per day. Accommodation and messing will be provided and they will be supplied with a complete outfit of clothing and necessaries as laid down for Recruits for the Regular Army (Imperial). Whilst serving as Cadets they will, if married, also receive allowance at the rates laid down in Appendix A.

11. Candidates will clearly understand that Officers of the Imperial Army are not entitled to separation allowance in any shape or form.

12. The course of instruction will last about four months, and will include preliminary instruction in flying; two months at the Royal Flying Corps Cadet Wing, Denham, Buck., and the remaining period at School of Military Aeronautics, Royal Flying Corps. On completion they will, if recommended as suitable in all respects, be granted a commission.

13. If they are not recommended at the end of the course, or if they prove themselves to be unsuitable as pilots at any time during the course, they will, if recommended as suitable in every way to be Infantry Officers, be transferred to an Officer Cadet Battalion, with a view to qualifying for commissions in the Infantry. If they fail to reach the required standard in the Officer Cadet Battalion, they will be given the choice of joining the Canadian or Imperial Forces, as a private soldier or receiving their discharge in which case they will be given a third-class passage back to Canada.

14. Pay at the rate of 7s. 6d. ($1.79) a day will commence from date of commission together with allowances or issues in kind in lieu. The allowances referred to are ration allowances, at present 1s. 7d. (39c.) a day, and lodging, fuel and light allowances (about) 2 s. 6d. (60c.) a day. They are only issuable if provision of food and accommodation is not made in kind. They will also receive £50 ($238.25) outfit allowance. £8 ($38.12) of this is advanced to them whilst Cadets, for the purpose of special walking out tunic, belt, etc., as for an officer.

15. After being commissioned, and while under instruction in flying they will receive an additional 4s. (95c) a day flying pay.

On graduatng as Flying Officers they will be granted pay at the rate or 12s. ($2.86) a day, plus 8s. ($1.90) a day Flying Pay, and the usual allowances or issues in kind.

16. Those Cadets selected for training in Canada will, on reporting for duty, be attested in the Royal Flying Corps, Canada, as third class Air Mechanics. They will receive transportation from their homes to the place where they are ordered to report for duty.

17. Whilst serving in Canada they will be paid at the rate of $1.10 per day. Whilst actually undergoing instruction in flying in Canada, they will be entitled to 25 cents per day Flying Pay, until they have qualified for their Royal Aero Club Certificate, when they will be entitled to 50 cents per day Flying Pay. They will receive a grant of £8 ($38.12) to enable them to purchase special walking out tunic, belt, etc. The actual cost of the outfit will be somewhat in excess of this allowance. The Cadet will have to contribute $15.00 or $20.00 out of his own pocket.

18. They are entitled to separation allowance under the same conditions as men in the Canadian Expeditionary Force and at the same rate, i.e., Privates, $20.00 per month.

19. They will carry out either a portion or the whole of their training in Canada. The decision of the Officer ommanding is final on this point.

20. They will proceed to England when instructed by Officer Commanding under the same conditions as laid down in Paragraphs 6, 7 and 8.

21. They will come, from date of embarkation, on English rates of pay i.e. 1s. (24c.) per day, and English conditions of separation allowance. (See Appendix A.)

22. On arrival in England they will continue their training under similar conditions to those of the Cadets who proceed direct.

23. As they will have already completed a considerable portion of their training in Canada, the period of their training in England will be much shorter than those who proceed direct.

They will serve in England under exactly the same conditions of service, allowances, outfit grant, etc., as those Cadets who proceed to England, mentioned in Paragraphs 5-A.

24. They will naturally not be advanced a further allowance for Cadets' uniforms, having already received this in Canada.

On qualification they will be appointed Flying Officers and draw the usual rate of pay, i.e., as laid down in Paragraphs 14 and 15.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The United States' draft law may be broadened so as to include men reaching the minimum age of 21 before the next call to the colours. Secretary of War Baker indicated to-day that not only might he ask such a step, but that he might also seek men who turn thirty-one—the maximum age—before the second call.

Children Had a Most Enjoyable Time at Rice Lake

A very pleasant day by the young people of St. John's Sunday School, yesterday, who, with parents and many friends, took advantage of a lull in the hot spell, sailed down to Bewdley at the head of Rice Lake. The little ones from the Children's Shelter were on board with Mrs. Read, at the instance of St. John's Girls' Auxiliary. The President, Mrs. Conway, and Miss Touchburne, sent on board ample refreshments to ensure a happy time for their little guests. Lunch, swimming and racing sports provided a splendid time at Bewdley, and it was a happy band that debarked at the wharf at 7 p.m. with cheers for all those who had furnished such an enjoyable outing. With Mr. R. J. Devey in charge the programme was without a hitch; Mr. W. F. Johnston and W. T. Holloway, the church wardens, with the Rev. Mr. Gay also helped to ensure a good time for the children, and their efforts were thoroughly successful. The Misses Fair and Gladman took charge of the booth and from start to finish of the trip were kept busy supplying the wants of the children.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAMES SUTHERLAND)

St. Mark's Gospel, 10th chapter, 17th verse: Good Master: What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

This young ruler came running to Christ, which indicated his humility; thus also he manifested his earnestness and importunity. He had now an opportunity of consulting this great Prophet in the things that belonged to his peace. He came to him when he was in the way; he did not ask for a private conference with him, but when he had found him he would embrace the opportunity of advising with him, and was not ashamed. He kneeled to Jesus in token of respect and veneration for him as a teacher sent from God, and his earnest desire to be taught by him. His address was serious and weighty. He asked what he shall do now that he may be happy forever. Most persons inquire for what good they can get in this world (Psalm 4:6) any good; he asks for good to be done in this world, in order to enjoy the greatest good in the other world.

Christ encouraged this address: 1st By assisting his faith. The young called him Good Master. Christ would have him mean thereby that he looked upon him to be God. 2nd, By directing his practice. He mentions the six commandments of the second table which prescribe our duty to our neighbor. The ruler thought himself able to say in some measure, Master, all these have I observed from my youth.

Ignorance of the extent and spiritual nature of the divine law, makes people think themselves better than they really are. Paul was alive without the law. But when he saw that to be spiritual he saw himself to be carnal. Romans 7:9-14. Jesus beholding him loved him. He was pleased to find that he had lived a good moral and quiet life, and pleased to see that he was inquiring for something better.

Christ loves to see young people, and rich people asking the way to heaven, with their faces thitherward. But here is a sorrowful parting between Christ and this young man. Christ gave him a command of trial, by which it would appear whether he in sincerity aimed at eternal life and pressed towards it. Can he find in his heart to part with his riches for the service of Christ. After a while, tribulation and persecution will arise because of the world and he must be forced to sell his estate, or have it taken from him by force or fraud. How will he endure that? Can he find in his heart to go through hardships and suffering and trial for the gospel's sake. Will he bear the cross as a true and faithful disciple of Christ, like Matthew at the receipt of custom? When Christ called him he arose and left all and followed Jesus, or like Moses who left the court of Pharoah and his princely honours, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Can he do all or any of these things, he may be called upon to do, and depend upon Christ for a recompense in heaven. He asks Christ, what he shall do, more than he has done, to obtain eternal life, and Christ puts it to him, whether he has that firm belief of, and that high value for eternal life, which he seems to have? Does he really believe that there is a treasure in heaven sufficient to make up for all he can leave, or lose, or lay out for Christ. Is he willing to bear a present cross in expectation of a future crown. He was sorry that he could not be a follower of Christ upon easier terms than leaving all to follow him; that he could not lay hold on eternal life and keep hold of his temporal possessions too. He went away grieved.

Here appears the truth of that (Matt. 6:24) Ye cannot serve God and mammon. While he held to mammon he did in effect despise Christ, as all those do who prefer the world before him. A sharp trial will often prove moral goodness to be defective and to be only carnal selfishness in a more decent garb, so that self-denying duties, no more suit the love of the present world than the doctrines of grace suit self-admiration. Christ will keep no man against his will. We do not find that Christ called back the young ruler but he took this occasion to instruct his disciples.

The difficulty of the salvation of those who have an abundance of this world's goods, lies in the heart being satisfied, and having their confidence placed in them. There are few who have much to leave, that can be persuaded to leave it for Christ, or to lay it out in doing good. He told them that the danger arose from their placing confidence in riches, expecting protection, provision and a portion from them. Those who have such value for the wealth of the world will never be brought rightly to value Christ and his grace. Those who have ever so much riches, but see their vanity and their utter insufficiency to make a soul happy, have got over the difficulty, and can easily part with them for Christ, while others who have ever so little, if they set their hearts upon that little, and place their happiness therein, it will keep them from Christ. He enforces this assertion with—It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man that trusts in his riches, or inclines to do so, to enter into the kingdom of God. Some writers suggest that the word we translate a camel, signifies a cable rope. A rich man compared with the poor is as a cable compared to a single threat, stronger but not so pliable, and it will not go through the needle's eye unless it is untwisted. So the rich man must be loosed and disentangled from his riches and then there is some hope of him, that thread by thread he may be got through the eye of the needle, otherwise all that he can do is to cast anchor in the earth. Few can possess riches without loving and trusting in them, and it is very hard to break the strong bands which hold a carnal mind to large possessions. The disciples knew what were generally the sentiments of the Jewish teachers, that the spirit of God chooses to reside upon rich men; they knew that all either are rich or fain would be so, and were amazed to hear that it should be so hard for rich people to go to heaven. The greatness of the salvation of those who have but a little of this world, and leave it for Christ. Peter mentioned what he and the other disciples had left to follow Jesus. You have done well, saith Christ, and it will prove in the end that you have done well for yourselves. You shall be abundantly recompensed, and not only you shall be reimbursed, who have left only a little, but those that have much, as this young man had, yet they shall have much more than an equivalent, and this has been the choice of suffering saints. Farewell houses and lands, though so ever convenient and desirable, though the inheritance of fathers, for the house which is from heaven, and the inheritance of the saints in light.

The greatest trial of a good man's constancy is, when his love to Christ comes in competition with love that is his duty. The advantage of obedience will be great. God's providence gave Job double of what he had lost, but suffering Christians shall have a hundred-fold in the comforts of the spirit and life everlasting in the world to come. In this world ye shall have tribulation—but in me ye shall have peace—if we suffer with him and for him, we shall reign with him in glory, and the happiness of heaven will more than compensate us for all our tears and sorrows here.

Yours sincerely,

James Sutherland,

352 1-2 Water Street. July 28th, 1917.

City Engineer Placed In Full Authority Over Princess St. Sewer

Customary Interference of the Board of Works' Chairman and Aldermen is Suspended For This Work, Perhaps For Future Efficiency.

City Engineer Parsons was instructed by the Board of Works last night to proceed with the construction of the Princess street sewer over which he was given entire control. Reference had been made to the tenders for the cost of this sewer. Mr. J. E. Hayes offered to build it at about $8 a foot, the city engineer at $8.48, and the work already completed has cost about $14 a foot. Mr. Parsons stated that this last figure was largely due to the expense of getting ready for the actual operations. To several of the aldermen, he declared that he felt sure he could carry on the work for $8.48 a foot, and he made it clear that he didn't consider himself responsible for the Princess street work already done. The Board had gone over his head to appoint a foreman who reported not to him, but to the chairman of the Board.

Acting-Mayor Duncan—The Engineer is receiving a good salary, we think, and he should have full control of all the work of his department. Other members emphatically supported this opinion, and a motion was passed authorizing Mr. Parsons to proceed with the work on the new basis of responsibility.

It was pointed out that for years the successive chairmen of the Board of Works have followed the precedent of interfering with the Engineer's management. It lessened the effectiveness of the department, and had become a costly incubus upon most of the business of the Board. With the change that interference passes, and future responsibility in this particular piece of work at least, rests with the City Engineer.

Can't Change Advertised Rate.

A communication from City Solicitor Gordon stated that the city could not change the sewer rate of cost if it had been advertised, but there was nothing to prevent the Council from changing the present fixed rate of 52 cents a foot, if it was deemed necessary.

NOT READY TO DIVULGE THE BRUCE REPORT

Ottawa, July 28. — Hon Frank Cochrane yesterday introduced a bill to bring the Intercolonial Railway under the control of the Railway Commission.

Before the orders of the day were called, General Sir Sam Hughes rose. "Has the Minister of Militia," he asked, "any announcements to make as to when the Bruce report in reply to the so-called Baptie report, will be made public? I also desire to ask whether the head of the Baptie Commission is the same General Baptie who was responsible for the notorious scandal in connection with the medical services of the British expeditionary force in Mesopotamia, and who has practically been relegated from the service?"

"The last time this question was brought up in the House," answered Sir Edward Kemp, "the Prime Minister stated that he had referred the Bruce report to the Overseas Minister of Militia (Sir George Perley). I know nothing more about it than what the Prime Minister stated. So far as Surgeon-General Baptie is concerned, I have heard nothing of what the honorable member refers to."

"I do not think that such a document should pass out of the country without some copies of it having been retained here," said General Hughes.

"Is the delay in making public the report due to the fact that the reply to it is being prepared?" asked E. MacDonald, Pictou.

"I have no more information to give than the Premier has not already given," pleaded Sir Edward Kemp.

Enemy Now Asks Deserters Back

Amnesty Promised to those who will Return and Fight.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Germany is reported to be making an appeal to deserters from the German army to return for service under a promise of amnesty, according to information reaching the State Department in a mailed despatch saying that the following notice has appeared in the newspapers of Holland:

"Notice—An Imperial decree insures all German deserters sojourning in foreign countries deferred punishment with prospects of pardon should their conduct during the further course of the war warrant it in the event that they return to Germany without delay at the latest by July 15, 1917. Through this Imperial decree the German deserters are offered an opportunity of returning to the Fatherland under very favourable conditions. Deserters residing in Rotterdam or the vicinity are requested to apply in person to the Imperial German Consulate, Nieuwehaven 131, for further information concerning their return to Germany.

An American Coal Expert In Ontario

TORONTO, July 28.—Mr. C. F. Magrath, Dominion Fuel Commissioner, who spent yesterday in the city, stated last night that the main object of the conference with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association was to ascertain the views of coal consumers on the situation with the object of arranging for co-operative action by all parties to prevent a shortage of fuel during the coming winter. In this regard he is arranging for Mr. J. McCue, of Pittsburg, who is Fuel Commissioner in the States, to visit Canada next week to meet the large consumers in several districts, so that he may have first-hand knowledge of their requirements. Mr. McCue will visit Hamilton on Monday, London on Tuesday, and will be in Toronto on Wednesday next.

CHARLIE THORPE'S RELAY TEAM WON

WITLEY CAMP, (By Mail) July 28.—The 13th Brigade, C.F.A., Relay team, of which Sgt. Thorpe of Peterborough, is Captain, won the four-mile Inter-Regimental relay race; also finished second in the two-mile Inter-Regimental Relay at Stahford Bridge on Saturday last. Sgt. Thorpe ran in both races and ran splendidly.

EVERYDAY READING

I read lately in one of the daily papers some extracts from a sermon preached by one of the ministers of a church denomination. The preacher is said to say that editors of daily papers, magazine writers, sociologists and philosophers were asking the question (that is to be faced after the war). "Are the churches, with their antiquated methods of dealing with the world's needs, ready to cope with the new problems that shall then exist?" He said the world believed that Christianity had the qualification to heal the troubles that face mankind. He goes on to say, the masses have been too long scandalized, deceived and disappointed by those, who parade as paragons of religion on Sunday and put on the "shark nature" once again on Monday. He also says that in order to reinstate Christianity in the place that it ought to occupy in the world, the churches had to purify themselves, and take their proper place at the head of the forces, that make for the world's uplifting and betterment.

It surely is somewhat refreshing to find one amongst his class, getting partially awakened. I do not wish to criticize unfairly or unreasonably to find fault with things as they now exist, but to rather pave the way for better things. Methods, especially if they have been long, standing and have failed to accomplish results, should be laid aside and other means used, if other means are available. We infer from what the preacher said, that he sees, even though it may be dimly, that it is the lack of righteousness in the churches is partly the source of their inefficiency. He speaks as if Christianity had got out of its place. The mistake appears to be, in making it appear, that the religious denominations (churches) represented Christianity. True, in the past, there has been many individuals, connected with these denominations, who truly represented Christianity. At the present time are not the churches and Salvation Army included, very much in the same condition as the man's gun, whose lock, stock and barrel, in fact all of its component parts, were past mending and had to be thrown in the scrap heap. I say, after many years of observation, coming in contact with denominationalism or churchism, in business and other dealings, I am compelled to say they do not represent Christianity. What is the better way or the real way? We answer, Let each individual stand for himself, upholding righteousness, and being at one with God. It has been said "true worth always commands respect." God has provided the remedy, whereby man can live worthily and truly represent Christianity. Let us all, as individuals, separate ourselves from known and doubtful partnerships. If we have been forgetting God and running to practice our own sinful desire, come before God in sincerity, confessing our sin. He is faithful and just to forgive and cleanse from all unrighteousness. This will not be trying some new way or means, but getting back to the old lines, that do not fail. Our country turning to God and righteousness shall be well able to cope with the questions that now and in the future will face us.

"Victor."

SPIES MAY GET PASSPORTS.

Easy to Secure Papers to Leave Scandinavian Ports.

COPENHAGEN, July 27.—Information obtained here shows that more effective measures than are now in force for supervision of Scandinavian liners plying to the United States must be put into effect if the passage of numbers of German agents and couriers and the transmission of intelligence by German spies in America are to be checked. It is said authoritatively that German passport-forging bureaus are equipping German agents in Scandinavia with fraudulent Scandinavian passports.

Well Known Athletes Killed At The Front

LONDON, July 27.—The latest casualty list contains the names of a number of prominent sportsmen, who have made their mark in every branch of British sport. Lieut. A. F. Botham, died of wounds, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Clare College, Cambridge, where he was a Wrangler in 1911, and captained the college rugby fifteen. He was a keen and popular sportsman, and played regularly for the old Merchant Taylors' Club, and also Middlesex County. The well-known English Rugby international, G. E. B. Dobbs, was struck by a shell while returning from prospecting a new cable trench in the front line, and died the same day. He did valuable work during the retreat from Mons, and was three times mentioned in despatches. Dobbs played for England vs. Wales and Ireland in 1905-6.

Another famous Rugby international player, Stanley H. Williams, has been wounded. He played for England in all the 1911 games. Lieut. A. S. Richardson, killed, was captain of the Brighton College soccer eleven and gymnasium team, and also held the college record for the quarter and half mile. In 1913 he entered Caius College, Cambridge, which he represented in football.

The well-known jockey, G. F. Butchers, has been missing for the past two months, and it is feared he has been killed. The last heard of him was that, at considerable risk, he went out to fetch an ambulance for the purpose of carrying away a companion who had been badly wounded. He was the son of the famous Lowes trainer, and his successes included the International Hurdle at Gatwick.

Lieut. T. P. Kipin, who has died of wounds, rowed in the Bedford School eight at Henley Regatta in 1914. Lieut. J. A. P. Whitney, killed, was in the running eight and the football fifteen at Rugby. Major E. M. F. Momber, died of wounds, was well-known in army Rugby football circles as a crack forward.

Lieut. Maurice King, who died in hospital at Kantara from fever, was a splendid all-round athlete. When at Borlase School, Marlow, he played in the cricket and football elevens, captained both, and won the bowling prize. He also won the athletic championship, and set up new records in the high jump and throwing the cricket ball, in addition to equaling the school record in the 100 yards.

ENGLISH DERBY TO BE RUN TUESDAY

Two Irish Horses Will be Starters in Classic Event.

LONDON, July 27.— With the resumption of flat racing in England every branch of sport is now in full swing throughout the country. Followers of the turf will enjoy forty days more racing this season, 26 having been scheduled for Newmarket, while the rest of the provinces will share twelve between them. Much interest is being taken in the famous "Derby," which will be run at Newmarket on Tuesday. Two well-known Irish horses are entered for the big classic— First Flier, wipner of this year's Irish Derby, and Lisnalinchy, which is creating unusual interest.

The Oaks stakes will be decided on Aug. 22nd over the same course.

President Taft was out for his afternoon walk in Washington one day when a flaxen-haired little girl ran out in front of them, held up her finger, and exclaimed in a shrill baby voice: "I know who you are!"

THE MAID OF FRANCE

(By Harold Brighouse, Author of "Hobson's Choice").

An English officer sent home to England for a wreath of ivy and oak, and when it came, he put it on the statue of Jeanne d'Arc in the square before the church. He did it feeling like a fool, for the English hate to be thought capable of sentiment, but he did it honestly in daylight.

And having done it, he went, not with indecent haste, but promptly. There came a French private, a peasant who was born at Domremi, where the Maid was born, and he knelt reverently before the statue. All through that last day of his leave, he would return and kneel before the statue.

A little flower-girl, who was selling flowers that night, for it was Christmas Eve, and people promenaded, found the private kneeling there and gave him one of her precious flowers from the South to put on the statue of Jeanne.

Then an English private, who like Paul, the poilu, was going back to the trenches by the train at two in the morning, came to look for a place where he could rest and found the steps which led to the pedestal of the statue. He say upon them and Paul was horrified. Neither knew much of the language of the other, but, with scraps of each, they managed to understand.

"One does not rest upon these steps, monsieur," said Paul.

"Oh, yes, one does," said Tommy. "I'm doing it."

"But here, monsieur!" he protested. "It is the statue of our Sainted Maid. It is Jeanne d'Arc."

The English soldier was not a man of education. Before he volunteered for the war he was a market porter at Covent Garden, and market porters do not know much about the Maid of France.

"Ark," he asked, looking at the statue, "Is that old Noah's wife? I like his taste."

Paul explained, repeating her name, "In history," he said.

"History," said Tommy. "I begin to understand. Well, it's a long time since the Battle of Waterloo, and we've wiped all that out to-day. We are a long way from the time when we English thought an Englishman was worth any two Frenchmen. We are comrades in the trenches, so let us be comrades here. That train back to the front is not till two a.m. and I'm tired of walking about the town. Lie down beside me, and let us do an Entente together. I'll race you to where the dreams come from."

Paul despaired of making the Englishman understand and his friendliness was so obvious that he permitted himself to be drawn down to rest with Tommy on the steps of the statue. He even opened his heart and spoke his hope to the Englishman. "Monsieur, he said, "It will soon be midnight on Christmas Eve. They say the statues come to life then. Do you think that She will come to life and speak to a little poilu from Domremi?"

"You could have scared me once with a tale like that," said Tommy, "but not to-day. I've been seeing life lately. If old Nelson got down from his perch in Trafalgar Square and I met him in the Strand, I'd only salute and think no more about it. Go to sleep. There is no knowing what you'll dream."

Because it was cold and because two lie warmer than one, they huddled closely together and sleep came to them at once. Midnight chimed, and the Maid awoke and because her time had been near at hand, she remembered the wreath and the English officer, wondering she found the wreath. "I do not dream," she said. "Here is the wreath. Why did he bring it me? I am Jeanne d'Arc, and I hate the English. I vanquished them and they burn me for a witch. I scorn their English wreath."

And she was about to trample on it when Tommy rose and tried to stop her. 'Lady," he said. "Don't do that. I know more about it than what I've just heard you say, but you can take it from me that if one of our lot put that wreath there it was only kindness meant."

"Who are you?" she said. "You, too, are English and what do you do here with a Frenchman in your arms?"

"Why should he not be in my arms? He is a comrade of mine."

"He is French, you are English."

"Maid" said Paul, "you do not understand. I am of Domremi."

She asked him then about Domremi and if the Church were there, and the sheep and the tree where the fairies spoke with her, but soon remembering the Englishman she changed her tone and rated him for fraternizing with a Tommy. Again he said. 'You do not understand. It is the Germans."

"Germans?" she said. 'They did not count when I led France to victory."

"No," said Tommy, "And they will soon not count again.

"They came upon us like the sea," said Paul. "They swept our frontier away, they raped and slaughtered, they broke their treaty and they came through Belgium and Paris was in jeopardy. And then the English came. Oh, not like the Germans, but slowly at first on land, though at sea their navy kept the seas and drove the German flag from off the oceans of the world. Slowly they gathered force for land and came and came until a mighty army stood upon the North and held the German back and in England their women make munitions and their factories are turned into so many arsenals. By air and underneath the sea the Germans try to damage them, and it is as if a fly was buzzing round your head. The English send us men and arms and food and——"

"That will do, old sport," said Tommy, who was blushing. "We only did what's right. No need to make a song about it."

"Our children and our children's children will make songs about what the English did," said Paul.

"It's like this, lady," said Tommy. "There's a big bully gets a swelled head and he knocks down a little fellow called Belgium and kicks him when he's down. Well, it isn't manners and we fellows came along to teach him what's what. That's all. It is nothing."

"Nothing," said Jeanne, and put the wreath on her head. "That wreath stays there and as for you, give me your hand, my braves, both of you who are soldiers of France. Fight on, for France. Jeanne d'Arc is watching and she fights with you."

The statue climbed her horse again and sat in stone. The little flower girl came and stood beside the sleeping soldier. Paul stirred and took her for the maid. "Jeanne! Jeanne!" he said, still half asleep.

Then Tommy stirred. And he too called her Jeanne. "You dream," she said, and they were thoroughly awake. They gasped at her. She was so like the Jeanne to whom in dream they had been speaking.

"If Messieurs do not awake," she said, "they will be late for the train."

"Come along, cocky," said Tommy with his arm affectionately in Paul's. "I told you you couldn't surprise me. We've been doing an entente together, only extra cordial. Dreaming the same dream."

"But, monsieur," said Paul, pointing excitedly at the statue. "See! The wreath! It is on her head. D.d you put it there?"

"I give it up," said Tommy. "Come along."

And together they went to the train and the trench, each with a flower from the South which the girl had given them.

Stars And Stripes On The Vaterland

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Secretary Daniels announced that the American flag was hoisted on the great German Liner Vaterland to-day. He also stated that fifteen other German ships had been taken over by the Government, and the work of fitting them out for transport would be rapidly pushed to completion. The work on all these ships was begun some time ago by contract, under the Shipping Board. The Navy Department has now taken over this work under its direction.

To Light C. P. R. Footbridge And Its Approaches

The C.P.R. footbridge approaches will be lighted at once and, until the lamps are installed, lanterns will be suspended over the placards that announce to the public that the bridge has not been officially opened to traffic. In other words the Council does not hold itself responsible if someone gets dizzy and falls into the river, or if a venturesome cyclist makes the plunge.

The lamps will be provided for the bridge as soon as the railing material arrives, and Ald. Smith states that the invoice has arrived and the iron should follow shortly.

Eight lamps will be required to illuminate the bridge and its approaches, especially the approaches which, on the east side, become a roosting place for night birds youths who ought to be at home under the parental wing.

COMMISSION CALSOMINES BOB ROGERS

Report of McLeod-Teller Commission on Findings of Justice Galt

PREMIER SAYS NOTHING

OTTAWA, July 28.—The report of Sir Ezekiel McLeod and ex-Justice Tellier, the Royal Commissioner appointed on June 6 last to review the findings of Mr. Justice Galt of Winnipeg as to Hon Robert Rogers' connections with graft and campaign funds in the letting of contracts for the Manitoba Agricultural College, was presented to Parliament yesterday. The learned Judges, after renewing all the evidence, came to the conclusion that Justice Galt was quite unjustified in reflecting upon the "honour or integrity of the Hon Mr. Rogers or the honest of his dealings or transactions."

Their findings, so diametrically opposite to the findings of Mr. Justice Galt, are based on exactly the same evidence, no new evidence, with the exception of a few words from Mr. Rogers, having been taken by the second Commission.

IN FULL CHARGE AGAIN.

Last night Mr. Rogers received the congratulations of his Cabinet colleagues and followers in Parliament. He is back on the job again as the Minister of Public Works and out in the open again as being in full charge of the department, although, as a matter of fact, his temporary "suspension" from administrative duties pending the whitewashing process, was a polite euphemism of Sir Robert Borden to placate public opinion.

After hearing the gist of the report, one of the Conservative members approached Mr. Rogers this evening, felt each of his shoulders and then looked beamingly at the crown of his head.

"What's up?" asked Mr. Rogers.

"Oh, I was just trying to feel the wings growing and see the halo, was the jocular reply.

CONTRACT EXPANSION.

The Commissioners deal mainly with the boosting of the contract awarded to the Carter Company for the power house of the new Agricultural Building by $8,700, on the authority of Mr. Rogers, at the time of the Federal election campaign of 1911, and the subsequent campaign contribution from Mr. Carter of $7,500; and the alleged "fradulent conspiracy" between Mr. Rogers and Thomas Kelly in connection with the purchase of the site of the Agricultural Buildings "to obtain moneys from the Provincial Treasury for the purpose of a campaign fund and for the personal benefit of Thomas Kelly and his firm."

CENTRAL PARK.

Sunday night, if the weather is fine, another Gospel Song Service will be held. The special numbers will be "In the Garden," and the "Sinner and the Song," both solos by Mr. G. W. Mulligan. Other hymns will be "More More About Jesus," "Higher Ground" and "Shall We Gather at the River," closing with "When the Roll Is Called." Meeting will start at 8:15.

SISTERS UNITED BY LETTER IN LAST NIGHT'S EXAMINER

That it is frequently the privilege of the press to perform a personal service that is deeply appreciated is illustrated in the uniting of two sisters through the medium of a letter in last night's Examiner. George C. Otto, a Chicago lawyer writing in the interests of Mrs. Alice Maude Lavashere Taylor, addressed a letter to the Mayor, which was turned over to Chief of Police Thompson, who, in turn, handed copies to the press. Mrs. Taylor is ill in an hospital in Three Rivers, Michigan, which she may never leave alive, and was anxious to get in touch with relatives, especially her sister, Mrs. Ada Lavashere Jarvis.

Last night, Mrs. Jarvis was rather startled to read in the Examiner the letter directed to herself, and at once communicated with the police. She is Mrs. Wm. Jarvis, residing at 253 Bethune street. She believed her sister was dead. The last she had heard of Mrs. Taylor was at least ten years ago, at the time of the San Francisco fire, in which she was reported to have lost her life.

Mrs. Jarvis last night wired her sister, and also Mr. Otto for further information. Mrs. Taylor's brother, William, was on the ill-fated Hampshire, of which he was a survivor, and is now on a British submarine. Mrs. Jarvis has three sons, all of whom are in Europe, and one of them has been wounded. Another sister lives in Toronto.

Butter, 38c, 40c per lb.

The outside market consisted largely of small fruit, cherries selling at $1.25 to $1.80 per pail; berries 17c to 20c per box.

PUBLIC OPINION

THE NEW ARMADA.

(Providence Journal).

It is a wonderful armada that we are about to create. Some of the ships will be torpedoed and sent to the bottom, of course; that is to be expected. But it is fair to believe that when the war is ended there will still survive a fine great fleet that can be profitably employed in the channels of peaceful commerce.

WISE MEN OF THE YEAST.

(Toronto Globe).

Members of the Bread and Cake Manufacturers' Association of Ontario are in convention in Toronto, and want a food controller "to bring order out of chaos and ferment," as one speaker phrased it, with a technical touch. This stand is creditable to the association. Will the Government listen to the wise men of the yeast?

CHILD LABOUR.

(Charlotte Perkins Gilman).

No fledgling feeds the father bird;
No chicken feeds the hen;
No kitten mouses for the cat—
This glory is for men:

We are the wisest, strongest race—
Loud may our praise be sung;
The only animal alive
That lives upon its young.

A SLACKER CONGRESS.

(New York World).

The trouble with Congress seems to be that it has no real appreciation of the seriousness of the war or of the necessity for putting the Government on a war basis. It is dawdling along as if the country were at peace, playing small politics with this issue and that issue, and trying to guess what the folks at home are thinking about questions that must be decided by expert advice if they are to be decided intelligently. It is anything but a pleasant spectacle, and if there is any leadership left in Congress it cannot assert itself too soon. Otherwise the American people will find themselves with a broken-down Government in the midst of the most calamitous war known to history.

BABY SHOW AT FAIR.

One of the Most Popular Attractions On the List This Year.

The Amusement Committee of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition have again arranged to place a Baby Show in several classes on the list of attractions for which there will be a good prize list. Some 85 babies were in the contest last year, and it is expected this number will be greatly exceeded this year. If mothers will pay strict attention to their babies and get them in condition and in good health, they may find they have a prize-winning baby.

Particulars as to classes and prizes will be announced later.

VETERANS MAY STAGE FEATURE OF EXHIBITION

The directors of the Peterborough Exhibition last night arranged for a bigger display of fireworks for this year's show, and also handled other details of the Exhibition. Negotiations are under-way between the directors and the Great War Veterans' Association to stage a military spectacle which may include trench construction, raiding, night work, and other details to be staged by the men who have been through the show. If this feature materialized it will undoubtedly be an interesting and novel attraction.

The races will be the same programme as last year. The following judges have been appointed:

Heavy Horses—Job White, of Myrtle, Ont.
Light Horses—William Maher, Cobourg.
Races—J. A. Sinclair, Cannington.
Beef Cattle—Joseph Johnston, Ashburn.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear boy, Ollie Wilder, who was drowned early Sunday morning, July 30th, 1916:
Short and sudden was the call
Of one so dearly loved by all,
The blow was great the shock severe
We little thought his death so near,
And only those who loved can tell
The pain at not saying a last farewell,

Germany still has machines, but how about man power? These seventeen-year-old boys captured on the battle line tell a story of desperation.

: VIEWS THE WORLD OVER - CANADIAN WOMEN WORK AND DISCUSS CANADA'S PROBLEMS :

Many cities and towns in Ontario have lately indulged in some pardonably big feelings. Over in France lately there has been an American Admiral who feels himself a little taller in his boots than he did a few weeks ago. The Admiral's name is William Howden Sims, at present commander of the U. S. destroyer fleet in British waters.

Every little while Sir John Jellicoe steps back into the public gaze. Since he gave over his command of the great High Seas Fleet to Sir David Beatty and became our First Sea Lord, now Chief of the new Naval Staff, he has become less mysterious than he was as the jailer of the German Navy in the North Sea. He is here seen leaving the Conference of the Allied Military and Naval leaders in Paris.

Above—Nocturnal Army Plane landing by means of a searchlight. Below.— British M.P.'s at Bethnal Green inform well-hatted, leisurely crowds that trench-fit men should be let out of munition works instead of calling up discharged soldiers. And what is the crowd of stay-at-homes supposed to do about it?

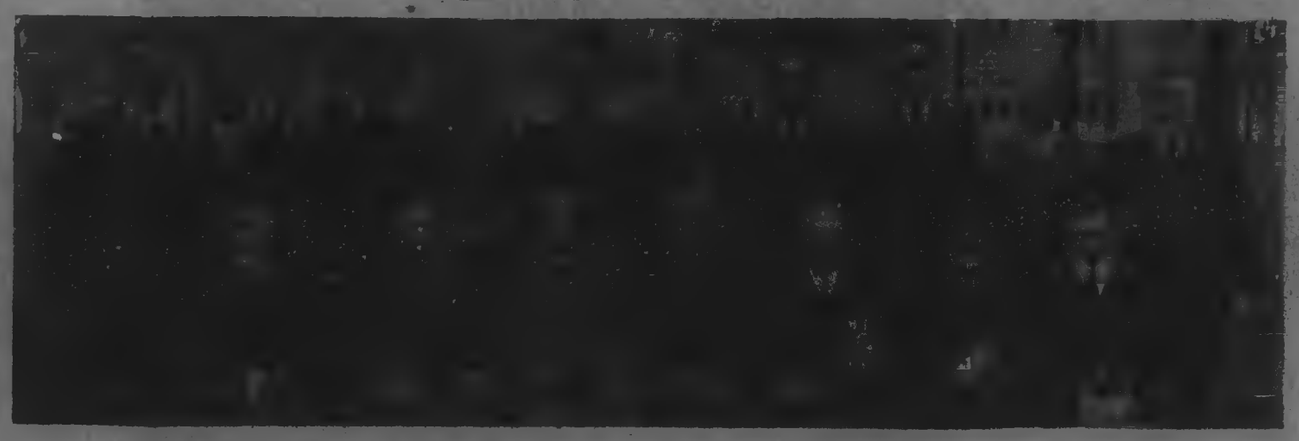
Our Tommie in the punt with the wing on it says to himself, as he glides along—restfully—that Sir David Beatty will never know what a great man-o'-war's-man was lost when he went to the infantry.

Every now and then King George and Queen Mary go among the workers, the soldiers or the sick. Down below is a picture taken at Birkenhead—one of the shipbuilding yards. His Majesty talking earnestly to one of the old shipwrights so fortunate as to be introduced to their Majesties. That man doesn't agree with H. G. Wells, that monarchies should be abolished.

Teddy just broke loose in the picture above. He was reviewing home defenders at Mineola, L. I., in his home county, Nassaw. After the 4,000 defenders had marched past Teddy jumped on a table and did a Billy Sunday performance to 25,000.

This khaki musician—S. A. soldiers at the front—is giving a good imitation of the Minstrel Boy and his harp on the strings of an old piano, while his comrades have dinner.

Over the Patchwork Quilt.—In these pictures from Gladstone, Man., we see the new life of the Canadian woman working on the new emergency in the old-fashioned woman's way. The quilt itself is but the occasion, not for gossip, as it used to be, but for talking about the new work of woman in this country. These women, we take it, are talking about what Mr. Hanna, the Food Controller, wants them to do in the matter of saving food that the soldiers of the Allies may not want.



These citizens of Vancouver flatly and reasonably asked the Government to take the Port of Vancouver off the City of Vancouver's hands; to extend, improve and undertake its upkeep; to take harbor dues imposts off the tonnage entering and leaving; in short, to nationalize the Port of Vancouver as we have already nationalized the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John. They also ask for a dry dock to cost $2,500,000. The total movement of tonnage in and out of Vancouver port, including that which passes en route to Europe and from U. S. ports by call to the Orient, aggregates $200,000,000 a year. Until we have a nationalized port on the Pacific, Canada will never be a nation.

A few of the things that don't often get into the Newspapers—Natural Wealth Down by the Sea, from Marsh Hay to Plaster of Paris and Lobsters. Canadian and Other Timely Pictures of Interest.

Newfoundlandesque enough—you never could m ss it: a ribbon of road, a little church and a lobster factory at Amherst in the Magdalen Islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Below are a few acres of gypsum down in New Brunswick, the raw material of plaster of Paris.

High tide near Kentville, N.S. The marsh hay has been stacked on platforms waiting for the hay boat.

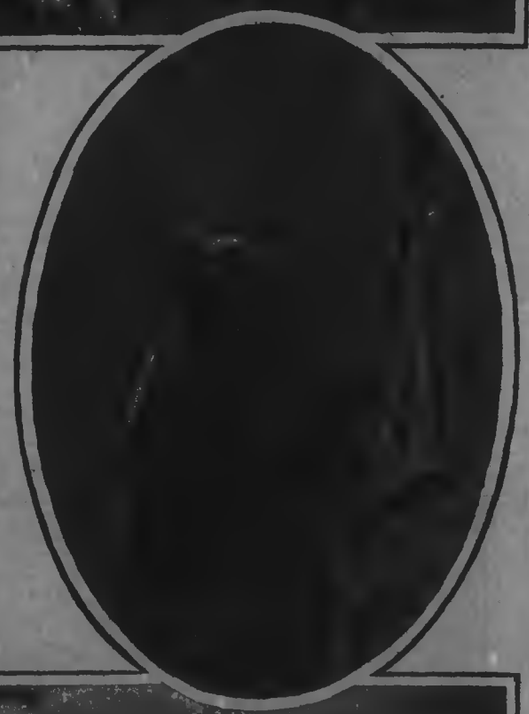
Further aids to reducing the H. C. of L. Stacks of dried fish, with the characteristic Digby ox-team to haul it away.

Most of the oil for the big navies comes from the Mexican oil-fields, where German plotters have lately been trying to blow up the British and American controlled properties. This is a picture of a blown-up oil well at Tampico.

All Uncle Sam had ready some months before declaring war to make any immediate move on Germany was the navy. And it was the naval issue that provoked the "state of war." The submarine, Germany's deadliest weapon, will be her boomerang. To curb the submarine is President Wilson's chief business. There can be no invasion of the United States except by submarine and airship, so long as the great navy of England bottles up the German fleet. The navy of Uncle Sam is not a great navy. But it is high among the second-ups.



The U. S. submarine C4 arriving alongside the Cruiser Charleston, in Gateno Lake, Panama region. Uncle Sam is a "holy terror" at building submarines. It was a Yankee who invented the submarine.

Illinoisians in Winnipeg to increase Canadian food production. Students from the Illinois University Agricultural College recently arrived in Winnipeg to help put in and take care of Canada's 1917 western crop. They responded to Canada's call through the Government for increased food production. What of the call for more ships to help the great Canadian railways carry the food?

Women timber cutters at Ludlow, Shropshire, England, loading a waggon with timbers they have cut, for the army in France.

An open show of hands on Tower Hill, London, voted almost unanimously in favor of air-reprisals on Germany. The Manchester Guardian thinks reprisals would be useless because "in a competition of horrors Germany will beat us every time," and in any case Germany is boomeranged by the hostility of the world at large arising out of her campaign of horrors. The Dean of Manchester favors giving Germany Roland for Oliver. The real question, he says, is whether acts of reprisal do or do not possess a sufficient military value. In his opinion the responsibility rests with the nation that makes savage reprisals necessary. Arthur Ritson in The Clarion says in answer to the statement that we can never hope to beat the Germans at their own game: "The Germans have been beaten every time, whenever they have been subjected to reprisals, so long as they believed that the reprisals were made in earnest. For instance. Paris has never been subjected to a raid since the French devastated Karlsruhe."

GERMAN CLASS FAVOURITISM

According to a report recently printed in the Berliner Tageblatt and copied in the London press, the German Imperial Clothing Bureau has announced that "for political reasons it is empowering a quite limited circle of persons to buy clothes without clothes tickets."

It is carefuly pointed out that the right to grant such privilages is reserved to the Imperial Clothing Bureau alone, and does not belong to other persons or authorities. No explanation is given of the "political reasons" which justify overdressing, and the public is left to guess whether the privilege is intended for leaders of parties or for couriers to Norway and other representatives of Germany who may have to pass muster in foreign countries.

Balkan Armies Are Recalled, No Wavering In Fighting War, Renewed Pledge Of Allies

Paris Conference Decides to Withdraw Forces From Greece, Thesaly and Epirus—Arms Will Never Be Laid Down Until Criminal Aggression of Prussia is Crushed.

PROTECTION FOR GREECE

PARIS, July 30.—The Allied Powers have ended their conference after announcing a decision to continue the war until the object for which they are fighting is attained.

Their declaration, which was made unanimously before separating, reads:—

"The Allied Powers, more closely united than ever for the defence of the people's rights, particularly in the Balkan peninsula, are resolved not to lay down arms until they have attained the end which in their eyes dominates all others—to render impossible a return of the criminal aggression such as that whereof the Central Empires bear the responsibility."

There was unanimous agreement on all decisions reached during the meetings. The Ministers of departments affected will meet in London to draw up the executive measures. The Entente Powers decided to withdraw their troops as soon as possible from ancient Greece, Thessaly and Epirus.

The following announcement respecting the decision of the Allies concerning the Greek territory now occupied by their military forces was published:

"France, Great Britain and Italy, simultaneously, and as soon as possible, will end the occupations they have been obliged to make in ancient Greece, Thessaly and Epirus. The military occupation of the triangle formed by the Santi Quaranta road and the Epirus frontier will be maintained provisionally as a masure of security, Italy and Greece to agree as regards re-establishment of the civil administration under a commission appointed by Greece. France, Great Britain and Italy will preserve during the war a naval and military base on the island of Corfu, the islnad remaining under the sovereignty of Greece."

This withdrawal of troops will not affect the status of military operations on the Macedonian front. The dethronement of King Constantine and the entrance of Greece into the war has relieved the Entente Allies of the necessity of maintaining troops in Athens and elsewhere in old Greece to prevent an attack from the rear, and it is these forces which are to be withdrawn. Entente troops have been sent to Epirus, to Thessaly, to protect the grain fields, and to several other points as well as Athens. Italian troops have been penetrating Epirus, in Northwestern Greece, and Italy was credited in some quarters with aspirations to retain control of this territory, although the Italian government stated it merely desired to maintain order. This sources of friction between Italy and Greece has been removed by the Paris agreement providing for the evacuation of all Greek Epirus with the exception of the small triangle designated, opposite the Island of Corfu.

The fighting front is in Greek Macedonia and Southern Serbia, to the north of the districts affected by the Allies' decision.

AISNE RIDGE FIGHT EQUALLED THE WORST DAYS OF VERDUN

Correspondent of Paris Journal Describes Scene Back of Front Lines—Positions Lost and Rewon Repeatedly —Five Days of Attack Followed Eight of Bombardment, Prussians Losing Heavily.

FRENCH HELD ALL POSTS

PARIS, July 30.—George Prade, correspondent of the Paris Journal on the French front, paints the battle for Craonne in these vivid colours:—

"A long, gray-black tableland, dipping gently toward the east, is the Californie Plateau, dropping on to the plain toward Chevreaux and Corbeny, than a interminable ridge stretching to the west by the Casemates, Vauclerc and Hurtebise plateau, breathed in soft light. Up there the tempest rages uninterruptedly like an active volcano, witht visions of earth hurled into space and sharp bursts of red flame in the black of the woods.

"Around us men are busy observing through glasses and wearing telephone helmets, yelling out figures. Others in shelters carpeted with maps calculate and write orders. Bells ring like a telephone exchange.

"Outside in the valley where formerly men lived, loved and dreamed, death is passing. Behind us on the slope's crest grave faced men in blue trench helmets are stretched on the grass and gaze with a far-off look at the terrifying spectable of the ridge aflame. To-night they go into the furnace.

"Let those who read these lines think of what those men whom you will never know are doing for you.

"The fight of the battle of Craonne broke on the morning of July 19 with a violence equal to the worst days of Verdun. Two German armies under the command of Generals Vono Boehm and Von Below, comprising a hundred thousand men, or eight devisions, of Westphalian, Prussian, Bavarian and Baden troops, hurled themselves in a general assault on the Aisne Heights from Cerny to the Californie Plateau.

"Eight days of bombardment had destroyed all the defences. The principal point of attack is the Craonne Massif. Then the 'stosstruppen' and sturm battalions, of the Fifth Guard, attacked. Two hundred batteries had prepared the way along the two kilometre storm centre.

"The poilus were encompassed by the onslaught on both wings, but the enemy carried the Sapinieres' trenches on the centre. For the next five days positions were lost and rewon repeatedly until the morning of July 23, when the French had re-established their line and the Germans were rendered powerless to obtain any advantage.

"As a result of their frightful losses the celebrated Twentieth Brandenburgers have been almost completely annihilated. The enemy is now reforming the shattered Fifth Guard, which represented the flower of his army. The French losses were comparatively light. There is now a relative lull, but the guns rumble incessantly and the calm may be only the augury of a greater clash to come."

GREAT BRITAIN PLACED PRICE UPON HIS HEAD

DANIEL H. WALLACE, DESERTER, ARRESTED IN IOWA ON CHARGE OF TREASON TO UNITED STATES.

Chicago, July 28.—Daniel H. Wallace, one of the organizers in Chicago recently of the "League of Humanity," composed of men and women, who styled themselves as conscientious objectors to war, was arrested at Davenport, Iowa, yesterday, on a charge of high treason. He is to be taken to Ottumwa for a hearing.

Wallace, author of "Shanghaied into War," according to his own statement and that of fellow members of the "League of Humanity," is a deserter from the British army. According to an official of the League the British government has set a price upon Wallace's head.

Wallace claims to have been through many of the most important battles on the western front in Europe, deserting after the battle of Neuve Chapelle. He also claims to have been a member of the Texas Rangers, lance sergeant in the Coldstream Guards, and to have more recently belonged to the Eighth Australian Light Horse. He has been active in work against war since coming to America, and has delivered speeches, and written books against it.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

How the Scale Was Turned

An Incident of the Russian Revolution

By F. A. MITCHEL

I.

Stephan Mikhailof left the duma, where he had been working hard for days to bring about a change in the government which had endured without break for many centuries. Calling a droshky, he entered it, telling the coachman to drive him to his home, and throwing himself back on the cushion behind him, closed his eyes and remained in a position denoting exhaustion till the vehicle drew up before his house on a broad avenue lining the Neva. Descending from the droshky, he paid the driver his fare and entered his home.

He was met in the hall by his daughter Marya, a girl not long turned seventeen. Marya was a typical Russian. Her eyes were a pale blue, her complexion soft white with a faint tinge of rose, her hair so light that had it not been for her youthful face it might have almost been mistaken for the whiteness of age.

"Oh, father," she said, "I am so glad that you have come. Sergius Ivanovitch is in Petrograd, his regiment having arrived last night. He has been to see me and begs me to intercede with you to gain your consent to our betrothal."

"Why do you trouble me about this matter," replied the father angrily, "at such a time? Do you not know that we are on the eve of a consummation of efforts that have been working for half a century to throw off the despotism which sucks the lifeblood of our people? Besides, it is impossible that you, the descendant of a long line of nobles, should unite with a commoner."

"But, papa, are you not working for the cause of the people?"

"Yes, but that is no reason why I should take one of the people into my family."

"Sergius is an officer, the youngest captain in his regiment."

"He was a common soldier in the ranks."

"And was promoted on account of his having more influence over his comrades than all the other officers of the regiment together."

"Enough. I have neither time nor inclination to argue with you on this point while engaged in the great work of pulling down the tottering bureaucracy. You know that the czar, aware of our efforts to free Russia, dissolved the representative assembly which we wrung from him in the last revolution. You know that we refused to be dissolved. This from the government's point of view is revolution, treason. Had the czar the power his predecessors had every member of the duma would either be sent to Siberia or executed. Even as it it, remember that your father is in jeopardy. If we succeed we will free our country; if we fail we will be proscribed. Our chains will be so riveted that the sledge of a Titan cannot break them."

"But surely you will win."

"Not if the czar continues to pour troops into the capital. All autocratic governments are supported by bayonets. The officers are usually chosen from the aristocratic classes, and the officers control the men. When the war began the bureaucracy controlled the appointment of officers and took care to appoint those upon whom they could rely to support the throne. Many of these officers have gone down in the struggle with the central powers, and their places have been filled by men from the people.

"It is to be supposed that the czar has concentrated such regiments in Petrograd as are officered by a superfluity of men upon whom he can rely. We are secretly arranging for a coup d'etat. Tomorrow morning the people will turn out in the streets and demand food. Their clamor will increase till the troops are called upon to quell the disturbance. That will be the critical moment. The revolution will commence, and its success depends upon whether the troops can be relied upon to shoot down the revolutionists. Now, my child, I must get some rest. I have not slept for two nights. Do not mention again the name of Captain Ivanovitch. I will never consent to a union between you and any man who is not your equal in social rank."

The father was about to turn away when the daughter stopped him.

"But, papa," she said anxiously, "is not this a too dangerous move in which you are engaged? What course will our generals at the front take? Will they not protect the czarina and her children with their lives?"

"The czarina!" cried Mikhailof angrily. "It is this German woman who has brought about this grave crisis. She has been furnishing our enemies with information of our movements and our necessities. Through her influence trains laden with our stores have been sent from west to east instead of from east to west. In league with the detestable Rasputin she has baffled the efforts of those noble generals at the front who you are thinking may protect her.

"It is they who have called upon us here to bring about this revolution. They have arranged that the czar shall be arrested and forced to abdicate for himself and for his son. The members of the imperial family are to be held prisoners in the palace. The best men in Russia are watching and waiting to form a new government."

While Mikhailof had been talking Marya had been listening intently, at the same time thinking of her lover, who on the morrow would take part in this great movement, anxious both for him and her father.

Stephan Mikhailof staggered upstairs to his room and without removing his clothes threw himself on the bed and was asleep the moment he touched it.

A few minutes later there was a summons at the street door, and Captain Ivanovitch entered the house. Marya joined him immediately.

"Have you seen your father?" the captain asked anxiously.

"Yes," replied Marya in a voice that trembled. "He has refused his consent."

Marya ran over what her father had told her as to that which was expected to occur the next day. When she had finished she asked her lover whether, when the revolution occurred, the troops would fire on the people.

"That is a matter of uncertainty. The men are in sympathy with the crowds they will be ordered to shoot down. Some of the officers are revolutionists, and some are loyal to the czar. This is the case in my regiment, and I believe it is true of the others unless it may be some of the more aristocratic commanders, where the officers all support the bureaucracy. Success or failure depends upon whether the people or the bureaucracy can win over the troops to their side."

II.

The next morning there was a feeling in Petrograd that momentous events were to be enacted. For a long while speculators had tied up food or the railroads had been overburdened transporting munitions of war, or the bureaucracy, which must receive its sop from the sale of everything the people needed, had been working its game. At any rate, while Russia was surfeiting in provisions there was a dearth of eatables in Petrograd. Crowds began to collect in the streets, and such places as were intended for the sale of food were surrounded. It seemed that every one living in the capital was interested in what was going on. Then regiments of soldiers were marched through the thoroughfares to positions to which they had been assigned. As they passed the crowds they were cheered, and they answered the salutes good naturedly. But their commanders remained rigid.

The troops of the —th regiment, of which Sergius Ivanovitch was a captain, were ordered to attack a number of laborers who had revolted. Their colonel, having drawn them up in line, gave the order to aim and was about to follow it with the word "Fire!" when Captain Ivanovitch stepped out before the soldiers and said:

"Soldiers, if you fire on these men, who are simply demanding bread that is denied them by the bureaucracy, you shall first kill me."

There were sounds of the dropping of the butts of rifles along the line, first a few, then an increase, followed by hundreds together. Then the workmen advanced and shook hands with the soldiers, and the crisis had passed.

The events of that memorable day followed in rapid succession, and the next day it was announced that the long line of Russian rulers, including so many despots—Ivan the Terrible, Catherine, whose immoral character had so stained the imperial ermine—had for the first time been broken if not ended.

Stephan Mikhailof, who went to sleep at his home the night before the revolution, did not awaken till the next afternoon. He was aroused by shouts and cheers without. Going to a window, he saw a large concourse of people standing in the street looking up at his house. Raising the sash, he bent forward and, looking down, saw that the center of the crowd's attraction was an officer in uniform standing on the landing of the steps leading up to the front door. While the crowd waved hats and handkerchiefs the officer was bowing his acknowledgments.

Mikhailof, having been clothed, was sufficiently presentable to go downstairs to learn what all this meant. He was met by his daughter.

"Who is the officer without?" he asked.

"Sergius Ivanovitch."

"And why is the crowd cheering him?"

"Because, papa, while you have been asleep there has been a revolution. The turning point came when Sergius' regiment was ordered to fire on some workmen. It was at an aim, ready to mow down the rebels, when Sergius stood between the regiment and the workmen and told the soldiers that if they fired on men who were simply demanding bread denied them by the bureaucracy they must first kill him. That turned the scale. The workmen and the soldiers fraternized, and from that moment regiment after regiment took the part of the people."

Marya's last words were drowned by a prolonged cheer without. Captain Ivanovitch turned and entered the house. The crowd dispersed.

Ivanovitch, seeing Mikhailof, paused.

"He came to see me, papa," said Marya, "and the crowd followed him here."

"It appears," said Mikhailof to the captain, "that while I have been sleeping the revolution has taken place and you have performed no small part of it."

"He stepped in at the crisis," said Marya, "and brought the soldiers to espouse the cause of the people."

"You mean I turned my regiment to the cause of the people," said Sergius modestly.

Mikhailof advanced to Ivanovitch and, putting both arms about him, kissed him, according to the Russian custom, first on one cheek, then on the other.

Broker Is Slain, Woman Shot By Jealous Husband

Arthur A. Sullivan Dead, Companion Dying, After Saloon Row

ATTEMPTED TO END HIS OWN LIFE IS FRUSTRATED BY A POLICEMAN.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Arthur A. Sullivan, a stock broker, with an office at No. 25 Beaver street, was shot and killed in the rear room of a saloon at Tompkins and Lexington avenues, Brooklyn, by Anthony Maximini, a truck driver, who accused Sullivan of alienating the affections of Maximini's wife.

Mrs. Maximini's twenty-three years old, fleeing from her husband, was followed by Maximini and shot in the shoulder as she dashed through the crowded barroom of the saloon. Although seriously wounded, Mrs. Maximini struggled until she fell into the arms of George Mulranen, of No. 379 Hancock street, who ran to her aid. As the woman collapsed and Mulranen saved her from falling. Maximini fired two more shots into her body. She is dying in St. John's Hospital.

Sullivan, according to the police version of the affair, was the son of a one-time Assistant District Attorney of Brooklyn, who died several years ago. He was thirty years old and, although married and having a daughter about six ears old, lived with his mother and a brother at No. 619 Greene avenue, Brooklyn. The police were informed that the whereabouts of Sullivan's wife was not known. They found the dead man's mother was ill and her condition so serious that news of her son's death was kept from her, and his body was removed to the morgue.

TRIES TO SHOOT HIMSELF

Maximini was arrested just as he reloaded his revolver and placed the barrel of it against his right temple. He pulled the trigger once, but the cartridge missed fire as a policeman knocked the weapon from his grasp.

Maximini admitted the shooting. He said he met his wife about a year ago and that they were married five months ago. Their happiness was short lived, however, according to a statement Maximini made to Reuben Wilson, Assistant District Attorney. The prisoner declared he found his wife desired considerably more entertainment and night life than he was able to give her on his small earnings as a truck driver, and that a month after the marriage they separated.

Despite the separation, Maximini declared, he kept track of his wife. He said he learned she spent much time in the company of other men. Last night, Maximini declared, he sought Sullivan and pleaded with him to keep away from Mrs. Maximini. The slayer asserted Sullivan told him he would not permit Maximini or any one else to tell him who might be his companions.

After a long talk, Maximini asserted, he and Sullivan parted, with an understanding that they would meet later in the night, to settle the controversy. Mavimini told Mr. Wilson he went to his home, which is at No. 411 Ocean Avenue, a fashionable apartment building in the Flatbush section, of which Maximini's father is janitor. There Maximini told the Assistant District Attorney, he obtained a revolver, filled all of the five chambers, and placed five extra cartridges in his pocket.

Says He Found them together.

Then he started for the saloon of William Schmitt, at Lexington and Tompkins avenues, where, he said, he had reason to believe he would find his wife and Sullivan. As he entered the rear room of the saloon Maximini said he saw Mrs. Maximini and Sullivan drinking at a table. He approached the tale, he said, greeted his wife and sat down.

To strengthen his nerve, Maximini said he went into face his wife and Sullivan. For nearly an hour, Maximini said, he sat and talked quietly with Sullivan and Mrs. Maximini pleading with them to keep away from each other.

Finally, Mr. Wilson said Maximini told him, Maximini stood up, and announced that he thought it was about time for him and Sullivan to settle their differences, as Sullivan had suggested earlier in the night. Maximini reached into his pocket and drew out his revolver. Sullivan tried to flee when he saw the weapon. He was half way to the door leading to Tompkins Avenue when a bullet struck him in the back of the head and he fell dead. Maximini fired another shot into his victim's back before starting in pursuit of his wife.

Wife Shot as She Flees.

Mrs. Maximini burst through the door fro mthe sitting room into the crowded barroom of the saloon crying for help. Her husband ran after her. His first shot took effect in the right shoulder, but she struggled on and ran out into Lexington avenue. No one in the saloon was able to intercept Maximini and he continued after his wife. She was half a block away when she fell into Mr. Mulranen's arms. Mulranen himself narrowly escaped being killed as Maximini fired the last two shots into his wife's body.

Maximini was caught by Policeman James Styne of the Clymer street station, who was off duty and, without his uniform when he knocked the revolver from the slayer's hands. Maximini was locked up accused of homicide.

Sullivan was well known in the Wall street district, where he had worked since he was a boy. He was a member of the Home Defence League attached to the First Precinct, in Manhattan.

TROOPS DEPART FOR "OVER THERE."

Loading of Transports Will be Feature of "Big Fair" Spectacle.

A National Spectacle will be the Grand Stand production at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, planned on a scale calculated to write a new page into the history of patriotic pageantry. The Heights of Quebec are to be reproduced on a mammoth scale, with the St. Lawrence and its burden of battleships and fighting craft in the foreground. The story will deal with the half century from Confederation to the present day, and patriotism and infectious faith in Canada will dominate the giant-sized panorama, which will achieve a thrilling climax when file after file of Overseas Troops embark on huge transports and proceed down the river behind a convoy of destroyers on their way across the submarine-infested seas to the battle fronts "Over There."

Kilties In New York

NEW York has been captured by the Kilties. Lieut.-Col. C. W. Darling's brass band and detail of the 48th (Gordon) Highlanders from Toronto, and Lieut.-Col. Percy A. Guthrie's pipers from the Clan McLean have succeeded in winning the heart of Gotham. From the time the Highland laddies arrived early Monday morning until they departed at four o'clock on Sunday afternoon for Chicago, they have been in the centre of a constant whirl of excitement. They have toured New York, Brooklyn, Newark and outlying districts. They have been to Coney Island and the ball game. They have been feted and toasted in the cafes and cabarets. They have been royally entertained. The skirl of the pipes and the gaudy plaids of the kilts delighted old Father Knickerbocker's heart.

The last week was recruiting week in New York and the British Recruiting Mission, headed by Brig.-Gen. W. A. White, was well "up-stage and centre," brilliantly displayed by the calcium light of every means of publicity known. The kilties have helped stimulate recruiting tremendously. They have made the Americans realize, as probably few other forces could, the nearness of this war of nations. While the appeal of the kilties was to the British and Canadians in the United States, the Americans declare the Highlanders did as much for their hosts as for themselves. United States recruiting officers say that recruiting has jumped ahead briskly since the kilties came.

A dozen men in Montreal and Toronto, headed by E. W. Beatty, Vice-President and General Counsel of the Canadian Pacific Railway, raised $10,000 among themselves to finance the 48th (Gordon) Highlanders on their two weeks' trip to New York and Chicago.

Lieut.-Col. J. S. Dennis, who has been assistant to Lord Shaughnessy, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is in charge of the Western Division of the British Recruiting Mission, with headquarters at Chicago. Although the Chicago and Minneapolis offices have been open less than three weeks almost one thousand men have been recruited in that time. Lieut.-Col. Dennis plans to establish branch recruiting offices in all the principal cities in the United States near the Canadian border west of Chicago. He also plans to have representation in the larger cities of California. He is, in fact, inaugurating a west-wide whirlwind campaign for recruits for the British army.

There are a great many British in the United States and it is hoped to bring the appeal home to them by a lively campaign. In Chicago alone, there are almost 350,000 persons of British allegiance. While the proportion may not be so large in other cities, there is a very good percentage of British born.

In passing it might be well to note that this is the first time since 1812 that a British force, armed and carrying its regimental colors, has stood on American soil. The event was indeed historic.

He Spent Enough To Pay For Home

Suffering of 30 Years Cost Doman Hundreds—Tanlac Brings Relief

Remarkable, indeed, was the statement made a few days ago by John Doman, section foreman for the London and Port Stanley Railroad, who lives at 184 Maitland street, London, who declared that he has derived more benefit from two bottles of Tanlac than from other treatment and medicines that had cost him enough money to pay for a good house and lot. His statement follows:

"I have been a sufferer from stomach trouble and catarrh in my head for thirty years. My food would sour and seem like lumps of lead in the pit of my stomach. I suffered terribly from the gas on my stomach and heartburn, and would sometimes belch up great mouthfuls of a substance so hot and sour it would put my teeth on edge. My appetite went back on me and for the past two years, that is until I began taking Tanlac, my breakfast consisted of corn-meal and milk. I was so nervous I could hardly sleep and would often get up at night and sit around trying to get my nerves quiet so I could get a little rest. I suffered a great deal from the catarrh in my head, had flighty feelings, was badly constipated and always taking something for this trouble. All my strength and energy seemed to leave me, and I would get up in the mornings feeling unfit for my work.

"I have just finished my second bottle of Tanlac and have started on my third and, honestly, it has helped me more than other treatment and other medicines that have cost me enough to pay for a good home. Tanlac is the only thing that has ever helped my catarrh at all, and that is so much better already that I believe it will soon be gone entirely. I can eat anything that is put on the table now, and it don't hurt me a particle. Gas has stopped forming and my tired, draggy feelings have left me. I go to sleep almost as soon as I get in bed at night, and never wake up until the alarm clock goes off in the mornings. I am not constipated like I was, don't have those weak, dizzy feelings any more, and my strength is built up until I can do my work without any trouble. I expect to take three more bottles of Tanlac as a clincher, and when my wife comes home from Michigan and sees what it has done for me she's going to want to try it, too. Well, its great, everybody ought to know about it and it's a pleasure for me to tell them what it has done for me."

PARIS, July 28.—With the object of assuring France's agricultural development and preventing a labour crisis, the Academy of Agriculture has unanimously demanded of the authorities that vessels which are being used to carry food to the army in the Orient shall be employed on their return to bring phosphates from Algeria and Tunis.

The academy further requests that motor culture be introduced on large as well as small estates; that war material factories be instructed to employ their resources in labour for the construction of tractors as soon as an armistice is declared, and that schools of motor culture for the benefit of farmers be instituted in all districts.

Girl Used As Lure To Secure Divorce

Cold Blooded Conspiracy Against Philadelphia Broker Exposed in Court

That every inch of ground will be hard fought in the trial of Attorney William I. Garrison and those indicted with him in the alleged conspiracy to "frame up" testimony upon which Mrs. Helen Knittel could base an action for divorce from her husband, Charles A. Knittel, Atlantic City and Philadelphia realty broker, has been evident since the trial opened at May's Landing, N.J.

Mrs. Mae Abrams, mother of Kitty Abrams Alderman, the "woman" in the case, was the star witness. Futile efforts were made by the defence to keep her evidence from going in, but the court ruled it was admissible.

Mrs. Abrams stated that Counsellor Garrison had represented her and her daughter in a damage suit against the Shill Rolling Chair Company of Atlantic City, and while in his office in connection with it had suggested that "Kitty" act as a private detective for him in a divorce case. Her work, as outlined by Detective Herbert, was to inveigle Knittel into a compromising position. According to the testimony Kitty followed instructions, and at a signal from her Mrs. Knittel and the detectives got the evidence they bargained for.

Mrs. Abrams testified she called at Garrison's office with her daughter the next day and Kitty was handed an envelope containing $200 by Miss McGowan, a detective working with Detective Herbert. Garrison also congratulated her on the success of the job, and offered to give the mother employment of the same nature, which she refused.

Garrison then suggested that they leave the city. Later they returned to the shore and encountered Dr Weinberg, and he told them he had "framed up" the case for Mrs. Knittel and urged them to leave the jurisdiction. They agreed. He called upon them in Philadelphia subsequently and urged them to leave immediately, because bench warrants had been issued by the Chancery Court. He took them at midnight to Albany, N.Y.

They came back to Philadelphia, but were once more hurried away, this time to Reading. Again they returned to Philadelphia, and were taken to Cleveland. They were requested to go to California or to Mexico—anywhere they chose to go, and to live well during the progress of the court proceedings which resulted from the filing of the divorce petition, but to remain out of Pennsylvania or any place near by. They were supplied with money varying in amounts from $100 to $2,000.

The case is not concluded.

INVENTED NEW GRENADE

Ontario Boy who Rose From Private to Colonel Returns Home.

OTTAWA, July 26.—Having risen from rank of private in 10th Overseas Battalion to that of colonel, inventing a grenade now being adopted for the British armies, and been decorated with the Distinguished Conduct Medal and the French Croix de Guerre, Col. Macklem, of Tilbury, Ont., now blind in one eye, has returned to Canada, and is now in Ottawa on his way to Washington, on a mission for the British Government. It was while convalescing in hospital he invented a new type of grenade for which the British Government has paid him £20,000 in cash and a royalty upon the manufacture. He has also been informed that the adoption of his grenade means a saving of £103,000 a day to the British Government and the preservation of many soldiers' lives.

RIVALS ONCE, BUT NOW FIGHTING SIDE BY SIDE IN FRANCE

NEW YORK, July 26.— The Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, which fraternized on neighbouring flag poles during the international polo matches in 1911, 1913 and 1914, at Meadowbrook, have been sent abroad to the Hurlingham Club by the Polo Association. With the flags went a letter signed by Chairman Henry L. Herbert, saying it seemed appropriate that the flags which had flown side by side to display the friendship of the two countries in sport should be presented to their polo rivals. Several of the players, who were seen on the Meadowbrook polo field have been killed in action at the front.

AUSTRALIAN WAR TAX.

MELBOURNE, July 26.— The Government on the second reading of the war-time profits tax bill, announced that the tax would be fifty per cent for the year ending 30th June, 1916 and 75 per cent. after that date. The tax would be levied on excess profits during the war, compared with profits before the war. Exemptions include agriculture, fruit-growing, dairying and allied businesses.

President Expresses Admiration to Father of Nebraskans.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—In a letter to J. H. McShanee of 1,906 Chicago street, Omaha, Neb., expressing admiration for the action of McShane's six sons in enlisting, President Wilson wrote:

"May I not turn away from the duties of the day for a moment to express my admiration for the action of your six sons in enlisting in the service of the country. They are making and through them you are making a very noble contribution to the fine story of patriotism and loyalty which has always run through the pages of American history."

BADGE OF COURAGE IN WAR CAN BE A HOUSEHOLD APRON

ECONOMY SHOULD BE MADE FASHIONABLE.

Secretary of Agriculture Gives Patriotic Hints of How to Serve Nation in the Kitchen.

"Make economy fashionable, lest it become obligatory.

"Make saving rather than spending your social standard.

"Demonstrate thrift in your homes and encourage thrift among your neighbors."

These are suggestions to the nation's housewives from D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington. They have been forwarded to the Housewives' Welfare Association.

In his appeal to the women of the United States, which the association has responded to, Secretary Houston says:

"Every woman can render important service to the nation in its present emergency. She need not leave her home nor abandon her home duties to help the armed forces. She can help to feed and clothe our armies and help to supply food to those beyond the seas by practising effective thrift in her own household.

"Every ounce of food the housewife saves from being wasted in her home—all food which she or her children produce in the garden and can or preserve, every garment which care and skilful repair make it unnecessary to replace—all lessen that household's draft on the already insufficent world supplies.

"To save food the housewife must learn economical and properly balanced meals which, while nourishing, each member of the family properly do not encourage over-eating or offer excessive and wasteful variety. It is her duty to use all effective methods to protect food from spoilage by heat dirt mice or insects. She must acquire the culinary ability to utilise every bit of edible food that comes into her home. She must learn to use such foods as vegetables, beans, peas and milk products as partial substitutes for meat. She must make it her business to see that nothing nutritious is thrown away or wasted.

"Clothing is largely an agricultural product and represents the results of labor on the sheep ranges, in cotton fields and in mills and factories. Whenever a useful garment is needlessly discarded material to keep some one warm and dry may be consumed merely to gratify a passing fancy. Women would do well to look upon clothing at this time more particularly from the utilitarian point of view.

"Leather, too, is scarce, and the proper shoeing of armies call for great supplies of this material. There are only so many pairs of shoes in each hide and there is a shortage of animals for leather as well as meat. Anything that can be done to encourage adults or children to take care of their shoes and make them last longer means that so much more leather is available for other purposes.

"Employed women, especially those engaged in the manufacture of food or clothing, also directly serve their country and should put into their tasks the enthusiasm and energy the importance of their product warrants.

"While all honor is due to the women who leave their homes to nurse and care for those wounded in battle no woman should feel that because she does not wear a nurse's uniform, she is absolved from patriotic service. The home women of the country, if they give their minds fully to this vital subject of food conservation and train themselves in household thrift, can make of the housewife's apron a uniform of national significance."

Postmaster-General, Ottawa.

POLICY FOR EACH SOLDIER.

U. S. May Insure Every Fighting Man for $1,000 Free.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Recommendations that every officer and enlisted man in the American army, navy and Marine Corps be provided with an insurance policy in which the Government agreed to pay $1,000 to his assigns in case of death during the present war were laid before William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, by a group of officials of some of the most important insurance companies in the country. Such policies would be provided without payment of assessments by the men, according to the scheme, which was proposed as a substitute for one which has been under discussion for several weeks.

QUENTIN ROOSEVELT TO FLY.

Will Soon Join Aviation Section in France as First Lieutenant.

NEW YORK, July 27.—It was learned yesterday that Quentin Roosevelt, youngest son of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, will soon join the first American aviation contingent to be sent to the war zone. Young Roosevelt is a First Lieutenant in the Aviation Corps, having received his commission two weeks ago, after several months' training at Mineola. He is a very adept flier. His departure marks the completion of the Colonel's promise that all four of his sons would be offered to the service of the nation.

Theodore, Jr., and Archie Roosevelt are with General Pershing's army; Kermit is to join the British forces in Mesopotamia, and Quentin, on his arrival in France, will go into a training camp and put in some time at rigorous training before active service. Dr. Richard L. Derby, one of the Colonel's two sons-in-law, is also in the army and is now in camp at Oglethorpe, Ga., as a member of the Medical Corps, soon going to France.

Colonel Roosevelt was approached yesterday on the eve of starting for Pittsburgh, where he was to address the convention of the Loyal Order of Moose this afternoon. He refused to talk concerning Quentin's departure.

Landlord: "Yes, sir. We've a centenarian in this village. As a matter of fact this is his grandson—or are you his great-grandson, Joe?"

Joe: "Great—great—great—great—gr—."

Visitor: "Oh, come, come! That's scarcely possible."

Landlord (confidently): "He isn't telling lies. He's only stuttering!"—Passing Show.

SHOULD EXECUTE SPIES

Hint Given to U.S. to Profit From Britain's Experience.

LONDON July 27.—The most effective method of combating the German espionage system in America is to be found in co-operation between the public generally and the police, according to opinions expressed by high officials of Scotland Yard. Scotland Yard has had considerable trouble with neutrals in the employ of the German Government, and the English police feel that this menace is one which the U. S. will have to guard against.

Considerable difficulty has been experienced here with the wireless, and the police now freely employ an instrument through the use of which these enemy instruments are detected.

Wholesale internments of Germans will not solve the spy problem. England has not interned all her German residents, but the police are absolutely sure of the connection of those allowed to remain at large.

There is a general feeling in London that the execution of the first spies caught would go far in the United States toward persuading others, Germans as well as neutrals, that such work is extremely hazardous, and very likely to have disastrous results.

GERMAN SUB DESTROYED.

Ran Ashore and the Crew Destroyed it and Surrendered.

PARIS, July 27.— A German submarine was destroyed on Thursday on the French coast west of Calais. The undersea boat went ashore and the crew, unable to free her opened the gasoline tanks and set fire to the vessel. The members of the crew reached the shore where they were made prisoner.

MOB DEPORTS 31 I.W.W.'S.

Citizens of Bemidji, Minn., Roused to Action by Fire in a Sawmill.

BEMIDJI, Minn., July 26.— Thirty men and one woman, all said to be members of the I.W.W., were corralled by 150 citizens armed with clubs here to-day and sent out of town on a westbound train. The citizens were aroused by the fire which destroyed a sawmill on Saturday night.

Jess Dunning, Secretary of the I.W.W. local here, under bail on charges of displaying circulars advocating sabotage, was told he need not worry about his bail, and was put on the train with the others.

TO RELEASE ABLE MAN.

Former Ontario Woman Becomes Winnipeg Truck Driver.

WINNIPEG, July 2.—"I took this job so that some healthy, physically fit man could go overseas and fight alongside my husband and brothers in the trenches," said little Mrs. Eva Crane, Winnipeg's first motor truck driver.

Mrs. Crane drives one of the big delivery trucks for the Consolidated Rubber Company. She went to work Monday. She loads and unloads her own truck, gets her orders from the office, delivers the goods to the customers of the firm and to the railways, working alongside the warehousemen in the shipping department of the firm, asking and accepting no assistance other than is ordinarily accorded to a man on the job.

"No, I am not an Englishwoman," she said, "I come from Sidney, Manitoba, and I was born in Lindsay, Ontario. Both father and mother were Canadians. I don't find it extraordinary hard work," she continued. "Handling heavy cases is not much a question of strength; it's the knack of swinging them around right."

ROUMANIANS MAKE GOOD PROGRESS

SIX AUSTRIAN TOWNS ARE CAPTURED

New Offensive By Roumanians Continues To Gain Ground

Six Austrian Towns and Villages With Considerable Quantity of War Materials Captured---French Statement To-day Reported Artillery Duels on Several Sectors With the Repulse of Several Surprise Attacks.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 30.—Small patrol encounters in the neighbourhood of Bullevourt and Acheville were all that Field Marshal Haig had to report today from the British front.

(By Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press.)

CANADIAN HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, July 28. (via London, July 29).—The spurt of the enemy's aerial activity on this part of the front has ceased, and only a few of his planes have tried to cross our lines. This result has been brought about by hard fighting on the part of the splendid young fellows of the aerial service. One of the most successful aviators in this area is an Ontario man who has a record of thirty-six German machines brought down, most of them from such a height as to insure their destruction. He has already won the Military Cross and the D.S.O.

During the past two days the artillery action on the front has increased in volume, until at times it has reached the dimensions of drumfire. The enemy's retaliation to our bombardment has on several occasions been extremely prompt and heavy. The object of his artillery has been to divert the attention of our guns. Efforts of enemy working parties to restore their defences have been prevented by a steady trench mortar bombardment. In this, as in other branches of the artillery, there has been a remarkable development. Some of the trench mortar projectiles now in use have almost as much high explosive in them as an ordinary fifteen-inch hokitzer shell. The destruction wrought by them in the trenches is very great.

There was another heavy projection of gas into the German trenches west of Lens yesterday, with but little retaliation.

COAL SHORTAGE IN GERMANY MEANS DARK DAYS FOR BERLIN

ORDER HAS BEEN ISSUED FURTHER RESTRICTING LIGHTING OF STORES, HOTELS, RESTAURANTS AND CAFES.

COPENHAGEN, July 30. — Dark days literally are coming for Berlin. An order has been issued restricting the lighting of stores, hotels, restaurants and cafes to one-fifth of the degree of illumination permitted up to mid-December of 1916, the date when the preliminary order reducing illumination went into effect.

The order is due to the admittedly inevitable coals shortage and transportation difficulties of the coming winter. The newspapers complain that nothing is being done to relieve the situation.

Dressell's Restaurant, the most fashionable establishment in Unter den Linden, Berlin, is among the restaurants that have been closed for violating the food law.

LONDON, July 30. — Roumanians are still making good progress in their new campaign against the Austro-Germans. The Roumanian official statement reports the capture of six Austrian towns and villages, with considerable material, prisoners and guns.

PARIS, July 30.—The French official statement to-day reported "artillery duels" at various points, and also the repulse of surprise attacks of the Germans on several sectors.

LONDON, July 30.—Petrograd advices say General Korniloff has carried out wholesale executions for desertion with the approval of the Government and the Soldiers' Council. Stringent measures will be continued to compel soldiers to get into the fighting line against Germany.

OFFENSIVE AGAINST PUTNA LESSENS GERMAN PRESSURE NEAR TARNAPOL

PETROGRAD, July 30.—Russian and Roumanian troops have put such force behind their offensive in the Putna sector that to-day the pressure of the German advance into Russia in the Tarnopol region noticeably lessened. In Galicia, Russian troops, forced back at the outset of the breakdown in Tarnopol, have retired in good order across the Russian border.

Premier Kerensky was at the front to-day conferring on the military situation. On account of the necessity of these conferences and the inability to gather together all the elements for the All-Russian assembly, this latter conference at Moscow scheduled for to-morrow has been postponed. It will be held at a later date when all parties are expected to attend, when it is certain that representatives of all civic organizations can send delegates. Extensive preparations are now under way for the Russian first constitutional assembly.

BOMBED ENEMY BASES.

LONDON, July 30.—Successful air raids on Bruges, Middlekirke and Chistelles, German bases in Belgium, were announced in an Admiralty statement to-day.

Military Cross For Lieut. Hughes

Third 93rd Officer to Win Coveted Decoration

His many friends will be glad to hear that Lieut. Elton Richard Hughes, formerly of the 93rd Battalion has been awarded the Military Cross. The official Gazette states that the coveted decoration has been granted for "getting forward supplies of bombs and ammunition across open ground, under heavy fire." Lieut. Hughes who was an officer in the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, Peterborough. Before the war he was in charge of the Apsley platoon of the 93rd. He was wounded some time ago. Lieuts. Eastwood and Gillham are two other 93rd officers to win the Military Cross.

CARRYING OF ARMS IN IRELAND NOW FORBIDDEN

Special to the Examiner:

DUBLIN, Ireland, July 30.—With the idea of suppressing Sinn Fein and other rebellious gatherings, Gen. Sir Bernard Mahon, commanding the British forces in Ireland, has issued an order, forbidding wearing uniforms or carrying of arms by all bodies except for lawful employment or pastime.

PETERBORO' BOY WINS WAR CROSS ON SERBIAN FRONT

Maurice Houedry of This City is Fighting With the French Army —Writes Interesting Letter From the East

ASKS FOR HIS PAPERS

The Examiner has received the following interesting letter from Maurice Houedry, a Peterborough boy, fighting with the French army on the Serbian front:

To the Editor of The Examiner:

At the Front, 16-6-17.

Dear Sir,—Please excuse the liberty which I am taking by writting to you, but as an old Peterborough boy I hope that I will be forgiven. No doubt Sir you will refember me as a citizen of our City of Peterborough, and will grant me the little favour which I am asking you.

I am now at the Serbian front, and as I have very little correspondence with any one from my land of adoption (Canada), I would make bold enough to ask you to give me the following information? I took the oath of allegiance at the time of Mr. Hall's election, and ever since up to the date of the declaration of war have always been living in Canada. As I see that special permits are delivered by the French authorities to any man living in Canada, or to any British subject. As I am giving you the time of any oath-taking, and as I never served in the French army before coming at the beginning of the war.. Would you Sir, be kind enough to send me papers, certified if possible, and also mentioning that my life has been passed over in Canada, and that my brother is living in Peterborough with his family. I am almost disabled now, and would like a trip back to my land of adoption even for one month. May I ask you Sir, if it would be possible to get passed by the authorities to ask for me as an interpreter for the Canadian troops or contingent. A little advice on this subject would help me immensely.

I am very pleased to announce to you that for the last attack my regiment has been into, I was vited to the order for bravery, and was awarded the Cross of War. We have had heavy losses in this engagement, but as we were the attacking party we did as well as could be expected, and stayed under machine guns and shell fire from 5:30 a.m. until about 6 p.m. Even our regiment chaplain went up and was shot at and killed by the enemy while tending to the wounded. He died as a saint only can.

I hope, Sir, that sending me certificate certified by a Crown lawyer or the French Consul will not trouble you too much.

Hoping Sir to get an answer from you, and wishing you the very best of luck and health, I remain,

Your obedient Servant,
MAURICE HOUEDRY,

Mrs. E. Wegg has received the following letter in regard to her husband, Pte. E. Wegg, formerly of the 93rd who was wounded recently.

Dear Wife,—I am writing you again to keep you from worrying. You will pardon me for finishing your husband's letter, but as I saw him doing what he could towards writing a letter, I offered my humble hand to him. He has unfortunately lost one finger of his right hand, but is progressing quite well. He asks me to tell you that they have made a good job of the operation and feels as well as possible, under the circumstances. You can take it from me that if one can judge by looks, he is quite well. He started this letter himself as you will see by the beginning. He generally gets out for a walk by day, which will keep him in good trim. He seems quite anxious about a letter from you, but I know you'll write as soon as you get this. He was just telling me that this day is the anniversary of his leaving home, so you can guess his thoughts are with you. He sends a daddy's love to his children and sincerely hopes these few lines will find you well. I will leave him to put his own signature at the bottom. I am by his side on his left, slighlty wounded, but otherwise quite well. Written by A Mitchell on behalf of your husband.

ERNEST WEGG.

Instructions have been issued by the Militia Department, Ottawa, to the different military districts, to the effect that all Infantry and Artillery Recruiting officers should enlist all men they can. In the case where a man enlisted is found to be of a lower physical standard than that required, he should be enlisted at once for other branches of the service. It has been pointed out that a great many prospective recruits have been lost to the service owing to the fact that recruiting officers are only interested in men who come up to the required standard for their special branch of the service.

There will be a special general meeting of the Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans Association tomorrow (Thursday, night in the Barrie Building. The meeting will be in the nature of a smoker, the smoker being generously furnished by a local tobacconist, and some very important business is to come up, including arrangements for the excursion on Saturday, commemorative of the third anniversary of the war. It is important that every member of the club should be on hand.

Mrs. Nicholls, Charlotte street, has received the following letter in regard to the death of her son, Pte. Herbert Nicholls, formerly of the 93rd Battalion:

No. 410624
C Company, 38th
Battalion C.E.F.,
France.

My Dear Mrs. Nicholls,—I wish to write you a few lines of condolence regarding the death of your dear son, Herbert. Though a new man with his battalion, he was well liked by everyone with whom he came into contact and a more willing soldier never came to France. He had pretty hard luck, for it was only his second trip into the trenches. We made a big attack on June 26th and gained our objective, but on the night of June 29th our positions were heavily shelled and I am sorry to say your son, with three others, was struck by shrapnel. I was there myself at the time, but luckily escaped injury. I at once got your son to the dressing station on a stretcher, as he seemed to be hit pretty badly, but he died of wounds there, much to the regret of everyone. I am sending you these few lines to let you know that he died doing his duty and that although only a boy he was every inch a man. I enclosed photos and letters which were in his pocket, and which you will no doubt prize very much. In conclusion, dear Mrs. Nicholls, I tender you my sincere sympathy. So will close.

From yours truly,
W. G. STOKES,
Sergt. No. 10 Platoon.

KINGSTON, July 29.—In an editorial headed "The Slime of Politics" The Whig charges that Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown and Lieut.-Col. H. R. Wilson, both of the Headquarters Staff of Military District No. 3 here, who have performed splendid service in connection with mobilisation and training of troops during the past two years and a half, are being retired for political reasons to make room for Government followers.

The Whig declares that to make a dead set upon these two officers, when party men holding high rank and performing much less important duties are retained, is a scandal of the rankest sort. Were Sir Sam Hughes at the head of the Military Department they would not now be threatened with any humiliation, The Whig declares, and it proceeds to say that the Government wants it believed that everyone gets promotion and recognition in the army upon his merits, but it knows better, and so do others who have followed the fortunes of friends and realised how hard it is to get anything without the pull of political allies.

The Toronto Star says: Lieut.-Col. Scobell, who went overseas a few months ago in command of the 236th Battalion, is leaving England at once for France to take a position with an Imperial Army under the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Col. Scobell was very fortunate in being able to impress the Imperial authorities so as to gain this appointment and not have to return to Canada as so many other senior officers have had to do.

Two Leaders Are Called By Kerensky

FORM SUPREME COUNCIL

PETROGRAD, July 30.—On the heels of his declaration that the "spectre of anarchy needs to be obliterated," and that "stout hearts and stern hands are needed for the task," Premier Kerensky has summoned to Petrograd General Niholas Ruzsky and General Gurko. The former was Commander-in-Chief of the Northern armies, and the latter headed the forces operating in the Southwestern front.

The greatest significance is attached to Kerensky's action in calling the two military leaders. The generally accepted view is that the Premier intends to organise a supreme Military Council, which may consist of these personages: Kerensky, Russky, Gurko, Brussiloff and Korniloff, the latter four conceded to comprise the military genius of the Republic.

Premier Kerensky is taking still other stern measures to lay the spectre of anarchy," to which he referred in a statement to-day. One of the latest orders is a decree closing the frontiers. Another is an extension of the scope and severity of the censorship. Regulations regarding imports have been subjected to radical modification.

While these Executive orders are being put into effect the search for Lenine, the radical leader, and his alleged co-conspirators, continues throughout the nation. A report published in the Petrograd Gazette today said the agitator is being concealed at Kronstadt, disguised as a prisoner, under protection of the Maximalists.

Similar reports as to his whereabouts come from several other cities. The overwhelming majority with which the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates has adopted a resolution denouncing Lenine's propaganda and demanding his public trial is taken as an indication that his suporpt is weakening even in the Russian capital where it was believed to be strongest.

The order to close the frontiers is even more stringent than such rulings have been in the past. The only persons excepted from its jurisdiction are persons holding diplomatic passports, and diplomatic couriers. It is effective until August 16th, and applies to persons desiring to enter or to leave the country. Officially it is ascribed to "exceptional circumstances." These are said to consist in a desire to shut out suspects and undesirbles, who are flocking into Russia, particularly German spies or neutrals bought with German money and to prevent the departure of spies and criminals. Thousands of the latter have been at large ever since they were liberated along with the political prisoners in the first days of the revolution.

There seems no reason to believe that the creation of new Ministers will mean any modification of the Provisional Government programme, or any lessening of the power vested in Kerensky. Announcement is made that acceptance of the new Cabinet officers is taken to imply the adherence of their respective parties to the Premier. There are indications that this plan will bear further fruit, as negotiations have been opened with various other prominent personages representing several powerful groups, in an effort to persuade them to join the Ministry.

These overtures have been directed especially to the Constitutional Democrats, the General Committee of that body being reported favorably inclined. If a Cabinet along these lines is perfected, its obvious power and prestige is expected to have a dominating influence with the masses.

RUSSIAN WOMEN PREFER DEATH TO CAPTURE BY HUNS

Each Woman Fighter Carries Cyanide of Potassium to Be Swallowed in the Event of Falling Into German Hands

NUMBERS INCREASING

(By Wm. G. Shepard, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 30. — Russian women soldiers have pledged themselves to take their own lives rather than become German war prisoners.

Each woman soldier carries a ration of cyanide of potassium to be swallowed in the event of capture. The members of woman regiments now constantly increasing agreed that death was to be preferred to the fate that they would probably meet at the hands of the Germans. The Legion of Death fighters are "good killers." I learned this to-day when I talked to five of them, now in hospital here suffering from shell shock. From a woman's lips I heard how she had run a German through with her bayonet, firing the rifle at the same time. From others I heard how these women and girls, fresh from comfortable homes and universities, went leaping over mangled, bloody bodies in the charge, with enemy shells bursting all about them. But these harrowing experiences of women fighters have steeled them, and hundreds of other girls; to a new determination to see it through. Girls drilling in the streets are now a common sight in Petrograd. In Moscow, 1,000 more are training, while Kiev and Odessa have smaller bands. Premier Kerensky has also authorized the formation of women marine detachments and has promised to assign them to ships. The new woman commands attempt no sort of decoration. Their heads are shaved, and they wear the regulation uniform, including the heavy, ugly army boots.

War Veterans' Moonlight Down River To-night

The War Veterans are providing a good chance for citizens who wish to escape the heat to-night. The moonlight excursion to-night promises to be very popular and as a record crowd will undoubtedly wish to seize the opportunity of spending a few cooling hours down the Otonabee it would be well for those who wish to attend to be on hand early. This is the third moonlight the War Veterans have run, and it promises to be the best of all.

Applaud Revival Of Death Penalty

LONDON, July 29.—An Odessa special to the Times says The Odessa Novosti contains an article which admits with regret the necessity for the revival of capital punishment, which it fears as the first of a series of measures restricting the development of the newly-born liberty. Generally speaking the decision of the Government wins approval here. In point of fact capital punishment never ceased to exist, unofficially, as many cases of lynching occurred throughout the country. Yesterday a young soldier here suspected of having stolen 30 kopecks was beaten savagely by his comrades and taken to the hospital in a dying condition. The public mind has been aroused from day dreams by the disasters in Galicia, and the advance of the Germans. Violent denunciation of the cowardice of the runaway troops are heard in all directions. A volunteer force styled "The Battalion of Death," has been formed here to fight the Germans and is being led to the Galician front.

GOOD CROPS PROMISED.

In these sweltering days we suffer, philosophically or fussily, according to temperament. If we reflect, however, we shall see that the broiling weather is for our good. We have been urged to greater production; we have responded heartily as possible and the crop is in the soil, watered by abundant rains; and we need the hot weather to quicken the ripening process. It is also good for the hay crop. The season is late, and until the past few days the rains have prevented haying operations. Now, with the hot, dry weather it is possible for a farmer to cut his hay in the morning and, if he has a tedder, to have it in the mow before night.

The country's crops look full of promise and from all quarters with local exceptions, there are reports of good prospective yield. In Western Ontario the stand of grain is a good one, and its condition is reported excellent. The reports from the west are, in the main, good; so that, if no setback weather comes, we are fairly well assured of a bountiful harvest, and we shall be in a position to give one of the most essential helps in winning the war.

With cold storage companies competing in the purchase of food stuffs, with the domestic buyer, it is no wonder that the latter is ground between the upper and the nether millstone.

MILITARY EFFICIENCY.

If the British Minister of War is as much at sea in regard to military matters as our own Minister of Militia seems to be, he hasn't much grasp of the situation. In the House on Friday, Sir Sam Hughes made inquiries concerning the answer of Col. Bruce to the so-called Baptie report, on the report of Dr. Bruce in connection with hospital matters. Sir Edward Kemp didn't know anything about the matter, though it is technically, as well as actually, connected with his own department. He knew nohing more than was stated by Sir Robert Borden on a previous occasion when a similar question was asked Sir Sam contended that, even if Sir Robert Borden had sent a coupy of Dr. Bruce's reply to Dr. Baptie to the Minister of the overseas forces, Sir George Perley, he would certainly have kept a copy of so important a document; and if so it should be placed on the table of the House for the information of members, in the interests of the country. Since we are at war, our Minister of Militia should have all these things at his finger ends, and not be groping in the dark, when in the public interests, information respecting his department is demanded. If he does not know what is going on, the administration of his department cannot be considered as satisfactory as it should be at this time, when our share in the war is affected in its results by the manner in which military matters are administered.

In the conditions that can logically be assumed to obtain when the Minister of Militia is not in touch with important matters in connection with his trust we can not be at much of a loss to understand why, with such laxity prevailing, there was a failure in recruiting to such an extent as to make a law of compulsory service necessary. We now have that law in existence, and it is natural to inquire what is to come of it. Is it to be administered or remain a dead letter? Are we to depend for its enforcement upon the Militia Department, which in connection with the general administration of war interests, has shown so deplorable past and present inefficiency. We were called upon in the name of patriotism to forget party and remember only the country and its interests in passing the conscription bill. We responded loyally to the appeal, and it was by a subjection of partizanship and concerted action that the Military Service Bill was placed on the statute books.

As to its enforcement, are we to have the same patriotic subordination of party considerations? Is the conscription act, representing the united support of both parties, to be applied on the same principle, or is its enforcement to be left in the hands of partizanship, represented by the present government as at present constituted and controlled? The essence of the conscription act, does not consist in its having a place on the statute book; the enforcement's the thing. Everything depends upon that. It can only be a success if its administration is conducted on the same high level of freedom from partisanship as its enactment, by a parliament which threw aside party considerations to achieve the result of its enactment. It must be fairly administered, without favouritism; "without fear or affection." It must bear upon the rich and the poor alike, and no political influence or pull, should avail to free any person from subjection to its provisions. It is not enough to pass the conscription act, by a non-partisan unity of action of parliamentary forces. Its enforcement demands the same absence of party conside rations. Would its enforcement by the present government be attended with similar freedom from party bias?

Three automobile mishaps in two days, fortunately without serious results, indicate that if drivers are not more careful, we shall have fatal accidents some of these days.

MORE PAY FOR SOLDIERS.

The Khaki Cal, the organ of the returned soldiers, does not agree with Mr. W. F. Cockshutt's idea anent the pay of the men in khaki. It says:

The soldiers' wage is probably the only one that has not risen with the fall in the purchasing power of money. The prices of food, of clothing, in fact, of every necessary thing, have increased 30, 40, and in some cases 100 per cent. since the outbreak of the war, but the amount per day, and per month paid to the soldier and his family has remained the same.

A recent resolution of the Toronto City Council petitioned the government for more liberal financial treatment for privates and non-commissioned officers. We are in hearty accord with the resolution, believing that if the regular pay had been higher the flow of recruits would have been greater. Those who say that this course would be an appeal to selfishness have no right to question the incentives of men who risk their lives in battle. Canadian citizens who dwell in security and comfort ought to be content to bear any tax burden that may be required of them, in order that their protectors, whether volunteers or conscripts, may have decent compensation for facing the perils and horrors on the blood-stained fields of Europe.

The case for the better remuneration of the fighting men of the Dominion is unanswerable, and if it is conceded when the operation of the Military Service bill is about to become a reality, then it should certainly be made retroactive in justice to the volunteers.

Men who make munitions or anything else required for the prosecution of the war, are not willing to accept any part of their pay in the consciousness of patriotic endeavour. Nor are their employers any more patriotically inclined. It is not fair, therefore, even if they are willing to serve at present rates of pay uncomplainingly, that the men at the front who alone are risking their lives, should be asked to make sacrifices demanded of no other class in the community.

GERMANY'S LAST HOPE.

Von Hindenburg's optimism is tempered by a practical admission that he pins his faith now to the submerged methods entirely. "The war is won for us," he says, "if we hold our ground against enemy attacks until the submarine has done its work."

This must sound outrageously strange in German ears. "If we hold our ground." "If we can only endure the frightful onslaughts of the enemy," and "If the submarine can only do what the German Army has lost all hope of doing." It is a melancholy sort of optimism. "With an 'if,'" says the French proverb, "one might put Paris in a bottle." Hindenburg's "ifs" are a confession that the Allies really have, as Mr. Lloyd George said the other day, knocked into the Germans a sense of their own inferiority.

We have here an abandonment of the arrogant cocksuredness with which Germany started in and talked of her war aims and her will to victory until very lately. According to Von Hindenburg now the will depends upon circumstances over which Germany has no control.

If willing could have done it the submarines would have brought Great Britain to her knees some moons ago. It was to have happened in three months. The time-limit expired, and British imports and exports continued to mount, notwithstanding the sinking of many merchant ships.

It is quite possible that the people of Germany are not permitted to know these facts. Yet they must begin to suspect that the highty engine of destruction, the German army, which had been prepared for forty years and they proudly boasted was the "best army in de Vorld," has become a negligible quantity.

It is noteworthy, also, that Hindenburg is trusting yearningly to German submarines, not to the German Navy. The inference is that the German High Seas Fleet is put out of the reckoning. It is safer in the Kiel Canal than the German Army is in its underground fortresses, and it looks as if it will stay there.—Montreal Herald

General Maude's Despatch

Lieut.-General Sir Stanley Maude's despatch dealing with the operations carried out against Kut and Bagdad by the Mesopotamian Expeditionary Force has just been issued.

It deals with the work done between August 28th, 1916, to March 31st, 1917; a period of seven months, of which the first three and a half were devoted to preparation.

Upon assuming Command, General Maude continued the work of re-organisation begun by his predecessor, Lieut.-General Sir Percy Lake. The health and training of the troops who had suffered severely from the intense summer heat was improved. Means of communication by rail, road and river over a country difficult at any time and made difficult by both floods and droughts were perfected; and the lines of communication themselves secured against attack. Reinforcements were accumulated, resources were developed, and reserves of supplies, ammunition and stores were amassed.

By the beginning of December 1916 movement was begun against the enemy about Kut. The Turks still occupied during the summer. On the left bank they held the hitherto unconquerable Sannaiyat position which they had strengthened and elaborated. Kut was protected on the right bank by a system of trenches running from a point on the river 3 miles to the North West, and circling beneath it across the Khadari Bend, until cut by the river Hai, two miles below the exit from the Tigris. This system was continued to the North-West. The position gave the attack a good chance of success, and it was decided to secure possession of the Hai, clear all the enemy trenches on the right of the Tigris, while at the same time so sapping his strength by constant battle at Sannaiyat that he must either give up that position or so weaken his line that a crossing of the Tigris might be easily accomplished further west.

FIRST MOVEMENT.

The first movement was successfully acomplished on December 13th. Lt. General Cobbe distracted the attention of the enemy by a bombardment of the Sannaiyat lines, while during the night of the 13th-14th the cavalry and Lt.-General Marshall's force force struck westward to the Hai, surprised the enemy, which cleared both banks of the river up to the Hai bridgehead, which was strongly held. By the 18th Lt.-General Marshall had fought his way forward until he had won command of the river up-stream of the Khadairi Bend. The operation gave us direct control of the Hai, and enabled us to threaten the enemy's communications west of Shamran, while it safeguarded our own communications and opened out prosperous districts for our own supply.

The enemy still clung to his positions on the right of the Tigris in the Kharairi Bend. Here he menaced our communications on the Hai, and he also had it in his power to inundate portions of our line. The enemy held a strong line in a flat, bare country, difficult for attack. Lt.-General Cobbe spent the time between January 5th and 19th, clearing the Bend. The preliminary stage involved digging some 25,000 yards of trench under trying conditions—constant rain and exposure to the enemy fire, but it was duly carried out. On the 9th the Gurkhas and Mahrattas had fought their way to the river bend on the left after severe hand-to-hand fighting. On the left our troops made steady progress, and a heavy counter attack got forward under cover of a mist was broken by the resolute resistance of the Manchesters, a frontier rifle regiment, and a detachment of Sikh pioneers. Lt.-General Marshall's cavalry west of the Hai, carried out successful diversions, and though they were hampered by the mist, they forced their way into Hai Town, and occupied it for several days. By the 17th our troops were pressing the enemy hard, and by the 19th his position had become so difficult that he voluntarily retired across the Tigris. During these operations the fighting had been severe, mainly hand to hand, but the enemy, in spite of his tenacity, had more than met his match in the dash and resolution of our troops.

HEAVY FIGHTING.

While this fighting was in progress, Lt.-General Marshall began his preparations for the reduction of the Hai salient, and the extensive trench system which the Turks held astride the Hai river near its junction with the Tigris. On the 25th the enemy's front line on a frontage of about 1,800 yards was captured. There was heavy bombing fighting, and the Turks made good use of skilfully concealed guns and machine guns. In a series of counter attacks, the enemy was able to recapture his line, but a gallant charge across the open by the Royal Warwicks restored the situation. On the 26th the assault of two Punjabi battalions was a complete success, and in stubborn fighting our hold on both banks of the river was increased. Our cavalry attempted to strike against the enemy's rear via Bedrah and Sersan, but the waterlogged ground held them up. On Feb. 1st the Cheshires led an attack which gave us further ground, and on the 3rd, the Devons and a Gurkha Battalion carried two lines of works and held them in spite of counter attack and artillery fire. That evening the enemy began to retire, and by the morning of the 5th had fallen back to the Liequorice factory and a line east and west across the Dahra Bend.

The Liequorice factory was dealt with by howitzer fire, and on the 9th the King's Own effected a valuable lodgment in the centre of the enemy's line which enabled us to extend rapidly on both flanks. By the night of the 10th-11th it became known that the enemy had given up his forward positions and had retired to an inner line across the Dahra Bend. On the 15th the final battle for the position was opened by the Loyal North Lancashires, and after some dashing fighting by the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, the South Wales Borderers, the Buffs and the Dogras, the enemy was pushed bodily to the Tigris and by night only held about a mile of works. Two companies of a Gurkha battalion acting on their own initiative, took these trenches, and on the 16th the Dahra Bend was clear of the enemy.

FINAL ACTION.

The final action for the capture of Kut now came. Lt.-General Cobbe, who had kept the enemy constantly on the alert at Sannaiyat, began a threatening attack on the 22nd. He captured some of the works before him, and was at once subjected to heavy counter-attacks, which the Seaforths brilliantly resisted. On the night of the 22nd-23rd feints were being made against the river opposite Kut and opposite the Liequorice factory, and the Turks were misled into thinking bridging operations were to take place at this point. The point chosen was actually at the south end of the Shamran Bend, west of Kut. Three ferries were set to work before day-break of the 23rd. The Norfolks effected a surprise lodgment with the first trip, but the other ferries carrying Gurkhas, were met with a staggering fire, and only with difficulty effected a landing. The Norfolks and Gurkhas held on tenaciously, and pushed up stream as bridging operations were commenced. By nightfall, as a result of the day's operations, our troops had by their unconquerable valour and determination, forced a passage across a river in flood, 340 yards wide, in face of strong opposition, and had secured a position 2,000 yards in depth, covering the bridge head. While this crossing was proceeding, Lt.-General Cobbe had secured the third and fourth lines of Sannaiyat, and was working his way with bombs deep into the maze of trenches. On the 24th the fight was resumed, the enemy fighting tenaciously, but the end was certain. General Cobbe carried the Sannaiyat position and the enemy was now in complete retirement.

Lt.-General Marshall took up the pursuit of the enemy with dash, broke the enemy 8 miles from Shumran and followed vigorously. On the 26th the retreat was rapid, with the cavalry and infantry following on either bank and the river craft of the Royal Navy pushing up stream in hot pursuit. Much booty and many enemy vessels, including those captured from us, fell into our hands. The pursuit was broken off at Azizyeh, 50 miles from Kut and half way to Baghdad, and a pause for re-organization was made, while Lt.-General Cobbe's force closed to the point. On the 5th, movement began again and an advance made to Lajj. Here the Turkish rear-guard was found well entrenched; it was attacked and defeated, and retired during the night.

LANDED A PARTY.

On the 7th we were in touch with the enemy's line on the Dialah, a river joining the Tigris, 8 miles below Bagdad. On the 8th a crossing was attempted in the face of a withering fire, and as this manœuvre was felt to be impracticable, a force under Lt.-General Marshall was ferried across the Tigris to enfilade the enemy position with guns from the right bank of the river. During the night of the 8th-9th further attempts were made to ferry the river. Only one succeeded, and landed a party of 70 of the Loyal North Lancashires on the further bank. For the next 22 hours, until the passage of the river was completely forced, the detachment held on gallantly in its isolated position, under constant close fire from the surrounding buildings, the trenches and gardens. On the 8th, the cavalry and a portion of General Cobbe's force crossed the Tigris, worked up to Shawa Khan, and well-served by aeroplane scouts, pushed on towards Bagdad.

On the morning of the 10th our cavalry fought the way to a point 2 miles west of Bagdad railway station, and in a blinding dust storm followed the Decauville railway up to the station on the left bank of the Tigris. General Marshall had forced the Dialah at two points early on the 10th, had linked up with the devoted Loyal North Lancashires, and had advanced against the strong positions of Tel Muhammod, which covered Bagdad. During the night, the Turks retired and General Marshall entered Bagdad mid manifestations of satisfaction on the part of the inhabitants. The gunboat flotilla proceeding up stream, in line ahead formation, anchored off the British Residency, and the two forces under Lt.-Generals Marshall and Cobbe, provided for the security of the approaches to the city. An immense booty which the enemy had been unable to destroy, was taken, including all the guns (rendered useless by General Townshend) taken by the enemy at Kut.

FALL OF BAGDAD.

After the fall of Bagdad precautions were made to secure the safety of the British army. A brilliant operation carried our force upward on the railway line to the Maishardie Station, which the Black Watch and the Gurkhas rushed on the night of the 14th March. The enemy's flight was so rapid that touch was not obtained again. By the 18th our front was extended northeast by the capture of Baqubah on the Dialah, and the line thus moved out towards the Russians' approaching from Persia. To the west the front was also consolidated by the occupation of Faluja on the Euphrates on March 19th. Co-operating with the movement of the Russians from Khanikin our forces moved up the Dialah to hold the retreating Turks, and Shahraban was occupied on March 3rd. The enemy endeavored to bar our progress, but during the night of the 24th-25th, and the day following we forced our way up over the hills of the Jebel Hauraia range, and beat him though we were forced to withdraw because of the difficulties of the country. On the 26th the enemy began a converging movement down the Dialah from Deli Abbas and along the left bank of the Tigris from Shatt el Adhaim, apparently to assist the withdrawal of the Turkish forces before the Russians. Both of these columns were brilliantly beaten back.

The report is brought to a close by the statement that the toal number of prisoners taken in the period under review was 7,921. General Maude praises the conduct of the officers and men who worked so well under such difficult and arduous conditions. — "British and Indian troops working side by side have vied with each other in their efforts to close with the enemy and all ranks have been imbued throughout with that offensive spirit which is the soldier's finest jewel."

WIN THE WAR CRITICS

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The profusion of criticism hurled at the different Governments who are now, and have been in a position that requires action of the most statesmanlike manner, seems to be very inconsistent in a great many instances.

The Premier, Sir Robert Borden, and his Cabinet, also Sir Sam Hughes have been subjected to many harsh references. The opposition have also been attacked and at the same time what are a number of those fault-finders doing.

In the City of Peterborough you might safely say there are almost 700 automobiles that have been purchased which means an outlay of some $500,000 and probably $400,000 of such money went to the United States. Of the number of autos referred to, at least 500 are for pleasure purposes, meaning almost $400,000 of an outlay for an article that deteriorates in value very rapidly as well as considerable more outlay during operation. I do not want to discount the auto for after the war is over, it certainly should have its well-deserved place, but I would like to draw the attention of the people to the solemn fact that in using the auto for pleasure you are using gasoline that appears to be getting exhausted, whilst war experts tell us that the war will be won from the air. Suggest to those same people the advisability of investing the $400,000 in Dominion War Bonds, together with gasoline money and licenses' money which would mean considerable added, and your suggestion would be considered dictatorial and at the same time those same American people are loaning Canada money for war purposes. Not only is there a lot of money spent for auto pleasure, but the Association is urging the Government to apply the auto license money, together with other monies from the consolidated revenue of the Province to construction and maintenance of main or county roads throughout the Province at the same time placing the burden of such roads, to the extent of 66 per cent., on the rural ratepayers for a very small percentage of the total travelled highways used by the farmer for Agriculture purposes. If the Agriculturalist who has been so prosperous up to the present could thrive with the provision by way of roads up to the present, why encourage road destroyers by way of pleasure autos with greatly increased taxation but rather desist pleasure outing and invest the money in securities for war purposes, saving fuel for Air warfare and taxes of all for something most urgent at the present time?

Patriotic and other channels now take from 4 to 6 mills on the dollar for City and County and if Government critics would appiy the half of the money spent for pleasure and for gasoline to continue the same the half that remained in their hands would not deteriorate like the auto and fuel necessary for Air and other weapons of War would be available for the great object in view.

This may be interpreted by some as retrogressive, yet would it not be better and more in accordance with unity of purpose to refrain from using necessities of war before conscription of such takes place, and drives pleasure autos to the barn by prohibiting the use of a necessity for war purposes such as gasoline, oil, etc. Much better to begin at home to act like a Win-the-War people and assist the powers that be, not put barriers in their way.

CANADIAN.

WHERE COAL IS EXPENSIVE

South Americans Have to Pay Approximately $40 a Ton.

Buenos Ayres is now paying $38.15 a ton for coal from the United States, delivered in shipyard lots, while the price at Monte Video is now $39. Until the end of May the price was $30 per ton at the River Plate ports, and the sudden rise was quite unexpected. The Argentina is in the middle of its winter, and the industrial disturbance which has prevailed for the past two years on account of the shortage of fuel is now being greatly increased. Uruguay and Argentina produce no coal, and the shortage in shipping has caused the normal importations to be radically cut.

airowing Tales About Officers' Mustaches---They Bristle With Wit

(By Hal O'Flaherty.)

ONDON—Many harrowing tales going the rounds about army of- rs' moustaches now. They fairly tle with wit.

undreds of pamphlets have been tten in answer to the universally d question: "Why is an officer's stache?"

nder the title of "Hair Apparent" article to-day declares that com- ory service has produced a hair ing problem, as the young offi- are naturally interested in keep- a stiff upper lip.

Moustaches may be grouped under e heads, or noses: Military, mag- cent and morbid. The military nd is very curt. It resembles eith- tooth brush, an eyebrow, or a ni-semi-quaver. Charlie Chaplin's barred. The Guards, who set the ndard for lip adornment, canned that variety while it was yet aborning.

The Magnificent.

The magnificent moustache, not much in vogue now, obscures the wearer's identity. Like the stomacher it is a fashion of bygone days. discarded because of its heavy fringe.

The most admired face foliage of the moment is the moustache morbid. It combines the best of the military and magnificent, yet possesses a charm peculiar to itself. Early in life it represents a venial sin, a faint smudge upon a clear surface. It is cultivated with abandon, and while many would prefer other types, the only thing they can do is grin and wear it, avoid mirrors and excitable babies and wait for a gas attack when respirators make all moustaches equal in the sight of men.

NE SPIRIT OF FRANCE GLOWS IN YOUNG SOLDIER

Do not pray that I may be spared fering. Pray rather that I may be e to bear it, and that the courage ong for may be given me."

So wrote a young French soldier his family, and the latter is quoted Maurice Barres, a member of the nch Academy, in "Young Soldiers France," an article appearing in Atlantic Monthly for July. M. rres wants the world to realise re of the fine spirit actuating the uthful defenders of their country, d speaks for them, in veneration, ides letting them speak for themves through the medium of their ters and diaries. He says that the nerican is asking, "What manner men will come back to us from the nches?" and answers, "Some great ing is about to come into being." is is evident, he is sure, from the ality of the patriotism expressed the young men who dream dreams glad surrender to the causes of ght, and nobly make their dreams me true.

BROTHERLY ADVICE.

The son of a college professor, a soldier dying in his twentieth year, rote to his younger brother: "My eatest comfort in the difficult moents which I must endure here is to nk that you, my little brothers and ters, are all doing your duty as I n. My task is to fight like a brave ldier; yours to work just as courageously. Small and unimportant as u may seem to be in this great rance of ours, you owe it to yourself do your utmost to make yourself ger, richer, nobler."

The same devotion to country is t with in the writing of a boy of hteen. He sees in his share in the r preparation for life—life eternal he is killed and "the more immete matter of earthly life as well." goes on: "When war is over and I home, I must be a changed being. shall have no right to be as I formerly was—or the lesson will all have en in vain....A grave moment is hand. There is to be a bayonet arge. If I do not come back one ing only I ask; may the tiny flame consecrated forces which was in descend upon those whom I loved, d who loved me—upon all my comades in faith and in toil. The abract being which was in me is falling asunder, and numberless realies of the spiritual order which were ose phantoms are becoming flesh and ood to me through an experiance hich is renewed every instant. I m learning to live." Here M. Barres asks: "What is this life whose earning this boy is learning at the ame time that he learns to die? hat is the great secret?"

NO TWO ARE ALIKE.

"Sublime though they all are," says . Barres, "these voices differ." And adds that each declaration of no lity is a variant of the same high heme. In the forests of the Meuse the groves that Jeanne d'Arc knew, he soldier declared: "The one thought that helps me through all trials is that we are spending every moment close to nature, and growing to know her as no mere civilian could ever hope to do. Nature consoles me, she is my friend. I am in her confidence. I have learned the secrets of every hour of day and night. I have seen every little leaf born, every copse turn green anew. They shelter me, and protect me when the ordeal is at at hand." M. Barres in commenting upon this can think of no "pastoral poetry more limpid, more crystal clear."

Another soldier sent a message of love and cheer home for Easter. He had been suffering the most distressing conditions in the trenches, but wrote: "Happy Easter! Happy Easter! You must excuse this poor little letter; I am no longer in the rest camp, but in the first line trench, in a gloomy dug-out, where the rain beats in, and I cannot stand up straight. I have the command of two sections now so that there is plenty to do. Still, I have time to tell you that all goes well, that I love you, and that I am happy with my lot. Happy Easter!"

One who died on the field of honor at nineteen said: "How good it is to be of some use even if one must pay for it with one's life! I am not a Christian and a soldier; I am a Christian soldier."

ALWAYS FOR FRANCE.

One says: "I think ceaselessly of the France of to-morrow, of that young France whose hour is at hand. A consecrated France there must be, in which there will be no purpose in life save duty. Men will live only in so far as they realise their duty and strive to fulfill it. And it is for us to reveal this new life to the world."

A junior officer, detailed to instruct some Norman and Breton recruits—boys called to the colors before their time—set his pupils their daily exercises in writing. Here, taken at random, is what one of them wrote: "Tremble, Germans! France hastens to invoke her greatest hope, the class of 1914. They are twenty years old. Mere boys, you say; what chance have they against the 'kolossal' German army? What can they do, these young men, whose strong hands, already trained, are fondling the stocks of their rifles? They will do as did their forefathers—the men of Valmy, of Austerlitz, of Rivoli, and of Solferino. They will conquer!"

Yet M. Barres, in honoring the dead, would not overlook the living. "The living are in every way their peers," he says. "Though they have not received the supreme consecration, theirs is the compensating glory of continuous service. Twice have they been born, once out of the soil of France, and again out of the nation's peril."

Colonel Henry Watterson, who makes a collection of queer ads and typographical blunders, says that one of the oddest transpositions of the types that ever came within his observation was in a New York paper that used to print the obituaries. One morning a long list of respectable names were set forth under the heading, "Passed Through Hell Gate Yesterday."—New York Times.

SOUTH END AUXILIARY IS HARD AT WORK

The hot weather has not daunted the workers of the South End Auxiliary of the Red Cross Association, and they have loyally kept up the good work, having shipped to the main rooms on July 25th, the following:

366 towels, 26 pr. socks, 42 many-tailed bandages, 165 sheets.

As this work is necessary to the winning of the war, all ladies interested are invited to help along by coming on Wednesday afternoons.

GERMAN PRISONERS DESPAIR OF VICTORY

Don't Fear Our Armies— Captives in England Believe Peace Will Come Before They Are Put in the Field.

LONDON, July 28. — Germany's dream of world conquest has been shattered, and the belief among all classes there now is that the war must end through diplomacy rather than by a brilliant German victory, according to German prisoners in England. But the prisoners generally appear to attach little importance to America's participation in the war.

A journalist who has just returned here after a visit to the large internment camp at Dorchester, where approximately 1,900 German prisoners are quartered, is enabled to present many interesting sidelights on the German point of view as represented by men of all types who have fought with the German forces on land and sea and in the air. These may be summarized as follows:

Germany, having held out thus far, is prepared to hold out to the end.

The economic situation in Germany is not so bad as it has been represented, either by the belligerent or neutral press.

Contrary to reports, there is no visible shortage of materials actually needed for the prosecution of the war.

America's entry into the war will prolong rather than shorten it.

The United States, being essentially a commercial nation she cannot make her great man power felt soon enough to change the course of events.

The submarines are doing all that was expected of them.

There is a surprising lack of concern manifested by the prisoners because of the United States being arrayed against their country. The correspondent was allowed to mingle with them freely, at times without any of the British officers in charge of the camp being present. A young German airman who was brought down recently off Dover, and who exhibited an Iron Cross which he said he had won for many daring feats over the Anglo-French lines, seemed to express the view of the more intelligent class of prisoners by asserting there had been "so many declarations of war" against Germany when the United States came in that any more did not matter. Asked whether it would surprise the German people if the United States should actually place 1,000,000 men in France within a year, the airman smiled as one amused and replied, "I should like to see them there first."

Think the Kaiser's Throne Safe.

A tall, distinguished-looking fellow who has been a prisoner of war since the battle of the Marne, and who said he was formerly a lawyer in Bavaria, expressed the belief that the war would undoubtedly result in giving the German people a more democratic form of government. He doubted, however, whether any attempt to remove the Emperor would succeed. Germany, he said, was so accustomed to an imperial head that he did not think it would be advisable for her to follow Russia's example. Others, including a former chemist, a Government official from West Africa, and a young man who said he had been a professor of English in a German university laughed heartily when the thought was suggested to them.

Three Prussian youths, who were taken prisoners by the British in the recent Messines "push," were believed to have represented the attitude of the peasant classes when they asserted that they did not even know the United States had entered the war. They were each 20 years of age and had been called to the colours a year ago much against their will, they said. They had received nine months' training prior to being sent to the fron.

The remarkable training of the Germans is shown in the discipline maintained at the Dorchester camp. Although more than 20,000 prisoners have been interned there since the war started, only two have attempted to escape. Almost without exception the Germans say they are contented with their surroundings and are well treated.

Prisoners Are Well Fed.

The prisoners do their own washing and cooking. Their rations consist of thirteen ounces of bread daily, six ounces of turnips, two ounces beans or three-quarters of an ounce of coffee daily, one ounce of sugar daily, two ounces of turnips daily, two ounces of turnips daily, two ounces of beans or peas daily, two ounces of oatmeal daily, one ounce of jam daily, two ounces of cheese daily, ten ounces of fish two days a week, four ounces of rice daily and meal, pepper and salt. There is a slight reduction of bread, cheese, and meal in the ration of those who do no work.

Except for their confinement, the German war prisoners are not much differently situated than any ordinary party of campers. Perhaps the one thing which impresses an American most is the spirit of sympathy which seems to exist between the British officials and their German charges and is shown not so much in their military salutations as by the care the one has taken not to contribute any more than is necessary to the discomfort of the other, while the prisoner himself smilingly accepts his lot as one infintely better than that of his former comrades in arms.

FELL FROM TREE DISLOCATED ARM

May Earle, daughter of Wm. Earle, of Bailieboro, dislocated her arm this morning by a fall from a cherry tree. The ladder on which she was standing slipped, precipitating her to the ground. The injury was attended to by Dr. Turner, of Millbrook.

FUNERAL OF JOHN HICKEY

The last mortal remains of the late John Hickey, who died on Friday night in St. Joseph's Hospital, were laid at rest yesterday afternoon in St. Martin's Cemetery, Ennismore, in the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends from Peterborough and the surrounding district. His Lordship Bishop Scollard, North Bay, a life-long friend of the family, conducted the services at the grave, whilst requiem mass was celebrated at St. Peter's Church by Rev. Father McHugh. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Thomas Hogan, Frank Kearns, Wolfe, Edward Flaherty, J. Lane and Martin Flaherty.

His Lordship Bishop Scollard spoke a few words of the loss the township had sustained in the death of so highly respected a resident.

Five Divisions Cut To Pieces

LOSSES WERE IN THOUSANDS.

Fourteenth Prussians Led Assault and Were Mowed Down by French Fire.

LONDON, July 29.—The correspondent of Reuter's with the French army in France, telegraphing on Friday night, says:

As a result of the Battle of Chemin-des-Dames, which died down for a moment yesterday afternoon in consequence of the exhaustion of the enemy, after raging practically without interruption for a week, the Germans obtained a precarious footing in a part of the French line below the crest, opposite the village of Ailles, while the French on the Craonne plateaux recovered the whole of their original front except a small work in the north-eastern angle of Californie plateau, which was utterly wrecked by bombardment, and is now untenable by either side.

Against these trivial advantages the enemy must set many thousands of casualties. Five German divisions participated in the fighting. Three of these need reorganizing before they can again be employed. The Germans grudged neither men n munitions in order to ensure success. Undismayed by the failure of their onslaught on the Craonne plateaux they threw two fresh divisions into a night attack on the Hurtebise-Labeerelle front on Wednesday. The attack was made by the Fourteenth Prussian division, with the Third Bavarian division in support.

Three regiments of the Fourteenth Division, namely, the 16th, 56th and 57th, attacked side by side and in two waves each, three battalions strong. The third battalion of each regiment was formed in a first reserve. The battalions had been brought to maximum strength for the operations. Every man, including cooks and orderlies, had to go over with his company. All the officers, including the colonels, had to be present in the departure trenches. The first two waves were to pass the French front line and occupy the second line. The reserve battalions were intended to take possession of the first trench line. Still another division, the 51st Bavarian, was in readiness to relieve the shattered regiments of the 14th Division in the French trenches as soon as the operation was completed.

For five minutes before the attack the trench mortar batteries below the crest maintained a fierce drum-fire of bombs on the French front line. Despite the elaborate preparations of the Germans, the attack broke down. The greater part of the two-mile front was involved under the French fire and the assaulting companies either never reached the French front line or were unable to hold it. By Thursday evening nothing remained of the German gains except a few yards of trenches south of Ailles. This was the forty-fourth attack which the enemy had made on the Chemin-des-Dames.

ALLIED CONFERENCE

To be Held in Paris on Balkan Questions.

The Allies have decided to hold a conference in Paris for the consideration of questions of military and political interests in connection with the Balkans. The war has been marked by increasing co-ordination of effort between the forces of the Entente. The complete mobilization of all the resources of the Allies is recognized as imperative if victory is to be secured. The Minister of Finance is striving to secure such mobilization of the financial resources of Canada. He has mobilized the banks and the money order post offices for the sale of Government War Savings Certificates. Investment in such certificates is a direct war service. It is a war service open to every man, woman and child in the Dominion who has savings or who can create such savings by the practice of thrift and economy. The certificates are sold in three amounts. They bear interest at a rate of nearly 5½ per cent. They are issued for three-year periods. Twenty-one dollars and fifty cents will buy a $25 bond. Invest your dollars.

Signalling In The British Army

By VICTOR MacCLUE

With the British Army the term "Signals covers every method of conveying a message, whether by hand, wire, flag, heliograph or any of the countless methods by which a message can be transmitted; and, roughly every route in the weblike system of communicating with the British Army in the field, is controlled by the Signal Service of the Corps of Royal Engineers. Various arms control their inter-unit signals, but the Signal Service takes charge when the units come to the dimensions of brigades or such formations.

To start from the firing line, where the regimental signallers of the infantry spin a web of fine enamelled wire that conveys the messages back to regimental headquarters; here the work is carried out by men trained with the infantry regiment to which they belong. They have very small portable telephones which can be used as telegraph instruments. The signallers are trained in the use of flags for visual signaling but during the long period of trench warfare, visual signals could not be used owing to the proximity of the enemy, and the danger to the signallers from snipers. Now that trench war has been broken, the visual methods of sending messages will come into use again.

Laying the Lines.

From Regimental Headquarters to the Brigade the lines are laid by hand from medium size portable drums, and are of wire insulated with rubber and cotton. Theoretically, the lines should be laid from pack-horses or mules, but the exigencies of trench and dug-out life have modified the theory. With the open fighting now commencing, no doubt the text-book will come into its own. The messages in this section are still sent on the portable little telephone instruments, but by the quick way of the Morse code.

The Brigade is in comunication with the Division by lines laid by the Headquarters Section of the Divisional Signal Company. The wires (or cables) are made up of many strands of steel wire mixed with a few of copper, to reduce the resistance, but preserve the strength and flexibility of the line. In theory, the lines are laid from cable-carts with teams of six horses, but again the conditions on the fronts have modified, in some cases, the methods of laying the cable. Much of the laying has been by hand from a specially-constructed barrow.

There is perhaps no more showy, yet workmanlike drill of the wagon teams of divisional signals. The waggons proceed at a smart trot. Two men seated in the stern, armed with heavy gloves and wearing leather aprons, pay out the black cable; while behind, a mounted sapper is leaning from his hourse, placing the line clear of the roadway, by means of crooked stick. This man places the line on the tops of convenient hedges, or lays it by the roadside, clear of traffic, running it through the cleft ring at the end of his stick, as he follows the waggon at a trot. About half a mile behind the waggon there is a man, also mounted, paying a trifle more attention to the line. He ties it off at turns in the road to prevent it from creeping across the highway under the feet of men or horses. This man is a highly skilled worker who judges conditions carefully and makes use of every natural object which will preserve his line from harm. Where the line must cross a roadway, it is carried high on trees, or is suspended from poles quickly erected, if no trees are handy. The waggon is in constant electrical connection with the office from which it has come, by means of the cable it is laying and a return by earth through the steel tyres of the waggon. On the front limber of the waggon, an operator sits with the receiver of the instrument strapped to his ear. By the same means it is possible for two waggons to be in connection, one laying the cable alongside the advancing brigade, and another picking up the cable, alongside the staff of the following Division Headquarters.

Poles Will.

From Division to Army Corps Headquarters (unless the Corps is actually on the move when the work is done by the more mobile Signals) the communication is maintained by the Army Corps Signal Company. The lines become of more permanent nature, being erected on double poles specially set up. The waggon is of a greater size than that of the Division Company and the wire is of two strands of steel, twisted and not insulated except by the air. The work must necessarily be slower than that of the Division Signals, since it is more permanent but it is carried out even in this case with bewildering rapidity. It is an axiom with the Sappers of the Royal Engineers, that each man should know what is required of him and do it with all his might.

As with the Divisional Signals, the work between the Army Corps and the Army Group is sometimes done by the Corps Cmpany, but, in general, it may be said that the existing lines of the country in which the army is operating, are used where possible. Sappers take the place of the postal operators for secrecy is essential. The Sappers do much of the ordinary telegraph work for the inhabitants, and charge for the messages at the International postal rates.

Despatch Carriers.

It was stated at the opening of this article that all methods of conveying messages were included in the term "Signals." Each unit of the Signal Service has its disposal, groups of messengers, on foot, on horseback, on pedal cycle and on motor cycle. The work of the despatch carriers is often trying and dangerous. At the beginning of the war it was a common enough sight to see the motor-cyclists driving their machines over ground pitted with shell-holes and swept by fire. But now, with the experience of the past the trained despatch riders are not sent into danger except on very rare occasions, when the need is urgent.

The Signallers have not allowed the use of flags and visual signals, generally, to fall into decay with want of practice. There has always been in the minds of those responsible the chance that the time might come when visual signalling would be the only means useable under certain conditions. Constant practice in the use of the flag, the lamp, the heliograph and the disc has been insisted upon, with the result that the coming of open warfare has found the Signallers ready with the full use of visual signals at their fingertips.

A word might be said of the wireless units of the Signal Service, who have done good work in the Eastern campaigns and in France. The outfits for wireless work are various as their degree of portability. There is a quite complete little outfit which generates its own current from a dynamo driven by an internal combustion engine of the Motor-cycle type. This outfit can be carried by pack animals. The flying service makes good use of the wireless system.

The artillery have taken over their own signals to a greater degree than was thought necessary at the beginning of the war. The lines for inter-battery and inter-brigade work are aid by the gunners themselves, and gunners operate the instruments used. But the lines from the Generals commanding artillery are controlled by the Signal Service.

There are few wunits of the army that are so hard worked as the Signal Companies. Their work can be destroyed in a second by a well-placed barrage, lines and cables can be shatterd beyond repair, but the sappers profess to have no such word in their vocabulary as "cannot." They say that if anything is at all within the grounds of probability of execution, be it ever so arduous or dangerous, it is possible for them. Devotion to duty is their proud tradition.

COSTS $350,000 TO STAGE EXHIBITION.

It costs upwards of $350,000 to stage and prepare the Canadian National Exhibition each year. Much of this is spent on special attractions for which the Exhibition is famous. No expense or effort has been spared in securing for Confederation Year the finest array of acts for the Hippodrome Show that will be given as usual in front of the Grand Stand every afternoon and evening. There will be a galaxy of stars of the show world filling three stages at the one time. One of the outstanding features will be the Al Golem Troupe, court artists to the Shah of Persia, who present the most picturesque and sensational acrobatic novelty now before the public. The remainder of the programme will be in keeping with this wonderful attraction.

SINCLAIR LEAVES SOCIALISTS.

Famous Author Believes War Must Be Fought to the Finish.

After having been identified with the Socialist party for sixteen years, Upton Sinclair, the novelist, tendered his resignation from the organization to the local branch in Pasadena, Cal. In his letter of resignation, Mr. Sinclair explained that his action was taken because of his opposition to the so-called "majority report" on war policy, his lack of sympathy with the "Un-American tendency" of the Socialist party in its opposition to the draft, and the declaration that this is "the most unjustifiable war in history."

Mr. Sinclair states that nine years ago he believed that a general strike would prove to be a great weapon of internationalism, but that in 1913 his German Socialist friends advised that the German Socialist party would be wiped out in 24 hours if it were willed, and it is because of this condition that it is up to the rest of the world to set free the German Socialists. Sinclair predicted that the Socialist party organization would be wiped out if it endeavoured to carry into effect its formally declared policy of mass opposition to conscription.

He said the war must be fought until there had been a thorough and complete democratization of the Governments of Germany and Austria, and any agitation for peace, which did not include this demand, was, whether it was realized or not, a pro-German agitation.

All stale bread can be put in the warming oven until dry. It is then dry enough to roll with crumbs or to use as twice-baked bread.

IMPORTANCE OF WOMEN

Recognized at Last.

A writer in the Ottawa Citizen, of recent date, gives a description of the publicity campaign looking to more effective war service by the Canadian people, that is being carried on by the National Service Board. He notes in particular the close attention that is being paid to the potential ability of the women to assist in the battle against Germany.

From the newspaper advertising she notes these days, says this writer, woman is reminded of how even in casual shopping she may conduct her business so as to place the maximum pressure against the enemy. From hospital nursing and knitting comforts, woman has graduated into a place in the effective fighting lines of the nation. This writer puts it as follows:

"That these vital facts are engaging the attention of the Government of Canada is apparent from a series of appeals now being published in the daily newspapers. These announcements form part of a comprehensive publicity campaign which has been undertaken by the National Service Board and, while they are not addressed exclusively to women, they are largely of that character."

It is pointed out that this publicity campaign is designed to reach to all parts of Canada, no method of reaching the public having been overlooked. Even bill-boards are used in the larger centres. Shortly the National Service Board will issue a pamphlet on economy and thrift in the preparation and use of food, of which over 1,500,000 copies are being prepared. B-31

POTATO CROP INSURANCE IS AN INVESTMENT THAT IS WORTH WHILE

Loss of Potato Crop Through Blight Can Be Prevented by Spraying Thoroughly at Regular Intervals With Bordeaux Mixture—Twenty-five Per Cent of the Crop is Lost Annually.

It is estimated that 25 per cent. of the potato crop of Ontario or approximately 5,000,000 bushels is lost annually by the farmers of Ontario due to attacks of the Late Blight and of the Colorado Potato Beetles. This loss can be prevented by spraying thoroughly at regular intervals with Bordeaux Mixture as a fungicide to prevent Blight and Paris Green or Arsenate of Lead as a poison to combat the Beetles.

Late Blight is a fungus disease which is particularly noticeable on potatoes in the late summer and it is quite serious when the weather is all warm, moist, and muggy. It is first noticeable in the form of dark coloured spots on the leaves which soon begin to curl up and in some instances the diseased portion of leaves and stem emit a smell like that of bad fish. A careful examination of the under surface of the leaves there these brownish spots appear will reveal the presence of a greyish white "mould" or "mildew." The spores produced in these spots on the leaves are scattered by wind and water, and are capable of infecting a healthy potato leaf and starting the disease afresh. If no spraying has been done and weather conditions are at all favourable the spores thus produced rapidly infect the surrounding plants and the disease spreads most rapidly. The disease can be prevented by thoroughly spraying with Bordeaux Mixture. It is an Insurance, in fact an investment worth while.

BORDEAUX MIXTURE.

The Bordeaux Mixture for controlling Late Blight, also Early Blight, should be very carefully prepared and applied in a very thorough manner in order to be effective.

The formula is:—
Four lbs. Copper Sulphate (Bluestone).
Four lbs. Lime, freshly slaked.
Forty gallons Water.

The Copper Sulphate and Lime should not be mixed in concentrated solutions as this lessens the value of the mixture and fungicide. Dissolve each separately and dilute by making up to 20 gallons with water before straining into the spray tank. Bordeaux should be used fresh, though stock solutions may be kept for an indefinite period. These stock solutions may be made as follows:—

Put 20 gallons of water in a barrel and suspend 20 lbs. of bluestone in an old sack just below the surface of the water. The bluestone will soon dissolve and each gallon of the solution will contain 1 lb. of the Copper Sulphate. Slake 20 lbs. lime—good burnt lime—and make up to 20 gallons with water. To make the Bordeaux Mixture put 4 gallons from each of the stock solutions in separate vessels and dilute each to 20 gallons of water and mix together in the spray tank.

In order to control the Potato Beetles some poison may be used along with the Bordeaux Mixture. Add ½ lb. of Paris Green and 1½ lbs. Arsenate of Lead to 40 gallons of the mixture. This has been proved a very effective remedy.

In order to do effective work all parts of the potato plants should be covered with a fine mist or spray. The plants should be sprayed about every two or three weeks. Carefulness and thoroughness pay and pay well, while careless and poor work is simply energy thrown away.

The Postal Service in Mesopotamia

By H. B. C. POLLARD

(By H. B. C. Pollard).

News from far-off battle fronts comes sparingly and slowly. The public, no doubt, often wonder what is happening in those theatres of war when no marked military progress is evinced in the communiques, and the answer is that all the time, solid, gruelling, constructive work of every kind is in progress, and a heavy burden is being borne by the army behind the lines.

As a general rule it may be taken that the farther away the front, the more organization is needed, for in countries such as East Africa the Mesopotamia the local resources are largely undeveloped, and many things such as roads, wharfs and railways, which are commonplaces of the Western front, have to be built before successful operations can be undertaken. Every little extra supply needed at the front throws an additional strain upon the hatchworked and extemporised organization of the lines of communication. To-day an army is more than ever dependent upon its lines of communication, and with the ever increasing complexity of the mechanism of war, a parallel increase in personnel and extension of the service behind the lines has proved necessary. Indeed one can honestly say that the actual battle is won as much by organisation and preparation behind the lines, as by gallantry in the field; it is the former which make the actual battle stroke possible.

CHRISTMAS MAIL.

As an instance of the strain that even an apparently trivial happening throws upon the network of organization, take the delivery of the Christmas mail to the troops in Mesopotamia.

In the one week three separate English mails arrived; the first on December 23rd; the second on December 27th; and the last on December 29th. To these must be added the steamer-borne Indian mail with its gifts for the Indian contingents. The staff of the base Post Office had pledged their word that, should the Chrjstmas mail arrive in time, no power on earth should prevent the men in the trenches receiving it at once. In order to achieve this everybody from the senior officers to the youngest sorter willingly sacrificed their own holiday period and the occasion served to demonstrate vividly their wonderful speed and efficiency.

Hardly had the mail steamer cast anchor when the postal launches, each towing its string of native craft, moved alongside. In the shortest possible time the bags were hoisted out of the holds and stowed in the boats, and launch after launch came up in long procession to take their share. So soon as a boat was loaded it was drawn to the pier, emptied and the bags were borne by coolies to the Base Post Office for sorting. There the work was fast and furious, and the first consignment of sorted mail were being reloaded upon the river boats before the holds of the steamers were cleared. Mail had to be sorted, not only for the Tigris and Euphrates fronts, but for all intermediate points and stations, some going by boat and thence on by rail, some by water all the way. The quantity too was amazing. The mail of the 23rd December comprised 3,500 sacks, all of which had to be sorted, repacked and despatched within ten hours of their arrival. It meant all night work of a particularly strenuous kind and the close co-operation of the Railway and Inland water transport staff.

Christmas Eve brought no rest to the tired workers; the letters had been dealt with, but the parcels were yet to be sorted. Yet the men laboured on until, by six o'clock the next morning, nature was exhausted and they were falling asleep over their work. For a brief period on Christmas morning they had rest, but in the afternoon and evening the task was willingly resumed, and by midnight the remainder of the parcels were on their way toward the trenches where the post was raptuously received. Two days later the remainder of the English mail was received, once again there was a long spell of night duty and the whole mechanism of despatch and distribution was again successfully called upon to carry the unusual pressure.

The handling of the Christmas mail was no light task as may be judged by the fact that it was estimated that, besides countless letters and papers, every British soldier and officer received at least one parcel, some as many as seven. The normal mail for a week is seldom more than a few hundred sacks. The mail of Christmas week was more than ten thousand, yet the same staff and distribution facilities as are usually employed, were able to deal with the overload, at the cost of personal sacrifice, but to the eternal credit of their department.

FORM OF STORES

If it is understood what an increase in work even such a small thing as an extra heavy mail can involve, it will be realized that every new device or form of stores adopted by the army produces a gigantic repercussion throughout the supply system. If a novel type of gas mask, or cholera belt, for example, is issued, its journey from the factory to the trenches throws additional work upon innumerable shoulders. In Mesopotamia everything, from food to building material, has to be imported, and the strain upon the transport services and lines of communication is augmented by the absolute barrenness of a land where neither food for men nor forage for horses grows except in certain seasons. Under these circumstances it can be readily understood that public criticism of shortcomings in the supply is sometimes ill-informed or unfair, and that a temporary shortage of some kind may be inevitable because certain all-essential supplies have to be got up to the lines and there is no room for non-essentials.

Taking the transport service as a whole, their work has been well nigh miraculous, and to them is due the credit for the substantial unpretentious foundation upon which it has been possible to erect the structure of striking victories in the field.

DRANK QUART OF INVALID WINE

LINDSAY, July 30.—On Friday afternoon Chief Short arrested a Toronto man named John Brown on the charge of intoxication. He was picked up near Woolworth's store, and it is said that he drank a quart bottle of Invalid Wine. The Chief took him to the police station and he promised to turn up at court this morning. When his name was called he failed to respond, and it is believed he has left the limits.

Fifty-five Cars Parked On The Market Square Saturday Night

Immediate Response to Chief Thompson's New Regulation to Keep the Main Thoroughfares Free of Cars—Other Automobile Notes.

Chief Thompson's regulation providing for the parking of automobiles on the market Square proved an immediate success. Saturday afternoon there were seventeen cars assembled there, and in the evening fifty-five, and at one time there were seventeen different makes in one group. The automobile owners have apparently responded unanimously to the wishes of the authorities, and the next step will be to light the parking ground and to place a man in charge all the time. It was generally stated on Saturday night that these requirements should be supplied at once, and the manner in which the automobile owners obeyed the regulations suggests that they should have every facility on the Market Square.

Drivers of motor cars and carriages are reminded of the traffic regulation that demands that they pass on the left any vehicle going in the same direction as themselves. This clause is being flouted every day, and the police are going to enforce it principally for the reason that they are anxious to maintain absolute order, if possible, in Peterborough's street traffic. This clause is easy to remember, pass on the left vehicles travelling in the direction you are going.

Deserves Mention.

There should be an honour roll for the automobilists who show consideration for the rights of others. Their number is so few that they stand out in pleasing contrast with the conduct of the irresponsible drivers who imagine that the streets have been set apart solely as a speedway for them. Last night, at the corner of Aylmer and Charlotte Streets, a horse and buggy were driving south and an automobile approaching from the east. In such a situation the new rule of the road governs — the vehicle on the right has the right-of-way. The driver of the buggy was timidly looking both to the east and the west as a safety first precaution, and suddenly pulled up his horse when he saw the car. The driver of the latter called out, "Go ahead, you've the right-of-way." When that spirit possesses those who use the city's highways, the danger of accidents will be reduced to a minimum.

His Car Gone.

Dr. Russell, of Bailliboro, drove into the city on Saturday afternoon, and, although he was unaware of the new regulation regarding parking space, he showed his caution by leaving the car directly in front of the Police Station while he transacted his business in the city. When he returned the car was gone, and in a flurry of alarm he rushed into the station to report his loss. He was then informed that one of the constables had drive it around to the market, where it was carefully guarded.

In brief, then, the parking regulation has received the support of the automobile owners. It has been further suggested that the Saturday night paraders, those who drive round and round the city, and especially the business streets, for the peculiar peacock delusion that the public is anxious to observe them. If such were the case, a once over is sufficient, and any pleasure that may obtain is monopolized by the merry-go-round drivers, who prefer the white lights to the long, silent stretches in the country. Perhaps, the pavement explains the custom. But whatever the explanation may be, it has been suggested that the traffic by-law is incomplete without a regulation specifying the number of times that joy-riders may encircle the business thoroughfares during the busiest hours. For example, on Saturday night or Saturday afternon, between certain hours, an automobile might pass a traffic officer three times. The next time his number would be taken for a police court appearance. This may not be adopted, probably will not, but there is a feeling that it is necessary to squelch those whose motoring pleasure is confined to a butterfly buzzing amid the white lights.

Citizens Thronged The River To Escape The Heat Yesterday

Hundreds of citizens spend Sunday afternoon on and in the river, and probably as many more cooled off in a tubfull at home. Below Rye's Boathouse the river was alive with canoeists and campers, and humble householders whom the heat had driven forth to seek whatever relief the Otonabee had to offer. Many donned bathing suits and remained in the water all afternoon; others floated their canoes in the cool shade of overhanging trees, while not a few were content to doze, perhaps to dream of cruising yachts off the Gaspe shore, where the breeze played without restraint. It is possible that civic bathing beaches were not greatly missed yesterday, if a strict observance of the Lord's Day would have kept them closed. The Street Railway offers a facility for getting away from the intense heat, but never a wheel turns on the only day in the week the labouring man enjoys with his family. And he enjoys it at home unless he braves a long walk to the river. Every boat at Rye's boathouse was in service on Sunday, and most of them made two or three trips. And for the comfort of the Otonabee and a fresh breeze the people should be deeply grateful, otherwise they would have been prostrated by yesterday's blazing sun. Burned arms and shoulders to-day reveal the manner in which the Sabbath was spent by those who exposed themselves unwisely to the sun's rays yesterday. Of course the elect turned their motors into the highway and sought Chemong, Buckhorn, McCracken's, Cobourg and other resorts, where the natural conditions heightened by the imagination temper the thermometer's zeal as the city knows it.

A TRANSFORMER CAUGHT FIRE

Chief Howard's "Red Devil" Makes a Quick Run

Shortly after nine o'clock last evening the motor driven unit of the Fire Department, received a call to Landsdowne street, east of Lock street, where a transformer was on fire. A couple of chemicals extinguished the blaze and later in the evening the repair truck of the Utilities Commission arrived on the scene. The repair men were unable to repair the transformer as it was badly damaged by the fire, with the result that the lights in that section of the city were out the remainder of the night. Chief Howard's "red fliver" made the run in record time and saved the horses a long pull on a hot night.

3,200 COOKS ARE NEEDED.

Government Calls on Hotel Men to Aid the Army.

NEW YORK, July 28.—The United States Government will draft an army of some 650,000 men next week, and it needs cooks for them. The hotel men of the country have been asked to supply most of the men required. Joseph Beifel, proprietor of the Hotel Sherman of Chicago, has been asked by Quartermaster General Sharpe to see that the cooks have breakfast ready on the first day the members of the national army reach the cantonments. He in turn, it was announced last night, has named a hotel man for each of the sixteen cantonments. John McGlynn, President of the New York State Hotel Men's Association, will look out for the cantonment at Bridgetown, N.J., and L. M. Boomer, proprietor of the McAlpin, for the camp at Yaphank, L.I.

The cooks are to be divided into two classes—A and B. The men of Class A will be chefs who can act as instructors. The men of Class B will be those who merely can cook. Class A men will receive $125 a month, Class B men $90. The Hotel Association of New York City has undertaken to supply 240 cooks for Yaphank. The city is expected to supply 1,000 cooks in all for the new army.

TRIPLE "CORNER" IN MOTOR ACCIDENTS

On Saturday there were three automobile mishaps, but fortunately without any serious results. In the afternoon a professional gentleman, passing down George street, had the hind wheel of his auto struck by another auto coming from an intersecting street. The doctor's auto was turned completely around, and after the little collision was, quite uninjured, facing in the opposite direction to that it was taking at the time of the mishap.

On Saturday evening on Charlotte street at the crossing of Stewart street, a little child was run down by an auto which came to a stop at once, and the youngster was found under the auto unhurt. Again on Saturday evening an auto, coming south on Rubidge street, at the intersection of Hunter, in some way got beyond control and crossing diagnally across the street struck, and carried away, at the northwest corner, a section of the picketting that surrounds the Ritchie residence. In spite of the warning signs against trespassing, posted here and there, the auto entered the grounds and came to a stop among the shrubbery, not much the worse for its little adventure. From the fact that these three auto mishaps, occurring at street intersections there was quite a "corner" in accidents. None of these accidents may have been due to reckless driving, but from the fact of so much heedless driving, and especially turning corners at a rapid rate of speed, it is a wonder that fatal accidents have not occurred as is certain to be the case some of these days, unless a good deal greater care is exercised by giddy drivers.

NEW YORK, July 27.—A number of volunteers from Wall Street will depart at an early date for Europe. These men are expert accountants and bookkeepers and are going to the headquarters of the Red Cross in France where they will follow their profession.

Refrigerator doors should always be latched tight. If they are half closed, ice is wasted and the refrigerator is not so cold.

PEACE INTERVIEW REALLY AN ASSAULT UPON THE ALLIES

Presence in Switzerland of Erzberger Regarded as Proof That Militarists Staged the Recent "Crisis" in Parliament

ERZBERGER ONLY A TOOL

LONDON, July 30. — Germany's Junkers are working hard with the German people to justify militarism. An effort by the militarists to delude the public into the belief that Germany is beset with rapacious foes, who started the work to dismember Germany, is what London saw to-day beside the "peace interview" granted by Chancellor Michaelis of Germany and Foreign Minister Czernin of Austria. The reported presence in Switzerland of Matthias Erzberger, the clerical leader, recently head of the Reichstag coalition, presumably as a peace negotiator, was regarded as proof that militarists deliberately staged the recent "crisis" in the parliament and that Erzberger was merely a tool of those interests. Michaelis' peace interview was rather an assault on England and France. He charged the allies with secret agreements aimed at the "enslavement of Germany." He was particularly bitter in responding to Sir Edward Carson's suggestion that the first step toward peace would be for Germany to announce her willingness to surrender occupied territory.

Of curious collateral interest in the peace talk was an interview attributed to Dr. Erzberger at Zurich, in which he declared if he could talk with Premier Lloyd George or Foreign Minister Balfour a few hours, an "understanding" which would permit peace negotiation, would arise.

Hot Weather Lowered The Church Attendance

Rev. Mr. Pogue Makes a Pointed Observation—Four Weeks' Absence

The hot weather of yesterday had its effect on the congregation of the city churches. The morning services were fairly well attended, but the evening congregations were sadly depleted. At the evening service in St. Paul's church, the Rev. Mr. Pogue observed that a number of the attendants at the evening service were elderly people who lived a considerable distance from the church, while others within a hundred yards of the church were sitting on their verandahs.

Mr. Pogue will be absent for the next four weeks, the duration of his vacation period. The preacher for the first two weeks of Mr. Pogue's absence will be the Rev. Dr. Bingham.

DEER DO $10,000 HARM

Atlantic County Farmers Petition Governor Edge to Reduce Great Number of Animals.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J.—Petitions addressed to Governor Edge, begging relief from deer depredations, are being circulated in the farming districts of Atlantic county, and are being signed by almost every farmer.

Farmers assert that the herds of deer have caused not less than $10,000 damage to crops within the last two months. They may not kill the animals under the law, and want the Governor to do something eo reduce the great number that now abound.

The "Marrying" Parson Jailed

He Overlooked the Necessity of Marrying His Own Affinity.

CHARLESTON, V. Va., July 30.—Known as the "Marrying Parson," with a record of having performed the marriage ceremony for 3,047 couples, the Rev. Henry Hill, of this city, neglected to avail himself of the formality of a wedding with Maggie Adkins when he chose her for a mate, and, as a result, is in jail.

The police say Hill admitted that he had been living with her, but that so soon as he could secure a divorce from his legal wife he would marry his affinity.

Hill has been a character here for years. His stamping ground has been the Court House, where he could be seen daily approaching couples as they left the County Clerk's office with marriage licenses. Through the inducement of cut rates for his services Hill did a big business.

"They say that mate of yours calls himself a practical Socialist," observed Private Smith.

Private Smythe looked up gloomily from his half-pint tankard.

"He must be," he said. "He pinches my socks, smokes my fags, and hanged if he don't write to my girl, too."—Tit-Bits.

A Fascinating Dress of White Satin $29.00

Fascinating from the first turn in the collar to the last stitch in the hem of the skirt. It is white, but of that tint so often called "Oyster," the skirt is draped as nearly all the new skirts are, the new silhouette is prominently featured and the bodice is beautifully embroidered with gold and silver.

White Dress of Silk Marquisette $25.00

Fashioned of white silk Marquisette —therein lies its great charm, "delightful coolness on a summer's day". It is liberally embroidered, made in Russian tunic style and prettily arranged sleeves and collar.

Another Distinctive Marquisette Model $25.00

Similar to other Marquisette model in material only. The draped panier effect is unusual to say the least, the chin chin collar is another deserving feature —tiny corral buttons form a tracery that contribute a pleasant relief.

Dress of White Georgette Crepe $27.00

Georgette is assuredly the most beautiful of all sheer materials and especially so when so skillfully employed—this, we are sure you will heartily endorse when you view the garment. Empire style, skirt artistically braided and Bolero effect at waist gives it an ultra smartness.

NEW YORK COLDEST TOWN IN WORLD, SAYS MAN WHO ADVERTISED FOR A WIFE

(By Helen McLaughlin, in New York Globe)

"New York is the coldest town in the world. It is harder to get acquainted with New York girls than with girls in any other part of the map."

This is the opinion of Arthur M. Loeb of Central America, South America, and all ports south, who is here to find a wife to take back with him into the tropics.

Mr. Loeb, who sells machinery and engineers' supplies to the southern countries, has just spent eight years travelling about from place to place alone, and thinks it is about time he cast about for a partner to share his adventures. And so, being what he calls decidedly "unconventional," he has advertised in the newspapers for a bride, who is to be chosen for him by a committee of two of his unmarried women friends. The names of the friends are to be kept strictly secret.

And yet although he admits the unconventional part of his proceeding, he is unable to see any reason why he should not have done it.

"If I wanted a business partner," he told a Globe reporter this morning, "I should simply put an advertisement in the papers. Why should I not do the same thing for a wife? I regard marriage as a business proposition, pure and simple. And I am tired of travelling around alone. I have done it since I was twelve years old, and I think that is long enough.

"I want a young woman between the ages of twenty-three and twenty-eight. Her nationality is really unimportant, although I prefer an American-born. However, this point does not really count with me. She may be German, English, French, or Spanish—I don't care.

"I have a special admiration for western and southern girls however. As to looks, that is immaterial in choosing a wife. She may be blonde or brunette or Titian haired (Mr. Loeb is Titian haired himself). As for weight, I should say about 135 to 140 pounds.

"The girl that I finally choose must be a good cook. I am not keen about German or French or Italian cooking —the plain old sort will do me. She must be modern, too. By that I do not mean that she must be altogether a blue stocking—I had rather that she should be not too well educated. I am a self-made man myself, and have received all my education in the public schools, and while I think that a woman should be conversant with all that is going on in the world I abhor that affectation that passes as 'culture.'

"I hope that she will like good books. I like Dickens and Thackeray, Victor Hugo, Alexandro Dumas, and the Russians; but I have never yet read the trash that is the common diet of most so-called well-read persons.

MUST BE ABLE TO ROUGH IT

"My wife must be an outdoor girl. I am an enthusiastic tennis player, and swimmer, and I ride horseback a great deal. Often down in the tropics it will be necessary for her to accompany me on long rides extending over four or five days. Sometimes we will have to make our way through the interior in a dugout, a rude road made of the trunk of a tree hollowed out by fire. Again we will have to spend days in a house made of logs thrown together so roughly that the light shows through the chinks. So you see that it will be necessary for her to be fond of outdoors, and a traveller besides.

"We will live in hotels the greater part of the time; occasionally, when we are in one place long enough, we will have our own private house, and then there are the expeditions into the interior.

The towns of the south have all the accommodations of New York on a smaller scale. There are fine hotels, theatres, roof-gardens, and excellent motion picture houses there, so that her life need never be dull. And the people down there are a great deal nicer to strangers than New Yorkers are, so that she need never be lonely. Down there, we take people on their merits, and they do the same by us.

"There is one point more than all the others that I must emphasize. She must be healthy, and interested in the study of hygiene and eugenics Those are pet theories of mine. As to the climate, if she is strong, she will experience no difficulty in becoming readily acclimated. In some of the places that we shall visit there is a wet and dry season, while in others there is a winter and summer, just as you have here, only not, of course, so severe.

NOT SEEKING N. Y. TYPE.

"The regular costume of women in the tropics is white, and white shoes go with it. I think the idea of the trosseau is ridiculous. Anyhow, I am not fond of fine clothes, and I don't want my wife to be, either. I think the costumes that the New York girls wear are scandalous and that they themselves are dreadfully homely.

"They hide whatever features they have under a layer of powder and rouge, and have no brains whatever. They live altogether too fast—in fact, the whole city does. The girls rush home from business, get dressed and go out until 2 or 3 in the morning; before they have time to sleep they have to be up and at their work again. They get no rest, and they do not eat the things they should. Of course, they can't be healthy. I am not looking for that type.

SIAM IN THE WAR TO SECURE RIGHTS

BELIEVES SMALL NATIONS ARE FORCED TO RESIST THE MENACE OF TEUTONIC DOMINATION.

Boston. — National necessity and moral pressure forced Siam into the war on the side of the Entente, in the opinion of Mahidol, Prince of Songkla, brother of the reigning King Vigiravudh. Neutrality on the part of this small but long independent nation in the Far East had become increasingly difficult, and there had been a growing sentiment that freedom and justice for States not strong from a military standpoint were not to be secured through the policy of the Central Powers. Sympathy for Belgium, which began with the invasion of that country, had taken a strong hold on the Siamese, and the popular aversion to Teutonic methods, solidified by President Wilson's message, asking Congress to declare a state of war, left no doubt as to the duty as well as path of expediency, of Siam.

The Prince of Songkla who has just completed his first year in a special course at Harvard University, expressed these views to-night after explaining that they were purely personal and in no way official. He had not received any word from Bangkok, and learned of the action of the Siamese government through the Associated Press. The Siamese Minister, Phyra Prabha Karavongse, who is spending the summer at Gloucester, also was without official advices. The Prince and the Minister conferred during the day with Wolcott H. Pitkin, Jr., acting general adviser to the Siamese government, who had been in this country on leave of absence since February.

The part that Siam will play in the war will be insignificant so far as aid to her allies is concerned, in the opinion of the Prince. Germany, he said, had more to lose than the Allies would have had if Siam had cast her lot with the Teutonic empires, for Germany has lost her last important harbor of refuge in the Far East. While convinced that Siam had acted wisely, the Prince was not elated, because he has tender memories both of the German royal family and people.

"Let me say, first of all," he said, "that I am very sorry we are at war with Germany. For eight years I studied in that wonderful country, and was a Lieutenant in the German Navy. The gratitude I feel for many kindnesses shall never pass and I should deeply regret if valued friendships which I formed should be broken by war. I hate war and long for the day of universal peace.

"Unhappily, war for Siam, I am now satisfied, was inevitable. We must look to the future and to our security as an independent State. In common with other small nations, we were threatened by the Teutonic policy. We have been neutral, but with great difficulty.

"The popular wave of sympathy for Belgium that swept over our country when Belgium was invaded was followed by a sober second thought. If Germany triumphed, what might we expect? Then there was a continual source of irritation in the extra-territorial rights which Germany enjoyed in Siam. If a German, or an American, in fact, for the United States also enjoys these rights contrary to public sentiment, committed a crime in Siam, he must be tried in the consular courts of his own country. On the other hand both England and France voluntarily surrendered these rights, as we hope the United States now will do, and recognize us as a nation capable of dispensing justice as well to foreigners as to our own people.

"The way in which the Germans enforced these rights frequently gave offence. Germany became in the popular mine, a military giant, striding ruthlessly through the fields of weaker peoples. Presiden. Wilson's message to Congress put into words what the Siamese had been thinking, and when that great message became known and understood in Siam, the place of the country in the war was fixed."

As to what Siam is to gain from the war, the Prince said:

"First, she will secure her place as an independent nation, free to work out her own destiny without fear of more powerful neighbors. Again, she will get rid of the extra-territorial rights which now brand her as a nation of inferior civilization. She will be recognized as she ought to be in the great family of nations. She will I hope obtain a readjustment of her internal relations which will relieve her of the unequal and unfair tariff agreements under which she now suffers."

As to the odd situation of an absolute autocracy fighting Prussian autocracy in a struggle to democratise the world, the Prince said:

"We will fight for a democracy of the world—an international democracy, a democracy that will permit the peoples of every country to rule or be ruled as they wish. If we choose to be an autocracy that is our business. The true democracy will not distinguish between black and white, or yellow and white. It will make all men equal everywhere with the privilege of being a part of that particular political unity which best suits them. From a military standpoint, we shall not cut much of a figure but our moral support will be thrown in the scales on the side of national and individual freedom."

The Prince is a lieutenant in the Siamese Navy. He is expecting a message directing him to report in Siam for orders, but his preference would be an assignment with the American fleet as an observer or in some similar capacity.

SUDDEN DEATH IN PORT HOPE

While Chatting With the Blacksmith, Mr. Jacob Neville Suddenly Expired.

PORT HOPE, July 30. — Death came with great suddenness to Mr. Jacob Neville Saturday morning. Mr. Neville had taken his horse to Mr. John Thomas' blacksmith shop on Mill street and then went up to the barber shop. Returning for his horse, Mr. Nevile stood chatting with Mr. Thomas about his garden and remarked how well everything was looking. Without making the least complaint, Mr. Neville sank to the ground and passed away before medical aid could reach him.

The late Mr. Neville has for years been teamster on the corporation and was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. A widow, one daughter, Mrs. Lyston Jones of Tuberose, Sask., and one son, Walter at home, survive. To the bereaved ones Port Hope extends heartfelt condolence in this their sudden and irreparable loss.

G. A. LUBIN IS STILL AT LARGE

LINDSAY, July 30.—Chief Short has received no information concerning the whereabouts of G. A. Lubin, the young French-Canadian who is wanted in Lindsay for theft, and fraud. There is a report going around that Lubin was seen in Brockville recently, and this rumour may have some foundation, as he operated his cheque scheme in Kingston.

Chief Short has covered the country with descriptions of the sharper, and it is strange that he is not in the toils 'ere this.

One of his freak stunts while in Lindsay was the proposed organization of a social club among the young set. He nearly persuaded a local launch owner to fit up his craft which had been lying idle, as he wished to rent it for the season.

Lubin was a social lion all right in the circle in which he scintillated, but he had not sufficient greenbacks to keep up the pace.

WON'T WORK WITH ALIENS.

C.P.R. Freight Handlers at Calgary Take Definite Stand.

CALGARY, Alta., July 26. — Freight handlers in the C.P.R. yards here have refused to work if enemy alien labour is employed by the company. Three times yesterday a squad of Austrians employed as emergency workers in the yards had to be removed. The company states the Austrians were the only workers they could get.

Cameron Will Has Been Sustained

LINDSAY, July 30.—Judgment in the Cameron case has been handed out by Judge McMillan. The will has been sustained. His Honour decided that a probate of the will be granted. He also finds against all parties opposed to the will and rules that the estate must pay the executors' costs, while the parties protesting the will must pay their own costs, including the costs of court.

USE HORSE SENSE HE URGES GERMANY

AMSTERDAM.— Dr. Carl Peters, German explorer and pulicist, in the Taglische Rundschau inveighs violently against further German peace overtures and asks—"Is not England's scornful refusal of Germany peace offer last December enough for our statesmen?"

The writer pleads for horse sense in dealing with the peace question, saying:—"A horse dealer never shows anxiety to buy, nor does he at once state the highest price he is prepared to pay. Let the other party make the next bid. Shall we fail in the biggest business deal in history, which involves the future of our race?"

Bomb He Finds Costs American Hand In France

WITH THE AMERICAN FORCES IN FRANCE—The first field casualty of the American forces occurred here. A soldier became too inquisitive in regard to the construction of a live French bomb among the supplies brought to camp for training purposes. He extracted the safety pin in some manner, and soon thereafter a loud explosion occurred. Fortunately for the soldier, the bomb did not contain a charge of full battle strength, or he would have been blown to pieces. As it was, he escaped with the loss of his right hand.

At every vantage point near the camp men in khaki and men in blue can be seen drilling, marching and digging side by side. Field manoeuvres were in progress at several places, while from more secluded spots came the rattle of machine guns. Musketry practice was held and on every hand was activity which was most impressive.

The French and American soldiers seem to enjoy their association thoroughly. The French frankly admire the aptitude of their enthusiastic pupils.

Trips to the French front undoubtedly will be quite frequent in the future, in order that American officers may acquaint themselves with conditions of life on the front line in its various phases, including routine as well as actual working out of offensive and defensive programmes.

EMMA GOLDMAN BACK IN NEW YORK

With Other Anarchists She Awaits Bail—Confers with Berkman—Resents Prison Food.

NEW YORK, July 30. — Delayed eight hours by a freight wreck at Piedmont, W. Va., Emma Goldman arrived here from the federal women's prison at Jeerson City, Mo., where she was sentenced for conspiracy to violate the Selective Draft act. Harry Weinberger, her attorney, stated that he would prepare to offer bail for her to-day, together with bail for Alexander Berkman, Louis Kramer and Morris Becker who were sentenced for the same offence.

Upon her arrival at the office of Thomas D. McCarthy, United States' Marshal, Emma Goldman said she would like to have a conference with Mr. Weinberger, her neice, Mrs. Stella Comyns Ballantine, and her "comrade," Alexander Berkman. The latter was brought down from the Tombs, to which both prisoners were returned at the close of the conference.

According to John Whalen, deputy marshal, who brought her back from Jefferson City, Emma Goldman complained bitterly of the treatment she received there. She said she was kept confined in an isolated wing and put to work sewing overalls. She also complained of the food, characterizing the coffee as iron rust and water.

While passing through St. Louis Emma Goldman asked for a bottle of beer. Upon this being refused she drank a glass of buttermilk. It made her ill.

Mr. Weinberger during the day offered to put up Liberty Bonds as surety, but was informed by Harold A. Content, Assistant District Attorney, it was a rule of the office not to accept bonds. The bonds have been actually issued, but Mr. Weinberger said he would offer receipts for purchase.

GERMANY LAYS STEEL PLANS.

Foresees Economic Strife after War and Forms Research Institute.

The German newspaper tells of the organization in Dusseldorf on an Institute for Iron Research, under the direction of the German Steel and iron manufacturers.

The organizers said that the bitter international economic strife certain to follow the war required that Germany should lose no time in extending her technical facilities, especially in the realm of metallurgy, in every possible direction. The steel and iron trade in conjunction with the Kaiser Wilhelm Scientific Society, announces that it is prepared to establish an institute worthy of the important object in view.

"REGULARS" DRILLING DAILY AT SING SING

TWO COMPANIES, INCLUDING MANY FACING FREEDOM, ARE COMMANDED BY CONVICT SERGEANT.

SING SING PRISON.—The 'spirit of 1917' has found its way into Sing Sing Prison, and every pleasant afternoon there can be seen two companies of "regulars" drilling in the yard, within the walls, under the command of George Hodson, who, before he came to the prison for manslaughter, was in the regular army He is now a sergeant at arms at the prison.

Hodson admits that the possibility of his "command" being mustered into the service of Uncle Sam is very remote, but the men have taken to the drill work in a manner that is surprising. Some or them are "long termers," but there are many who are serving short terms. Some of these probably expect that when they are liberated it may not be too late to go to the front.

Belgian Cavalry Capture U-Boat

Horsemen Round Up Crew of Submarine Which Came Ashore Near Calais.

PARIS, July 30.—The German submarine that ran ashore on the French coast, west of Calais, on Thursday, was not destroyed when its crew set fire to the gasoline tank, but was captured by a troop of Belgian cavalry, according to a despatch from Calais.

The stranded submarine was first sighted by a customs officer. He called upon some Belgian horsemen, who were exercising nearby, to come to his help. They rode down the beach, the message reports, surrounded the U-boat, and made prisoners of the crew.

SIFTON TO RE-ENTER ARENA.

Reports That he May Contest Brandon for Parliament.

Winnipeg, July 27.—Sir Clifford Sifton is interviewing many business men of Winnipeg of all shades of political opinions, and it is announced he will address the Canadian Club on Monday on the subject of conscription.

Reports that indicate Sir Clifford again desires to enter the political field suggest he may stand in his old constituency of Brandon. That Federal seat has been unrepresented since Sir James Aikins resigned to lead the Conservatives of Manitoba in 1915.

Each delegate to the Liberal convention here will pay $12 to the fund. This will pay for his ticket, no matter how far he must come.

CARDINAL CONDEMNS CONSCRIPTION

QUEBEC CITY, July 30.—Cardinal Begin, in an interview here in L'Action Catholique, condemns the conscription bill as a violation of the Church of Christ, whose law and practise exempt the clergy from service. The Cardinal says that the Military Service Bill as at present framed, prevents serious obstacle to the extension of the church.

Kyte Will Criticize The Government

Special to the Examiner:

OTTAWA, July 30.—George W. Kyte, M.P., in the Commons this afternoon, or this evening, will hurl a drastic criticism at the Government for not taking some action on the O'Conner report in regard to alleged profiteering in foodstuffs. It is not known what the Government attitude will be on the matter, but it is certain that the whole programme of food control will be reviewed, and it is likely that the announcement of considerable restrictions in regard to food will be made. The Conscription Bill will likely be passed by the Senate this week, but there will be some comment from both sides on Sir Thomas White's new income tax measure, and in all probability some big amendments. It was learned to-day that strong pressure is being brought on Sir Robert Borden to disenfranchise men of alien enemy birth, but the Premier is opposed to such drastic action. Another suggestion has been that the alien enemy vote be "hived." That is, that they be permitted to elect their own representative to the Commons as the soldiers are doing in the Western provinces. Indications now are that Parliament will not prorogue till September 1st.

WILL HELP IN THE HARVEST

Raspberries And Blueberries Are Plentiful Now

It can be guaranteed that a day's outing will enable you to give a good account of a day's efforts.

THREE YEARS MORE OF WAR?

British Government Renews Leases in France For That Period.

Those who wish to hazard a guess upon the probable duration of the war will be able to derive some information from the fresh leases which the British and American Governments are signing on the property which they are using in French ports. The old leases are running out, and are being renewed for a period of three years.

Allowance has to be made for the work that will have to be done following peace, but this news is regarded as confirming the belief that the war will continue well into next year.

REFUSE DUMPED ON RIVER FRONT

Board of Works Department Responsible For a Public Nuisance

Complaints are numerous concerning the action of Street Commissioner Evans in authorising the dumping of refuse from the city's street on the river bank at the foot of Dalhousie street. It is something that a private citizen would not dare to do, yet a municipal corporation that enacts protective legislation, is the main offender. Citizens who spent a part of their time on the river object to the continuance of the above mentioned nuisance. It is bad enough to leave the refuse in question on the market square for several hours each day, but it is a great deal worse to dump it on the river bank where it becomes a menace to patrons of the river front.

Stole Silver From Till, Returned For Coppers, Was Caught

Henri Frichette, behind the bars at the police station this afternoon ,afforded an example of the old proverb about the pitcher and its trips to the well, with this variation, that Henri only went twice. His first trip was about the noon hour to-day to Mr. Bert Heard's grocery store. He wore "sneaks" or rubber-soled boots, and from the police report, entered the store while the proprietor was at lunch. He must have entered stealthily and worked at the till without making any noise. He took $6.10 in silver, but left the coppers. Shortly afterwards Mr. Heard noticed the emptiness of the silver section of his register, but neither he nor Mrs. Heard had the least idea how it had disappeared.

Later, Henri came back for the coppers. Again the front store was empty, but while he was taking up the collection of ninety-seven cents, the money betrayed him by a slight sound that reached Mr. Heard. He rushed into the shop, just as Frichette was leaving it and chased him down to the Dalhousie street corner, where Frichette was overtaken and stripped of the money.

It was a warm job that recovery, and the grocer was satisfied to get his money back. However, in the meantime, Mrs. Heard had telephoned the police station, and P. C. Pratt responded, only to learn that Frichette had been liberated. He got a description of the man and within a short time had rounded him up at the C.P.R. station.

Frichette is a whippy youth who came from Trenton to work with the Leonard Construction Company, but apparently he prefers lighter operations than labouring. It is believed he is responsible for the disappearance of articles from the labourers' residence across the river.

After an hour's rest in the cool, darkened chamber at the police station, Henri wanted to know what jail he would be sent to, evidently being satisfied to remain where he was until the warm wave rolled by.

Fuel Controller Holds Conference

Special to the Examiner:

'BEND THE TWIG' IN GERMANY.

Court Holds That State May Control the Politics of Minors.

As the peace agitation carried on in Germany by members of both factions of the organized Socialists continues to grow in volume and intensity, reports found in copies of German newspapers reaching London and New York tell of a revival of the old prewar persecution of Socialist agitators by the authorities, especially in the case of minors.

According to the Berliner Tageblatt, a young workingman of Eberfeld recently established a sort of debating society which combined amusement and politics. He was first fined for forming a society without military approval He was then sentenced to ten days' imprisonment for participation in a food demonstration. He was not actually sent to prison, but on the ground of the two convictions proceedings were brought to put him under reformatory control. These proceedings were at first successful, but the decision was reversed on appeal. The Chief Burgomaster of Barmen then took the case to a higher court which not only decided against the young man, but set up the principle that "the State has a right to exert compulsion in regard to the political views of its subjects who are under age." It was laid down in the judgment of the court that the State must see that minors were influenced in a nation sense," and that the fact a minor was inimically disposed toward the State, or even indifferent, was sufficient evidence that he was in 'moral' danger."

In the meantime the war continues to cut deeply into the ranks of the Social Democratic Party. In the Second Hamburg District, where the party membership was 99,355 when the war began, it was only 4,359 on April 1, 1917, and of its 24,882 men and members of (Aug. 1, 1914, 21,704 had been called to the colours.

COST $1.50 A PASSENGER SO HORSE CAR LINE QUITS

NEW YORK.—The last trip of the last horse car driven by the last horse car driver and conducted by the last horse car conductor was made in New York last week. The trip was made on the Bleeker street line, which with the passing of the last car also passed out of commission.

The line has done practically no business for more than two years and was run at a cost of about $4,000 a year, while the receipts from fares for the fiscal year of was $178.80 and those for the fiscal year 1917 were $103.60. So few passengers rode on the line that it cost the company, which was a subsidiary of the New York Railway's Company an average of $1.50 for every person carried.

On July 17 last the total receipts for the entire day has been made for a long time, and that was merely to keep the charter. The company decided that was not worth keeping. Hence the last trip of yesterday.

FIRE LIGHTED IN STOVE.

The care used in the final trip was a veteran of the civil war days. It was one of those dinky little cars that used to have straw scattered on the floor in the winter to keep the passengers' feet warm if the stove did no do its full duty. The straw was not there yesterday but the stove, with its pipe sticking out of the roof, was present, and just to show that it was still in working order Thomas O'Brien, the conductor, who has been employed as a horse car conductor for the company for forty years, lighted a fire in it on the return trip, to the sentimental joy of the elect company of passengers, but to their physical undoing.

The funny little old car carried a distinguished lot of paying passengers on its farewell appearance. Among them were Charles S. Hervey and Travis H. Whitney, Public Service Commissioners; William L. Ransom, counsel for the commission, and James B. Walker, its secretary; Geo. F Daggott and Arthur McKinney, assistant secretaries, and W. C. Whiston, electrical engineer of the Equipment Bureau of the commission. The New York Railways' Company was represented by Frank Hedley, vice-president and general manager; F. T. Wood, assistant to the vice president; George Keegan, general superintendent of transportation; H. M. Norris chief clerk; A. G. Peacock, assistant counsel; W. F. Finley, of the department of motive power, and T. A. Delaney, superintendent.

Thomas Mortimer, a driver for the company for two score years, handled the reins for a span of old gray horses, and when he cried "Giddap!" to them and they started off with a jingle of bells at Broadway and Bleecker street, a few minutes after twelve o'clock, the last trip had begun. O'Brien, the conductor, looking very solemn, collected fares from all the passengers and gave each one a transfer as a souvenir.

MOTION PICTURE MEN THERE

Motion picture men were on hand and took photographs of the passing of old New York as the car started on its never-to-be-repeated journey. The route was west in Bleecker street, Macdougal street to West Fourth street, to West Twelfth street, to Hudson street, to Fourteenth street and Ninth avenue. There the horses were taken out and moved around to the rear platform, and the return trip was begun.

On the return trip a loaded truck blocked the street in front of the car, but Mortimer was equal to the occasion. He pulled hard on the left rein, yelled at the old horses and they pulled the car off the track and around the obstructing truck. Then they pulled it onto the track again.

A new tariff of the New York Railways' Company, which goes into effect omits the Bleecker street line, with the consent of the Public Service Commission.

BALL PLAYERS NOT TO CLAIM EXEMPTION

Ban Johnson Says World's Series May Be Called Off.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The American League is ready to shorten its season and call of the world's series if the Government deems it necessary as a war measure, Ban Johnson declared here in an interview, in which he urged ball players not to claim exemption.

"The moment the Government says the word we will shorten our season, if necessary, and devote our energy to the great cause for which we are preparing to fight," said the American League president, just before starting for Chicago."

"Baseball not only is the national pastime, but also a big business enterprise, yet it must not be allowed to stand in the way of Uncle Sam's tremendous efforts to raise an army which will win the war.

"I sincerely hope that all ball players in both major league and in the minors who have been drafted will join the national army without attempting to claim exemption. I feel sure that the ball players are brave and patriotic. They have been royally treated by the public, and they are eager to do something for their country."

PRESS COMMENT ON THE AVIATION BILL

"Fleet of Battle Planes"

Providence Journal: "The war may be won in the air, and it is America's duty to meet the expectations of her allies in creating a vast fleet of battle planes and training the requisite number of airmen without delay."

"A New Military Science."

York (Pa.) Dispatch: "Within the last year a new military science has been developed. Presumably we are to benefit by this science and add it to our own inventive contributions. If we proceed wisely it is probable that our aeronautic project may be our most potent preparation to win the war."

"Long Step Forward."

Troy Record: "The actual passage of the bill however means that the government has taken a long step forward toward establishing its military service on a basis the efficiency of which must spell certain defeat for the Teuton Powers."

"Appeals to American Mind."

Philadelphia Press: "No project appeals more keenly to the American mind than this one. It should constitute our distinctive contribution to the war, and in all probabilities we can make it enormously effective. The launching of a powerful and numerous air fleet, structurally equal to the best that the enemy can make, manned by highly trained men, is calculated to attain the mastery of the air and with it speedier victory."

"Can be Done Quickly."

New York Times: "Much more can be done, with comparatively little delay. Presently we shall be training an army of airmen and building machines of approved types It is no longer doubtful that the United States will do its share to end the war through its air service. We have begun. What we begin we carry through."

SPEEDY FREIGHT HANDLING

Fine Work Being Accomplished Unloading Cargo Boats at London.

Some fine work was accomplished by the Port of London Authority the other week in the rapid discharge of cargoes, says Tit-Bits. Six thousand nine hundred and six tons in bags and bulk was discharged in the Millwall Dock in 36 1-2 working hours; a similar cargo of 4,890 tons was discharged in the same dock in twenty-four hours. In the Surrey Commercial Docks 7,177 tons was discharged in 35 3-4 hours. In the Royal Victoria Dock 8,545 tons in bulk was discharged in 34 1-2 hours, an average of 247 tons an hour, one day's working of eleven hours resulting in no less than 3,397 tons being unloaded.

SHRAPNEL IN BREAKING DOES NOT EXPLODE CASE

Reginald Trautschold, M.E., has this to say about shrapnel in Popular Mechanics Magazine:

The dictionary defines shrapnel as "a shell fired with bullets and having a bursting charge to explode it at any time in its flight." This definition while accurate, is somewhat misleading.

What a shrapnel does is clouded by even more general misunderstanding. Consulting the dictionary again, we note that the shrapnel carries a bursting charge to explode it, and the general belief is that this charge, carried in the powder pocket in the base of the casing, shatters the steel shell and scatters the charge of shrapnel bullets.

On firing a gun loaded with shrapnel, the cartridge case is left behind, just as is the shell when discharging an ordinary shotgun. The complete shrapnel, with its time fuse, etc., is projected at a high rate of velocity, revolving rapidly in its flight, and travels as a unit until such an instant as the flash from the fuse reaches the powder pocket. When ignition of the powder charge occurs, the diaphragm, separating the powder pocket from the section containing the shrapnel balls, is driven forward. This strips the fuse body from the end of the shell casing, while the forward travel of the casing is seriously retarded, if not arrested or reversed. On issuing from the casing, the diaphragm plows through the mass of shrapnel balls and scatters them in all directions, the resin which bound them together having been melted by the heat of the explosion and the friction created in driving the collection of shrapnel and partly melted resin from the shrapnel casing.

The blast of the gases formed by the explosion of the powder charge on issuing fro mthe open end of the on issuing from th eopen end of the ther and imparts to the balls a velocity which makes them very destructive within a radius of about sixty feet of where the shrapnel "break." Part of the gases generated through the powder pocket are apt to escape through the powder tube and this strips the fuse cap from its body, or, if the fuse body is stripped from the shell casing before this takes place, the fuse body is pulled from the end of the powder tube. After the break of a shrapnel, the head of the projectile continues in advance, with a certain accelerated speed, followed by the diaphragm, powder tube, etc. and the spread of scattering shrapnel. The casing, having lost much of its momentum, drops to the ground.

Should the force of the explosion within the powder pocket not be sufficient to strip the threaded connection between the fuse body and the shell casing, the steel shell would explode, but only in such a case To retain the effectiveness of the shrapnel, the fracture would be limited to a section near the mouth of the casing, where its walls are comparatively thin and the shrapnel would be scattered from the remainder of the casing as before. The shattering of the steel casing takes place only when a shrapnel fails to break properly. It is not what a shrapnel does ordinarily, but what it may do in the case of an emergency.

A shrapnel which breaks properly during flight simply scatters shrapnel balls, not fragments and pieces of jagged shell such as fly from an exploding high explosive shell. When a shrapnel, through failure of the time fuse to respond, does not explode until it comes in contact with the ground or some other firm object in its path, then, and only then, the steel shell is fractured and pieces scattered in all directions. Damage frequently described as caused by flying pieces of shrapnel casings, therefore, is more probably correctly to be ascribed to fragments of high-explosive shells.

Wheat Markets Continue Quiet

Cattle Markets.

Union Stock Yards — Receipts 85 cars, with 1608 cattle, 98 calves, 217 hogs, and 277 sheep and lambs.

There was a light run of cattle offering, drovers taking warning from last week's experience during the hot weather spell. With the smaller number of attle on hand, trade was a little more active than last week, and good to choice butcher cattle were about 25 cents higher than on last Thursday's market. Three loads of extra choice heavy steers topped the market at $12.20, bought at this figure for shipment to New York. More of the same class of cattle would find a good market.

Sheep, lambs and calves, are 25 cents to 50 cents higher.

A LOST TRADE SECRET.

(Lost Angeles Times).

It has frequently happened that valuable trade secrets have been lost beyond recovery. For instance, the best watch oil, it appears, cannot be obtained to-day, because the secret process of mixing it perished with the inventor. It is said that the last quart of this famous fluid was sold for $200, and that was 35 years ago. Since then every effort has been made to analyse the product in an attempt to reproduce the oil, but without success. The man who made it and who alone knew its composition died, and, it further appears, not even his name or the place of his burial is known. He never revealed to anyone the details of his process, and it was not until after his death that the real value of the oil was appreciated.

Free Mrs. Mooney On Slaying Charge After Long Charge

She Kisses Each Juror When "Not Guilty" Verdict is Announced

SUSTAINS ALIBI IN BOMB CONSPIRACY

Labour Men Interested in Trial Following Explosion Killing Ten Persons Watching Parade.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 27. —The jury which had been deliberating since Monday on the evidence in the case of Mrs. Rene Mooney, on trial since May 31 for complicity in the Preparedness Day parade bomb explosion last year, found her not guilty. Although seven other indictments for murder in the same case are pending against Mrs. Mooney, it is not likely that she will be tried again.

Upon hearing the verdict Mrs. Mooney ran into the jury box and kissed each of the twelve jurors and then hurried to the City Jail to see her husband, Thomas J. Mooney, Labour leader, who was found guilty in the bomb explosion case and who is awaiting the death penalty pending appeal.

Following the conviction of her husband the trial of Mrs. Mooney attracted nation-wide interest, and was a subject for so much agitation among Labour organizations that the International Workers' Defence League, which conducted the defence, appointed a "silent jury" of Labour men who attended the trial daily and heard all the evidence. Thirty-five minutes after the case went to the jury on Monday that "jury" acquitted Mrs. Mooney of the charge.

CONSPIRACY WAS ALLEGED.

The State contended that Mooney and his wife were involved in a conspiracy to overthrow the Government and substitute anarchy, a conspiracy of which Emma Goldman and Alexander Berman were the head. At that time Berkman was the publisher of an anarchistic periodical here called the Blast.

The bomb killed ten persons and wounded forty others, the prosecution offering testimony that it had been made by the Mooneys and others, placed in a suit case and left on the sidewalk in a dense crowd that was watching the preparedness parade on July 22, last year. One of the first acts of the police was to search the office of the Blast, and upon letters and papers found there the Mooneys, Warren K. Billings, Israel Weinberg and Edward D. Nolan were arrested.

Mooney and Billings have been tried. They were found guilty and Billings was sentenced to life imprisonment and Mooney to death. Both have appealed to the Supreme Court, Labour organizations throughout the country taking up their cases.

CONSPIRACY EVIDENCE EXCLUDED.

The State was prevented from introducing any evidence to show that the explosion was a part of a conspiracy of wide ramifications to overthrow the Government, Judge Emmet Seawell closely restricting the prosecution to evidence concerning the bomb explosion of July 22.

It was testified that Billings and three of the defendants prepared the bomb and placed it, in a suit case, on the sidewalk. One witness, who said he knew both Billings and Mooney, testified that he saw Billings carrying the case, accompanied by Mooney, and saw him leave the suit case on the sidewalk and hurry away through the crowd. A few seconds later the terrific explosion occurred.

The defence was an alibi. Mrs. Mooney, a young music teacher, and others, testified that she and her husband had been on the roof of the apartment house in which they lived, a mile from the scene of the explosion, and that they had been watching the parade from the roof when they heard the explosion. They also introduced testimony to show that the bomb, instead of being left in a suitcase on the sidewalk, had been thrown from a roof into a crowd. Several witnesses testified they saw something black descend from a roof into the crowd and then heard the explosion.

LETTERS THREATEN PARADE.

Of principal interest in the trial were letters and papers seised in the raid on The Blast's office. They included letters exchanged by Berkman and Mooney, extracts from The Blast and other documents which the prosecution contended showed that a conspiracy existed and that the bomb explosion was a culmination. The letters mentioned violent steps to be taken to prevent the success of the Preparedness Day Parade.

Berkman, who recently was convicted with Emma Goldman in the Federal Court in New York city of advising young men not to register for the selective draft, left San Francisco soon after the explosion and went to New York.

The conviction of Mooney was denounced in labour circles throughout the country and when Mrs. Mooney was called to trial the labour organizations, who financed her defence, appointed the twelve labour men to attend the trial each day, hear all the evidence and then give a verdict. Various labour leaders said that step was taken because they were certain that Mrs Mooney could not get a fair trial. The "silent jury" lost no time ...ding Mrs. Mooney innocent, and the verdict of the real jury to-day, acquitting the young woman, surprised the labour interests. Edwin McKenzie, counsel for Mrs. Mooney, said "the American jury system is vindicated."

"The bomb cases are at an end," declared Thomas O'Connor, another of Mrs. Mooney's counsel. "The next trial will be that of Oxman."

Frank C. Oxman an Oregon cattleman, is accused of attempted subornation of perjury in connection with Thomas Mooney's trial, in which he was the chief witness for the prosecution.

"I am surprised at the verdict," said District Attorney-General M. Fickers, who, with his assistant, Louis Ferrari, prosecuted Mrs. Mooney. "We expected the jury to disagree."

CANADIANS TAKE SUBURB OF LENS IN A RAID ON FRONT OF 1,800 YARDS.

LONDON, July 30.—Stewart Lyon, special correspondent for Canadian newspapers in France, cables to-day:

"By a minor operation last night the Canadian front was advanced in the region east of Reservoir Hill into Cite du Moulin, the only suburb lying between Reservoir Hill and Lens. The losses of Canadians were inconsiderable and the advance gives them possession of a stretch of difficult country extending about one thousand yards north and south, with a depth easterly from our former front of over 6,000 yards. The gain was made as a result of careful scouting. With an ample equipment of machine guns our men occupied the western part of Cite du Moulin and reconstructed enemy positions so that they will afford fairly good shelter. There has been as yet no serious counter attack on the sector of our line. Early this morning a large quantity of gas was projected into the enemy trenches between Hill 70 and Cite St. Laurens.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AN ISLAND STOREHOUSE

By M. QUAD
[Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.]

Two thousand miles due north of the island off Mauritius and almost between that and the Seychelles group is the lone island of Agalegas. It is an island about six miles in circumference, with its highest point about 100 feet above the sea. There were no inhabitants up to 1882, though traders and shell gatherers often called there for wood and water.

It was in the year 1881 that the captain of a trading schooner entered the port of St. Louis in the Mauritius to tell a wonderful story about this island of Agalegas. He had called there for wood and water and to make repairs, and while his crew was at work he explored the island. Amid the rocks he discovered a great cave, and from that cave he had taken and brought away two elephants' tusks, a box of silver bars and a jewel bandied sword. He was a cunning chap, this trader, and he had got the stuff aboard without his crew being the wiser and had said nothing about the cave. He did not report his find to any consul or other official at St. Louis, but after hanging about for awhile he decided to make a confidant of the firm of Dayne & Co. This was a French trading and exporting firm, and as I was in its employ I came to hear the story first hand.

The plunder Barcas had brought away was worth $10,000, but he assured us that this was a mere flea bite compared to what had been left behind. He had counted 250 tusks, which did not include all. He had counted 180 boxes of silver bars, worth over $1,000 per box, but there were others behind them. There were bales, boxes and barrels he had not attempted to open, and he believed the contents of the cave would run out $1,000,000 and ballast a trading brig. It was a very dignified and respectable firm, that of Dayne & Co., but it got down off its high horse pretty fast to make a bargain with Barcas to bring that treasure away and dodge customs officials and government authorities. What they offered to do after a consultation was to fit out a ship, bring the stuff off, convert it into cash and give him a quarter. It wasn't a liberal offer on their part, but Barcas closed at once, and the enterprise was turned over to me to engineer.

The firm had a trading brig called the Foam, and as soon as she arrived in port she was cleared of cargo and her crew discharged. I then began to pick up Madagascar sailors and soon had ten of them, with an English A. B. who had cut and run from a merchantman. Barcas was to act as captain, and I was to go along as supercargo. It was easy enough to deceive the Madagascarites, while the sailor was satisfied with an offer of double wages and $500 extra. We left Mauritius with the ostensible object of visiting the islands to the east to establish trading stations, but when we had made good our offing we headed for the north and the island of Agalegas. We were on our way to fill our craft with plunder from a storehouse filled hundreds of years before and worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the voyage was prosaic. None of us were excited over it until the last day, and then it was through fear that the cave might have been discovered by some other caller.

We ran into a bay and dropped anchor at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and before midday Barcas had visited the treasure house and reported all safe.

Our first move was to establish a camp on the highest spot of the island and divide our forces. I took charge of the land party and Barcas of the brig. My party removed the plunder from the cave and carried it halfway down to the beach, and his men carried it aboard and stowed it away. On a certain evening when we knocked off work I figured the value of the gems already taken out at $1,500,000, and there was yet a week's work to remove the rest. The day had been hot and stifling and the work harder than usual. The cook was half an hour late in rubbing his eyes open, and he had hardly reached his feet when his shout of surprise alarmed the rest of us. At some hour during the night and so quietly that not a man of us had been disturbed the waters had retreated in every direction from the shores of the island until there was only the bed of the sea to look at. Here and there a deep hole created a little lake, but one could have walked for six or eight miles without wetting his feet. As the waters retired our craft had gone too.

I had lived in the east too long to not know what was coming. We were as high as we could get and could only wait for the peril. It came as the sun rose. We heard a booming, roaring and crashing and next minute caught sight of a tidal wave sweeping in. That wave was seventy feet high, and as it rolled across the island from the north to south its foamy crest was only thirty feet below where we stood. There were three waves, each moving at a speed of 100 miles an hour, and then the sea settled down to its usual level and soon grew quiet. A thousand acres of forest had been swept away and the whole face of the island changed in a moment. Our spring and our camp had been left untouched, but there was no longer a cavern, no longer a bale of goods, no longer a brig laden with a king's ransom. An earthquake at sea, a mighty convulsion of nature 500 miles away, had robbed us of our prize, given us a storehouse and left us on an almost desolate rock in mid-ocean to wait for the passing craft that rescued us.

Persistence of Custom.

It is a present day custom for the members of the English parliament to bow three times before taking their seats. An American, mystified by this strange custom, inquired the reason for it. He was astonished to find the Englishmen could not tell him. No one seemed to know, not even the men who did the bowing, but after much research the mystery was cleared away. The buildings of parliament had once burned, and the members were quartered for a period in St. Stephen's chapel. Having the altar of the church before them, they made the customary bows to Father, Son and Holy Ghost. When they moved into their present abode they did not take the altar with them, but they kept on bowing nevertheless.—Case and Comment.

Profit by These.

Keep an eye on the job ahead, but keep the other eye and both hands on the job you have.

There is plenty of room at the top, because those who get there are the few who started early to avoid the rush.

The man who goes halfway to meet Fortune is more likely to find her than the man who waits for her to knock at his door.

The men who succeed best when they work for others are those who see that in doing so they are also working for themselves.

Plain of Damascus.

The fertile plain in which Damascus is situated is about thirty miles in diameter and is due to the river Baradn, which is probably the Abana of Scripture. Two other streams, the Wady Helbon on the north and the Awaj on the south, increase this fertility, and these two contend for the honor of representing the Pharphar, the other scriptural stream.

Flowers Without Petals.

Many showy flowers have no petals, but their places are taken by the sepals, as in the case of the lily and the tulip. Some flowers, so called, have neither that, are showy, but the bright colored parts are merely floral bracts. Bougainvilleas, poinsettias and dogwoods are examples, also the milk white spathe of the calla.

Inconsistent.

"Oh, George," exclaimed the young wife, "it was nearly midnight before you got home last night!"

"Well, well!" exclaimed the husband. "You women are so inconsistent! Before we were married you didn't care how late I got home."

The Worm Turned.

Her Dad—No, sir; I won't have my daughter tied for life to a stupid fool.
Her Suitor—Then don't you think you had better let me take her off your hands?

Her Dear Friend.

"Jack is blindly in love with you."
"How do you know?"
"He told me he didn't think you looked a day over twenty-nine."

The Anemone.

Anemone means "wind flower" and is so called because it is so delicately poised that it sways with the slightest motion of the air.

Take thought for the roots of life, and you will not need to worry about the flowers and fruit.

How the World May End.

Sometimes it has been suggested that the world will gradually become cold, so that life will be frozen out. M. Rabourdin, a French novelist, however, thinks it possible that the earth may end in an incandescent blaze.

The earth's crust, he says, is very thin at the bottom of the sea, and should it give way in consequence of volcanic action the earth might be consumed in flames.

"Suppose," he states, "that, following an extraordinary twisting movement, due to retreat of the central mass, a large mass of the sea bottom should give way, and, falling suddenly, should let in the mass of the ocean's waters upon the incandescent interior matter. The water would be decomposed by the heat, the hydrogen would burn, and it would burn more as it had access to more oxygen.

"The conflagration would then gain in force, accompanied by electric phenomena, and the greater part of the earth's crust would probably be displaced. The earth passing through a critical epoch and returning for the time being to its formative period would again be nothing but a globe of fire."

We Can Help You Stimulate Business

A little stimulation in Midsummer may put you back in the running again, and even yet, if you concentrate your efforts, use liberally the means that have made others prosper in your line of business you can succeed as they did.

Some Merchants Say:—

"As Soon as Business Picks Up I'll Advertise"

This is not consistent. The farmer does not wait until harvest time to sow his seed—and, remember this, that if you ever reach the point in business where you believe you can get along without advertising, somebody else will own your business. ¶ It isn't the age of a house that counts most. It's the efficient, up-to-date, daily publicity that brings its goods before the buyers that spells SUCCESS.

Cabbage Imperial.

Take a firm young head of cabbage, strip off the outer leaves, cut the head in a bowl, and pour over it boiling water, so that the inner leaves will open without breaking. Take out the crown of leaves at the heart and stuff the space with a mixture of cooked veal chopped fine, to which is added finely minced salt pork, mashed potatoes, 1 teaspoon grated onion, 1 raw egg to bind it, 1 small spoon salt, pepper and a pinch of thyme. Fill the cabbage at the heart, then fold the leaves over; tie in shape and place in a cheese-cloth bag (which should be tightly tied about it). Boil for one hour. Remove the boiling cloth and set the cabbage in a shallow dish. Pour about it a white sauce. A delicious luncheon dish served with hot toasted crackers, dusted with cheese and paprika.

Eggless Boiled Salad Dressing.

Take 3-4 teaspoon mustard, 1 teaspoon salt, 1-8 teaspoon pepper, 3 tablespoons vinegar, 1-4 teaspoon celery salt, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 cup cream. Mix the dry ingredients and add cream. When smooth turn in boiling vinegar and cook till smooth and creamy. If inconvenient to use cream, 3-4 cup of milk and 1-4 cup of butter may be used instead.

SILENCED.

Passing through one of the by-streets of Edinburgh one day a clergyman saw a particularly rough-looking coalman of gigantic stature "persuading" his horse, which had taken a stubborn fit, to move along more rapidly. The terms in which his language was couched simply appalled the clergyman, and though he was a very little man he rebuked the coal man in a very bold manner, ending up by saying: "I cannot understand what you mean by using such harrowing expressions." The rebuke, however, was utterly lost upon the coalman. Patting the clergyman on the shoulder with a very dirty hand he replied: "My wee mon neither could I understand it—when I was your size." The clergyman made no rejoinder.

WAR AND THE FAMILY

War Recipes Reflect Household Economy

ALMOST every one has a treasured recipe of peculiar merit. Sometimes it is one where excellence is obtained at a small outlay. Such recipes are being sought to-day by housekeepers everywhere and some of the readers of this paper have offered to share their tested and true formulas with their housekeeping sisters.

The first instalment is given to-day of what may be termed war recipes, because they will be helpful to those who seek to practise true economy, providing nutritious and appetizing food at small cost, to save money for their own maintenance and for the helping of those who are in sore straits directly or indirectly due to the war.

A man sends in his mother's recipe with the following letter:—

"Of the many recipes that have been brought to my mother's attention she claims that none of them compares with the enclosed. As she has been making corn bread according to it for many years she ought to know, and as I have been eating it almost since I was born, which is going back some, I know exactly how good it is, either with butter or gravy or all by itself, either hot or cold; in fact, cut as she recommends, it is a 'square meal' all by itself.

"Corn bread is not the only thing she can make out of corn. She can make corn muffins, Johnny cake, hoe cake, Indian meal puddings, both baked and boiled; corn pudding, which is not, as its name suggests, a dessert, but a vegetable dish, and numerous others—in fact, she is "some cook."

OLD FASHIONED CORN BREAD.

Three cups of cornmeal, one-half cup of flour, one level tablespoon of sugar, one level teaspoon of salt, two heaping teaspoons baking powder, one-half cup of shortening (lard or dripping). Mix all ingredients together with either milk or water, making a thick batter; pour into well greased pan, which should be very hot, bake in quick oven about thirty minutes, until dark golden brown.

When done cut in squares, split and serve with butter.

If real buttermilk is procurable, use instead of baking powder one teaspoon of baking soda to a pint of buttermilk.

This can also be baked on top of stove, either gas or coal, using an ordinary griddle, without a cover.

This corn bread is delicious, very healthy (especially good for dyspeptics) and very nourishing.

Approximate entire cost nine cents.

Sufficient for four or five people at one meal.

Since writing the foregoing, I have picked up a copy of a newspaper devoted to the uplift and welfare of the working man. On its front page it is shouting about the necessity of conserving our food supply and how to combat the high cost of living.

Then they publish a lot of so-called economical recipes on another page. For whose amusement? It can't be for any benefit to any one, because if you will analyze them you will be unable to find one that is practical, cheap or suggests anything that would be of use to a housewife.

Just imagine a husky mechanic, for instance, coming home to his evening meal and getting a "lay-out" modelled on such recipes. I can see him bouncing the meathoof off his wife's "bean."

Recipes like these are not what the people want, especially under the serious conditions that now prevail, or at any time, as they only encourage waste.

Why not teach the persons how to use the many valuable things that the average housewife has been in the habit of throwing away, such as the tops of beets, scallions, the green parts of cauliflower, cabbage, celery, &c., the waters in which vegetables and meats (corned beef and ham) have been boiled? Also how to use the cereals other than wheat. Many excellent dishes can be made from rice, rye, corn in its many forms (hominy, samp and cornmeal). You can make other things out of oatmeal besides porridge. There are numberless cooking recipes, good old U. S. A. ones and foreign ones, which if given to the public in an intelligent manner would prove a real benefit.

I am not connected with the hotel business or food trade in any way, but it is the duty of the press to educate the people. They never needed education so badly as they do now; neither were they ever in so receptive a mood as the present.

G. K. B.

Bluefish:—Fish is cheap and nourishing, and as this is the bluefish season a most delicious way of baking one is as follows: Wash, salt and pepper the fish and stuff with a dressing made from dry bread, onions and thyme. Place the fish on a greased plate and put in a dripping pan. Fill pan with boiling water until the plate is half covered. Steam for a half hour, or until easily pierced by a fork. Cooked in this way there is no waste, for the fish slips from the plate perfectly whole. Garnish with sliced lemon and serve with parsley sauce.

AUGUSTA DANIELS.

Steamed Bread Pudding:—2 cups rolled stale bread, ½ cup molasses, ½ cup sour milk, ½ cup raisins and currants, 2 iron spoons flour, 2 iron spoons chopped suet, 1-3 teaspoon soda, dissolved in spoon hot water; ginnamon, cloves and lemon peel to taste; steam 1½ hours.

Hard Sauce:—2 tablespoons butter, 1 cup granulated sugar, 1 tablespoon cream; beat when creamed; flavor with almond or vanilla, nutmeg and a little brandy, if desired.

Baked Eggs with Cheese:—Butter a baking dish of a size necessary for number of eggs desired, break eggs into dish, add salt and pepper to taste, 1 tablespoon cream, 2 table spoons grated cheese. Place dish in pan of hot water in over for five minutes, until eggs are set.

Quick Muffins:—1 cup white cream cornmeal, 1 cup bran or graham flour, 2 cups white flour, 2 teaspoonfuls baking powder, ½ teaspoonful salt, 2 teaspoonfuls sugar or molasses, 2 teaspoonfuls oil or lard (melted), 1 egg. Milk or milk and water sufficient to drop from spoon. Put in greased muffin pans; bake about fifteen minutes.

M. B. WESTERMAN.

Boston Roast:—3 cups cooked kidney beans, ½ pound grated cheese, bread crumbs, salt. Mash beans or put through meat chopper. Add the cheese and sufficient bread crumbs to make the mixture stiff enough to form into a roll. Bake in a moderate oven, basting occasionally with fat and water. Serve with tomato sauce.

Escalloped Rice or Hominy with Nuts:—2 cups cooked rice or hominy, 2 cups white sauce, 1 cup chopped nuts, bread crumbs, salt. Mix nuts with rice or hominy, add salt to taste. Prepare white sauce and pour over mixture. Turn into a greased baking dish. Cover with bread crumbs and bake in hot oven until brown.

Nut and Cheese Roast:—1 cup grated cheese, 1 cup chopped nuts, 1 cup bread crumbs, 2 tablespoonfuls chopped onion, 1 tablespoonful butter, juice ½ lemon, salt and pepper. Cook the onion in the butter and a little water until tender. Mix the other ingredients and moisten with water, using the water in which onion has been cooked. Pour into a shallow baking dish and brown in oven.

Lima Beans with Tomato Sauce:—2 cups lima beans, 2 cups tomato sauce, seasoning, bread crumbs. If dried limas are used soak over night in cold water; drain; cover beans with cold water and cook slowly until soft; add salt when half done; drain beans; prepare tomato sauce; pour over beans, place in a baking dish and cover with crumbs; bake in a hot oven until brown.

Nut Loaf:—Mix together 1 cup ground peanuts and 1 cup of any desired nuts, 1 teaspoonful salt, ¼ teaspoonful pepper, 2½ cups fine bread crumbs. When well blended add 2 beaten eggs and mould into a loaf. Place in a well greased roasting tin and cook in a moderate oven ten minutes. Then pour over loaf 1 cup hot water in which 1 tablespoonful fat has been stirred and bake half an hour, basting as in meat. Make gravy from the drippings.

BEATRICE GARDNER.

Delicious Gingerbread with Sour Milk:—½ cup of Crisco or butter, ½ cup of brown sugar, 1 egg; beat well together; ½ cup molasses, ½ cup of sour milk in which is dissolved 1 teaspoonful of soda; 1 teaspoonful of salt, 1 teaspoonful of ground ginger, 2 cups flour; bake in a moderate oven.

Graham Muffins:—1 tablespoonful of melted butter, ½ cup of sugar, 1 egg; beat well together; 1½ cups milk, 1 cup graham flour, 1 cup wheat flour, 2 teaspoonfuls baking powder, ½ teaspoonful salt. (The above will make one dozen muffins.)

Steamed Berry Pudding with Hard Sauce (very inexpensive and "can't be beat"):—1 tablespoonful butter (or other shortening), ¼ cup sugar, yolk of 1 egg, ½ cup milk, 1 cup flour, 1 teaspoonful baking powder, ½ teaspoonful salt, ½ cup of berries (any kind) rolled in flour. Put in a well greased melon mould and cook in boiling water steadily for two hours.

Hard Sauce:—The white of 1 egg, small tablespoonful of butter, 1 cup or more of powdered sugar. Beat to a cream and flavor to taste. Grate a little nutmeg over the top.

CORA E. DUNN.

LET THE CHILDREN HAVE PART IN THE FOOD CAMPAIGN.

CHILDREN are patriotic. They love to give evidence of their loyalty and enthusiasm. It can easily be impressed upon them that they can perform services which will help their country as truly as if they were able to shoulder guns and face the enemy at the front.

"The soldiers and their families must be fed," they can be told, "and you must do your part in getting enough food for them." Children who live in the country will gladly help with the poultry and other live stock on the place. In the first place they will speedily make pets of them and the next place they will tend them with the greater enthusiasm because of the added impulse of doing their part in the war.

Tell them that if they will take good care of the chickens, if they will feed the cows and pigs, if they will plant and weed in the garden, and if they will help to put up fruits and vegetables, some soldier will have more strength to fight and help win their war.

While the meat question is so important it has not been emphasized quite as much as the gardening necessity. Children all over the land have taken to gardening with wonderful avidity and praise should be meted out to them generously for their part in the food campaign.

Do not let their interest flag. Tell them that although they have done well to spade and rake and plant and cultivate, they must do more to insure plenty of good food for the people at home and for the hungry abroad. Let them gather the vegetables which they have grown and help with the others and pick berries and other fruits. Then initiate them into the processes of preserving them for the winter. Make it a personal matter. A boy or girl will feel great pride in containers of dried foods or jars of canned ones which bear his or her name and the date of putting up.

No child is too young to bear his share in the economy which all of us are having to practice for patriotic reasons, as well as for some others, this year. Nickels and dimes should be judiciously diverted from ice cream sodas and candy to a fund for some little boy or girl in France or Belgium. If a child is studying French he may even try a letter to the little friend he is trying to help.

Girls will like to imitate their mothers and knit for the soldiers or sailors. They will soon be more expert than their parents, for young children learn the art easily and quickly.

Conserving Fruits and Vegetables

LEST any one be affrighted by the sound of dehydration as applied to the preservation of foods, it should be remembered that it is only the modern way of speaking of what past generations referred to as drying. And the process need not necessarily require elaborate machinery. Every one employs some kind of heat in the preparation of the daily food. This can be utilized in drying fruits or vegetables for winter use.

We are now enjoying the results of the unusual garden industry of this year. Vegetables are abundant. Some have them from their own gardens and others can purchase them at small expense. None of the surplus should be wasted. This cannot be said too often nor laid too much to heart. At the present cost of glass jars and tin cans the housekeeper of small means cannot consider putting all of it up in that way. Moreover, those who live in small city apartments, even if they can afford it, have no room in which to store quantities of canned goods, and the temperature is not favorable to keeping them.

There remains the somewhat tedious, but economical and simple process of drying. New machines have been devised to meet the demand. Some are good and some are not quite so good, but any of them answer the purpose. Or you may use two pans, one of which will fit in the other and set them on a gas stove or coal range. The heat should be moderate and uniformly distributed. For that purpose water is placed in the lower pan. Care must be taken, however, that steam does not escape and retard the drying of the food. If placed on a gas stove the dryer or the gas should be turned as low as possible during the process of drying. If on a coal range the fire should be kept low.

The cheapest commercial dehydrator costs a little less than $6 and is used in the same way. A piece of cheese cloth should be placed over the metal. Foods will take from two to eight hours to dry properly according to their characteristics and their method of preparation. Root stocks such as beets, carrots and potatoes take the longest time. Spinach, string beans and apples dry quickly. It is well to shred the string beans to facilitate their drying. Vegetables that are to be sliced should be made thin.

If the foods are steamed for from three to eight minutes before putting in the dryer they will retain their color and will cook more quickly in the winter when one is ready to use them. After they are steamed they should be well drained before being placed on the dryer.

If you do not want to use artificial heat and have an electric fan it may be made to do service by turning the draught on several trays containing the foods to be dried. This method will take three or four times as long, however, as the heat.

Save the paper bags that come from the grocery. They will be useful for holding the dried products, although the commercial paper containers look a little nicer. It is all a question of whether it is worth the money to you.

A Good Substitute.

WHILE the shortage of tin and glass and their consequent high cost has caused a movement to be started in favor of paper or fibre containers it must be remembered that fibre cannot be used in canning operations which require the sterilizing of vegetables or fruits in hot water or steam. For this purpose glass or tin is essential. Paper containers are suggested by the United States Department of Commerce for storing jellies and such preserves as are cooked before packing, as in the open kettle method, although the user should be satisfied that the container is of a type that will properly preserve the contents. Experiments made without investigation may prove costly.

Manufacturers are being urged to minimize the use of glass as far as it is possible to substitute paper or fibre containers. Housekeepers may help in this economy, but they must not do it at the risk of having their home canned products spoiled by inadequate protection.

Raising Rents in Big Cities

IN the cities rents have been increasingly higher. Many will have to pay more next autumn or move. It makes a difficult problem for the family of limited means.

In the first place it is hard to find a house as good as the one occupied at a lower rental. Even if one that will do is found, it is expensive to move. If the raise in rental is small it may be cheaper to stay where one is. The pros and cons must be carefully balanced and then one must act accordingly.

One thing is being impressed upon the writer, who is one of those who have to move October 1 or pay $7.50 a month more than the high price already being paid to the landlord. One does not need so many rooms as one is accustomed to think. The average family does not need a living room and a dining room. There is no reason why meals should not be served in the living room.

Where one does light housekeeping and takes a part of the meals out a separate kitchen is not necessary. A small gas stove and the other equipment for cooking may easily be screened off. On the other hand, if one wants home cooking, which one should have if there are children in the family, a well lighted, well equipped kitchen is one of the most essential rooms in the house. If you have a good kitchen and have time to give to food preparation you can turn out meals that are twice as wholesome at half the price of those which are eaten in the average restaurant.

The main requirement of a bedroom is good air. The less furniture there is in it the better. It is better to have a cot in a living room where there is plenty of air available than to have the luxury of a bedroom where it is lacking.

Health, comfort, convenience, beauty—these are the essentials of a home. Comfort includes health promoting characteristics. Convenience consists not in the multiplicity of utensils, but in a few chosen especially for their adaptability. Beauty depends chiefly upon proportions, simplicity and color relations. Our small rooms have become too much "fussed up" for beauty, convenience or comfort. The present necessity for economy may be not without value if it prevents our adding more to the already too much of our homes.

Braided Rugs.

BRAIDED rugs are splendid for country houses, and they are not out of place in the city apartment or studio. They are extremely easy to make, and all sorts of old materials may be utilized in making them.

Left-overs from dresses and other garments and inexpensive remnants may be combined. It is best to use woollen pieces by themselves and cotton by themselves. A little silk may be combined with the wool, but it should be cut in thicker strips. In general the cotton strips also should be broader than the wool.

The strips should be braided evenly, one color by itself or bit a mixture, as desired, and when enough have been braided they can be sewed in round or oval form to make a mat of the desired size. These rugs are not only effective in appearance but they are durable.

Wayside Vegetable Booth

ONE of the methods of getting fresh vegetables and fruits directly from producer to consumer is that which has been adopted to some extent during the last few summers and may well be extended in this year of unusual conditions.

Persons automobiling through the country have found by the wayside small boys and girls, and sometimes adults, offering corn freshly picked from the stalks, ripe tomatoes and freshly picked berries from an improvised stand. This method of marketing is a return to simple conditions. It benefits those who sell, who are saved the labor of packing and transportation, and those who buy, who get their products fresh and at a moderate price.

Not all of those who have planted generously this summer are going to be able to sell their crops through the regular channels. Large parts of them can be kept for winter use, but there will, in many cases, still be a surplus. To dispose of this will tax the ingenuity of the amateur farmer and gardener. One of the best methods is by private sale, either at an improvised booth by the roadside or to some accessible person who has not raised the things desired to be sold for himself.

Every one wants things fresh and cheap. Every one should be willing to sell his surplus for a reasonable price.

Fireless Cookers.

MANY persons think of the fireless cooker either as something difficult of mechanism or as a fad, and in either case not worth while. Now, anything that will help to dispense with fuel, which is getting more and more costly, for even a part of the time, is worth considering.

The fireless cooker will do this, and in its simpler forms almost any one can manufacture one. It is merely the application of a well known principle of physics. Heat may be maintained by the use of non-conductors.

Aside from the saving of fuel, the ability to prepare one's meal ahead of time and save the heat and soil of cooking with a fire is worth much to a woman who likes to look neat and well dressed, even if she does prepare her own meals.

A strong wooden box, a part of a barrel or a good sized pail may be the foundation for the fireless cooker. This should be lined with asbestos or heavy paper. An inner vessel of some kind also should be protected on the outside with asbestos, and there should be three inches space between the two. In this may be placed shredded newspapers, straw or excelsior. A pad or cushion should be made to fit the top, so as to keep out the air. A hot soapstone or brick is put in the bottom of the inner vessel before the one containing the food to be cooked is put in.

The object, of course, is to keep in the heat and to keep out the air; so the cushion must fit tightly and there should be a cover over it.

It should be understood that the fireless cooker merely maintains the heat; so that the food to be cooked should have been started and brought to the boiling point or its equivalent before being put in the cooker. If properly constructed it will keep hot a long time, and will turn out a well cooked meal, which never runs the danger of burning, and therefore does not have to be watched.

Baby Eczema

Develops From Neglected Chafing and Skin Irritation.

IF every mother could realize the danger which lurks in the neglect of chafing and skin irritation she would not take chances on being without Dr. Chase's Ointment to apply after the bath.

This ointment is so clean and pure, and so delightfully soothing and healing, that it affords prompt relief to the little one's discomfort. It arrests the development of eczema, and makes a complete cure. Unlike pore-clogging powders, it promotes healthful action of the pores of the skin, and therefore leaves the skin in perfect condition.

MODEST AIR HERO GIVES BATTLE EPIC

Fought Ten German Planes Single-Handed and Won Two Crosses—Only 28 Years Old

Without the expert co-operation of the war correspondent, poet, or novelist, it is extremely hard to make the bravest and most desperate of deeds seem nearly as heroic as it really is. Take the case of Major L. W. B. Rees of the British Royal Flying Service, only 28 years old, yet he is one of the few men who has the great distinction of wearing the Victoria Cross and the Military Cross. It was Major Rees who, single-handed and alone, performed what experts call "the best bit of air fighting" of the war. While nearly five thousand feet in the air he was attacked by no less than ten German airplanes, and emerged a victor from the unequal contest.

"I was on scout duty some five thousand feet up," said Major Rees, "when I discovered that I was surrounded by ten German airplanes. They were flying in formation, one above the other. I had to make a dash for the lowest one. He began to circle about me and opened up fire at an angle. A hit under such circumstances is most difficult, so I concluded that the aviator was inexperienced in the art of fighting in the air. So I held my own fire and manoeuvred till his plane was in a position where I could get a straight ahead shot. I opened up with my machine gun and somehow dropped German No. 1.

Another "Lucky Hit"

"When I started at the next machine, which was flying out of formation and apparently without much of an aviator in it, the fellow began to fire red rockets—the signal for 'attacked in force.' This signal brought two other planes swooping down. They passed between me and the red rocket chap just as I registered a lucky hit.

"After German No. 2 was sent down, the two that came to its rescue kept moving till they were over the German lines. Then I noticed that five of the enemy planes were heading my way. I had to reload my machine gun, and when I got it going again they had scattered. Perhaps they had taken that signal, 'attacked in force,' literally. At any rate, they cleared out.

Last Two Fled

"That left three others. They were still flying west over the British lines and I followed along behind them. I headed off the leader, fired straight at him, and hit. Then the last two machines turned and fled back over the German lines.

"It was lucky for me they did. I had been wounded in the left knee, and as that was the leg I steered my machine by it made things a bit bothersome."

And that is all Major Rees, V.C., M.C., Royal British Flying Corps, is able to picture of the fight. But even that is more than Major Rees would ever have told about it if some one had not tattled.

BRITISH ARTILLERY ASTONISHED THE HUNS

Efficiency Due to the Training of Skilled Engineers and Surveyors in Art of Gunnery

Only a short time ago the German papers were loudly proclaiming that none but German troops had the training and experience to pass the test of open warfare. In particular, it was held, and apparently believed, that the British artillery would be unequal to the task of a war of movement. For in such a case the difficulty is not only that of moving the guns up, but during an advance the gunner is equally handicapped by the fact that he is constantly arriving at new and unsurveyed positions, and firing upon targets that are neither registered nor even clearly located.

In the great attack upon Vimy Ridge nothing was more disconcerting to the Germans than the rapidity with which the artillery was brought up and used against them in their confused retreat. It was not only field artillery that advanced speedily. Six-inch and eight-inch howitzers were moved over difficult ground under trying circumstances and were fired with effect upon the new positions to which the Germans were retreating. Not only that—in addition heavy guns which had been captured by the British were in an incredibly short time turned upon the enemy and added not a little to his discomfiture.

Many Miscalculations

How, then, has it happened that the Germans have been so far out in their calculations about this arm, as so many other arms, of the British service? A similar miscalculation has happened again and again. They did not believe at first that it would be possible for the British to raise in a short time an army of European dimensions. When they learned that the army was actually raised they did not believe that it would be possible to arm and equip it. But the immense industrial resources of Great Britain were adapted for the purpose.

But even when the men and the material were there Germany was still unwilling to believe that the infantry could be trained or that artillerymen could acquire the highly technical science and art of gunnery.

But here again she miscalculated. Just as England was full of factories which in a short time were converted into workshops making munitions, so also she was rich in men skilled in engineering, in land surveying, in the use of scientific instruments. Many of them were experienced in adapting their talents to diverse purposes in many parts of the world. If such men could be drawn into the service of the artillery they would have little trouble in mastering the relatively simple problems of practical gunnery.

The Right Sort

And as a matter of fact they were drawn in. The War Office was fortunate in enlisting the services of hundreds of professional men peculiarly qualified to grasp the technique of gunnery. These men were passed through cadet schools and at training centres were taught to handle men and guns, and after a short experience under war conditions proved themselves accomplished and versatile artillerymen. The shooting under their direction is certainly not inferior to that of the Germans, and they possess just those qualities which enable them to adapt themselves to the conditions of open warfare.

SIXTEEN DAYS ADRIFT

Eighteen Out of Twenty Die Victims to the Pirates

Here are two cases briefly recounted from authenticated statements made by survivors which illustrate again the utter brutality of German methods: The British steamer Kariba was sunk without warning 230 miles from the nearest land by an enemy submarine. Ten of the crew were eventually picked up and taken to hospital, having been twelve days in an open boat, during seven of which they were without food. Two of these survivors have since died. Of another boat containing twenty-one of the crew no tidings have been received.

The British steamer Calthness was also torpedoed without warning 240 miles from the nearest land on April 19. The ship sank in a few minutes and all on board were flung into the water. The master and twenty-nine of the crew were drowned. Of twenty who escaped in a boat and drifted without food for 16 days only two were left alive, and were eventually picked up, one survivor—the chief officer—having lost a foot in addition to other serious injuries.

BOER WITH BRITISH

Applied to Gen. White Who "Quizzed" Him at Ladysmith

Wounded while fighting in the Boer army against the British, Henry Craemer enlisted in the British army. He asked for General W. A. White, in charge of British recruiting, and refreshed the general's memory regarding Ladysmith, and the officer's subsequent interrogation of Boer prisoners. "I was one of them," Craemer said. "I don't hate the English any more, and I want to fight against the Germans." Craemer was accepted for the cavalry, although 44 years old.

KEEP FREIGHT MOVING

In order to facilitate train movements and release passenger train crews for other work, the railways of the United States are making drastic reductions compared to which those in Canada early this year appear mild. Thus, for instance, the Pennsylvania Railroad merely on its lines east of Pittsburg has eliminated no less than 102 trains, or more than double the number taken off the whole of the Canadian railways. This will cut down the passenger movement by an amount equivalent to 2,268,000 train miles per annum or over 6,500 train miles every week day. A number of parlor cars, restaurant cars and observation cars are being discontinued. The Boston and Maine has taken off no less than 255 trains, or more than five times the number taken off in Canada, saving approximately 41,000 train miles per week. Strenuous efforts are also being made to increase the carload and to impress on merchants the importance of rapid unloading so that the freight equipment shall be kept busy to its utmost capacity, and terminals should be kept clear.

Loved His Officers

Sergt. R. E. Ault of Victoria, enlisted with the 62nd and was later transferred to the 29th. Returning home he spoke feelingly of several of the late officers of "Tobin's Tigers," and told of the great esteem held for Major Graham of Vancouver and Capt. Gwynn. The latter, he said, was the idol of the company.

SUFFERED TERRIBLY

For Four Days and Nights From

DIARRHOEA

Diarrhoea arises from many causes such as change of diet change of water change of climate, catching cold, the eating of unripe fruits or anything that will cause an excess of bile.

On the first sign of any looseness of the bowels it should not be neglected, but should be looked after immediately, for if not diarrhoea, dysentery or some other serious bowel complaint may ensue.

Miss Florence Harfield, 325 Lauder Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I was troubled with a violent attack of diarrhoea. I suffered terribly with it for four days and nights, and finally, I became so weak I did not think I could stand it any longer. My sister advised me to try a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I did so, and after I had taken three doses I felt a whole lot relieved. I kept on taking it, and by the time I had taken six doses, the diarrhoea had completely stopped. I think it a wonderful remedy, as it is so quick to act. I will recommend it to all my friends."

There are so many spurious "Strawberry" preparations sold that you should see that the name "Dr. Fowler's" is on every bottle you buy. Price 35c. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ROYAL VISIT TO BARROW

King Spotted Victoria Cross and Commended Football as Sport

During the course of a recent visit to Furness Abbey the King and the Queen chatted gaily with several war workers, but longest with Mr. S. Wassan, a shipyard laborer, whose Victoria Cross attracted the King's attention. Wassan, when a private in the Staffordshire Regiment, won his V.C. in 1879 by saving the life of a trooper in a flooded river in front of 3,000 Zulus.

To Mr. W. Dickinson, chairman of the Barrow Football Club, the King also spoke. "I like the game," said Mr. Dickinson, "because it develops manliness." "Undoubtedly," replied the King. "I have the very highest opinion of the footballer soldier."

Their Majesties drove to the great Vickers' shipyards at Barrow, where 35,000 people are employed. The Queen was greeted in the shell department by the women workers with the singing of "God Save the Queen." She was also presented with a bouquet of red roses, the emblem of Lancashire. At one point there were 10,000 children on a stand, and the Queen remarked that Barrow was a wonderful place for children.

MAKING THE KHAKI FROM SHEEP TO MAN

Many Processes Necessary Before the Wool is Ready for the Wearer

Since the beginning of the war khaki has been turned out of the looms, not by the thousands, but by the millions of yards. Here is a brief description of how khaki cloth is actually made: When the wool leaves the sheep's back it is sent to the nearest market, and from there thousands of tons find their way to spinning mills. When the wool enters the factories in huge bales, it is at once sorted by men, who divide it into as many qualities as may be required.

Straight from the hands of the sorters the wool goes into the washhouse, where it is placed in big iron bowls filled with soap and water. It is thoroughly scoured by this process and cleansed from all dirt and impurities. At the end of the washing-machine it passes through some rollers in which are placed sharp steel teeth, which tear the wool into small pieces, and it emerges white and fleecy-looking.

Carded into Ribbon

It is then bundled into big wicker "skeps" or baskets on wheels, and taken into the carding-room. A "card" in worsted factories is a machine which again tears the wool into minute pieces, and also eradicates all bits of straw and "burrs" which are invariably found in every fleece. The wool passes through the "card," and instead of coming out in fragments, as one would naturally expect, the wool appears in the form of a "sliver" or ribbon, which, by a clever mechanical invention, winds the soft, limy "sliver" of wool into a large ball.

From the carding room these balls are sent to the combing room. Several balls of wool are put into one comb, and the wool is then combed out into regular lengths according to the fibre. During the combing process all short hairs are eliminated, and these are known in the wool trade as "noil."

Browns Make Khaki

When the wool is combed it is known as "tops," and it is the "tops" or balls of wool which are taken to the dyehouses, and colored the different shades of brown whoch go to make the khaki cloth now so familiar. After dyeing the "tops" have to be recombed, and then they are ready for the drawing process, during which the first "twist" which converts it from wool into worsted is put into it.

After leaving the drawing room the wool now wound on to "rovings," or big reels, is ready for the spinning room. When the wool is eventually spun on to bobbins it is called "weft," and is then quite ready for the weaving shed. A weaving shed in a big textile factory presents an animated scene. Hundreds of looms may be in motion, and the noise made is simply terrific.

ANOTHER DR. ANGEL

Manager's Self-Sacrifice Fatal In Works Explosion

Fifty persons were killed and about 150 injured in an explosion at privately owned munitions works at Ashton-under-Lyne. Among the dead was Mr. H. Sylvian Dreyfus, the manager of the factory. Dr. Charles Dreyfus could identify his body only by the initials "S.D." on his clothes. Mr. Dreyfus, like Dr. Angel in the great East End explosion, remained in the works warning others to seek safety before the explosion occurred. A number of children were killed in the streets by the explosion.

OFFICERS' HARD GRIND

Work and Play at a British School for Cadets

The following is an account of a school for officers in the British army: "Very enjoyable, but not too easy," is the cadets' description of their life. They are inspected on parade at 7.15 a.m., and sometimes their drills and lectures keep them busy—not continuously, of course—till 9 p.m. Always there is time in the afternoon for a game of Soccer, Rugger, hockey, or what you will. They have their sports committees, their recreation-rooms, with piano, daily and weekly newspapers, magazines, and indoor games. But, best of all, they would tell you, they have their rooms made cosy with fires, their baths, and their beds—simple "biscuits" and blankets—but fires after France.

They work hard. Their training is thorough. This is an average daily programme after two or three weeks' work: 6.30, rouse; 7.15, squad drill; 8, breakfast; 9, rifle inspection; 9.15, physical training; 10.30, musketry—aiming; 11.30, communication drill (voice training); 12, platoon drill; 1, lunch; 2 p.m., lecture on bombing; 5.30, lecture on map reading; 7, dinner; 8.30, lecture by medical officer; 10.30, lights out.

Tanks Spread Terror

Pte. S. Vicker, a Victoria, B.C., man, who crossed the Channel with the 28th Battalion, after going to England with the 48th, was in the machine-gun section all through his period of fighting. He was struck in the right forearm by shrapnel at Courcelette. The tanks, he stated, had played a big part in that fight, and completely terrorized the Germans. No more efficient fighting machine could be imagined than the grim monsters, which, creeping slowly forward, spread death in their path. Nothing but a direct hit by a fairly large shell could disable them.

Cross for Fallen Heroes

In memory of fallen soldiers a cross seventeen feet high, the work of Mr. Arthur Walker, sculptor of the Florence Nightingale memorial in Waterloo-place, was dedicated by the Bishop of Stepney at St. Silas's Church, Pentonville.

KAISERGRUBER-BELGIAN

Career of Fighter and Interpreter with Canadian Forces

After spending 25 months in France, 23 of them in the front line, Pte. H. Kaisergruber, a Belgian-born fighter, returned to the Pacific Coast of Canada. He said ever since he had joined up to go overseas and fight he had had to make excuses for his name, but after convincing his superior officers and comrades that he was actually fighting on the right side, they accepted him and dubbed him "The Kaiser's Grave-Digger," the latter part of his name having that meaning in German. Kaisergruber left for overseas with the Princess Pats and fought with the original 16th Battalion, to which he was transferred when he reached England. After serving for nearly two years in the front line and escaping without a wound, he became physically unfit for further active fighting and was made a wireless interpreter, speaking German, French, Flemish, Belgian and English. In 1914 he knew no English.

Pte. Kaisergruber's father was a doctor in Ostend. He had a brother a major in the Belgian army in the Congo and another a captain with the 3rd Belgian infantry. He met the latter in Flanders while fighting. A sister resides in Paris, and while in the French capital he spent some time with her. The Belgian fighter's experiences cover the most interesting stages of the war's development, and his stamina alone enabled him to last over two years. He was gassed slightly once and twice suffered from shell shock, and during his entire service had but seven days' leave.

HAPPY RETURNING HEROES

Father Saw Son for First Time—Canadian Confidence

The following is a typical extract from an account of the return of a party of Canadian soldiers. The men seemed taken by storm, so enthusiastic was the welcome given them, and tears of happiness sprang to the eyes of many a hardened fighter. Little children clung to their fathers, so long away from them. One Vancouver heroe's exploits, which commenced at Ypres and included most of the important scraps from there to Vimy Ridge, blushed like a school girl when a tiny son whom he had never before seen was placed in his arms, while happy wives, mothers and sisters seemed unable to believe that their loved ones were again with them. Every man radiated confidence, and every man held up his head with pride. The scars of battle were distinguishing badges of merit and no one soldier regretted the sacrifices he had made.

Explorer's Strange End

Timothy McCarthy, one of the Weddell Sea party who accompanied Sir Ernest Shackleton on his 750 mile journey in the small boat from Elephant Island to South Georgia, was later killed while acting as gunner on a ship that was torpedoed.

It is forecasted that American women will take men's places to an even larger extent than they have in England.

BRITISH ATTACK ALONG WHOLE FRONT

The First Objectives Every Where Obtained

BRITISH BEGIN GREAT OFFENSIVE ON BOTH SIDES OF THE YPRES SALIENT

In Conjunction With French Troops Field Marshall Haig's Strike Their Most Formidable Blow of the War This Morning at 3:30 O'clock---First Objectives Were Obtained Everywhere on the Front Announced Official Statement From British Headquarters.

Special to The Examiner:

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FLANDERS, July 31.—Another big battle between British and German troops started to-day along practically the entire front occupied by the British. Field Marshal Haig's first sentence of the daily front report to-day declared succinctly—"Fighting has started in Flandera. In conjunction with the French troops on our left we attacked this morning at 3:30 o'clock on a wide front north of the River Lys. The Allied troops have captured their first objectives on the whole front attacked and are reported to be making satisfactory progress at all points. Considerable numbers of prisoners have been already captured."

For a week now there has been artillery bombardment of almost indescribable fury raging on the British front from around Armentieres to the Belgian coast. Front despatches have described it as the most superlatively concentrated fire of the whole war. Some of the detonations of this drum-fire have been plainly heard in London on nights when the wind blew from the east. The British bombardment began with a fairly intense fire on July 23.— Through the days since it was increased steadily in fury, reaching a Crescendo of roar yesterday. Nieuport, Ypres, Armentieres, Oostravene and other cities have felt the hail of this fire. Every conceivable kind of gun has apparently been called into service by the Germans; also long rang shell have reached out spots behind the British line. The British artillery has not been a whit behind in reciprocating. A great number of guns have been consentrated along this whole front, and their drum-fire has at times even exceeded the enemy's. Despatches have declared the duels to be the most titanic in the war.

The River Lys flows northward above Armentieres joining with the Lille-Ypres Canal at Comines. The canal and river form an obtuse angle in which is included the Messines-Wytschaete Ridge, Messines, Hollebeke and Warneton. It was in this section that Haig struck his big blow a few weeks ago, sweeping over the domination ridge positions. Since that time it has been frequently apparent that the British were preparing to make full use of their height positions by sweeping the Germans back against the convoying waterways over the lowlands.

The British army in Belgium to-day began an attack on both sides of Ypres salient in what promises to be their greatest effort in the war to date. They crossed No Man's Land, and penetrated German defences along a front of fully twelve miles, while Allied troops on their left, said by the British official statement to be French, attacked in conjunction with them probably along a front of seven miles. In that case the combined offensive front allowing for sinuosity of line, reaches twenty miles. The British offensive front begins opposite Warneton on the Lys River, and extends northward to Boesinghe. In the absence of details we assume that the Allies north of Boesinghe carried the offensive front northward as far as the bend in the canal at Knockehoed, and possibly as far as Dixmude. All Canada will watch the latest British offensive with exceptional interest because it promises to retrive the situation brought about by the German use of gas in April of 1915, when the small Canadian contingent stepped into the breach and saved Calais as well as Ypres.

COPENHAGEN, July 31.—Kaiser Wilhelm was on thee Riga front yesterday stimulating his troops to action by speeches of praise, according to despatches received here. The German ruler, it was stated, travelled by motor boat on the river from Mitau to the Riga stroops' positions.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

FRENCH ON OFFENSIVE ALONG LADIES' ROAD

PARIS, July 31. — Suddenly assuming the offensive to-day, French troops swept forward to complete success of their first objectives over a front of 1,500 metres (more than a mile) in La Royere, west of Epine-Chevregny sector of the Chemin Des Dames. The War Office report announced: "Complete success of all objects had been attained." A German counter attack was thrown back.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The United States is not obligated to follow France in her ambition to regain Alsace-Lorraine, it was officially stated here to-day. Nor is the American relation toward the Allies such that this Government would necessarily demand freedom for certain parts of Austria.

LONDON, July 31.—German official reports to-day admit that the British have made terrific onslaughts at the northern end of the western front, and also that the French penetrated the German lines at two points. The German War Office claims, however that the Germans are now fighting on Russian territory in the sector southeast of Tarnapol, but admits that the Russians are now making bitter resistance.

PETROGRAD, July 31.—Efforts by enemy troops to cross the River Zbrucz in the region of Pukliany and Podlipie were frustrated, to-day's official statement said.

At Germanovka Teutonic attacks were beaten off. South of the Dniester stubborn enemy attacks on the Zaleszik-Sniatyn front pressed us back in the region of Doroch, Uverenczanka and Orochapy, the War Office said.

BIGGEST OAT CROP IN THE HISTORY OF ONTARIO

TORONTO, July 31.—"Ontario will have the biggest oat crop in the history of the province," declared Dr. G. C. Creelman, Commissioner of Agriculture, to-day. "We will have a 125,000,000 bushels oat crop as compared to the average crop of 100,000,000. In every quarter of the province the crop is simply wonderful. We want no more rain until after the harvest."

LIVE STOCK MARKET

TORONTO, July 31.—Live stock receipts light, market quiet owing to hot weather. Spring lambs, $13 to $15, hogs fed and watered, $16.25; off cars, $16.50; f.o.b., $15.25. Others unchanged.

RUSSIANS ARE SHOWING SIGNS OF BETTER RESISTANCE

On Some Sectors of the North-eastern Front Kerensky's Troops Have Assumed Initiative and Are Pressing the Battle

NO INTEREST IN MICHAELIS

LONDON, July 31.—Russia seemed to-day to be recovering from the virus injected into her army by the German spy system. Despatches showed on some sectors of the great north-easter front Kerensky's troops had assumed the initiative and were vigorously pressing the battle. In Russia German Chancellor Michaelis' statement, designed to alienate Russia from the struggle, apparently did not create a ripple of interest. London newspapers to-day emphasized an interview which Premier Lloyd George granted on his return from Paris, asserting the Russians are an incalculable quantity. They fought when we least expected them and hung back when it seemed they ought to go on. My latest information is that Russia will recover and become as formidable as ever. In this same connection editorial comment today applauded Foreign Minister Balfour's statement in the House of Commons yesterday denying the German claim that the allies agreed for conquest.

British Losses In July Reached 71,889 Total

LONDON, July 31.—Britain has lost 71,889 in killed, wounded and missing, of her army forces in July, according to the month's casualty list total today. The total casualties were divided as follows:

Killed	15,849
Wounded	53,445
Missing	2,595

WAS REMANDED.

Henri Frichette, Caught Yesterday by Mr. Heard, Will Come Up Aug. 7.

Henri Frichette, charged with stealing $7.07 from Mr. Bert Heard, George Street grocer, was remanded this morning until August 7th. He told the police his name was Antonio Dundrum, and that he had escaped from some House of Correction in Montreal, but they have about ceased to pay any attention to his statements.

IMPORTANT MEETING OF PETERBORO' BRANCH OF THE WAR VETERANS

All Members Who Have Not Received Their Three Months' Extra Pay Are Asked to Report To-night---District Men Are Mentioned in Casualty List--To-day's General Military News.

It is of the greatest importance that all members of the Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans' Association who have not yet received any portion of their three months' extra pay as promised, should report at the special general meeting to be held in the club rooms, in the Barrie Building to-night. The Dominion executive wish to secure at once a list of all men who have received affadavits, but who have not been paid, and also of our men who have not yet even received their affadavits. All members in these two classes will be only serving their own interests by being present at to-night's meeting. Other important matters are to come up inoluding arrangements for the excursion which is being tendered the Veterans and their families in commemoration of the third anniversary of the war.

Among the district casualties reported to-day are the following, all officially reported wounded:

Pte. D. J. Holdcroft, Services, Havelock.

Pte. W. P. Alldred, late 109th Battalion, Bobcaygeon.

Pte. A. R. Casement, late 33rd Battalion, Coe Hill.

Pte. J. A. Lawson, late 109th Battalion, Lindsay.

OTTAWA, July 30.—Sir Edward Kemp, if the matter is brought up, will make a statement in the House to-day with regard to the retirement of Lieut.-Cols. Brown and Wilson from the headquarters staff of military district No. 3, and the charge of the Kingston Whig that they were ousted to make way for political favorites.

It is understood that the department will take the position that the officers in question have no fault to find. They had dual positions, being federal civil servants as well as military officers, and were not overseas. The dual jobs have been abolished, and the officers in question, not being required for military service, simply revert to their permanent pobs in other branches of the public service.

Miss Dora McCracken, 650 Stewart street, has received the following letter from her brother, Signaller Percy McCracken, now in France:

H. Q. 2nd Brigade, C.F.A.,
July 6 1917.

Dear Sister—Just a few lines to let you know I am O.K., hoping you are all the same. I received seven letters on the 4th and there are some more up at the other station which I will get later on this morning. I received a letter from Carrie telling me about the good time she had with you people and about the times she expected to have when I get home. I also had one from Iris Davidson, one from Ethel and a couple from mother.

I was glad to hear that you passed your exams and I believe mother said you had a position all ready. Be sure and write and tell me all about it.

It is just 1.30 a.m. now. I am trying to get some letters written so they will go out by to-morrow's mail. I was working on a cable trench till late so I didn't get a chance to start earlier. We are having buried cable to all our batteries now, so that will be a lot easier on the linemen. We used to have all overhead wires and the shrapnel cut them pretty bad. The cable is seven feet underground all the way. We expect them to finish to-morrow night. They can only work at it at nights from dark till about 2 a.m. If Fritz saw them in the day time he would give them some iron rations, and none of the fellows care for that. The linemen all have to go out and lay the cable in the trench before the working party gets out there. The working party is generally infantry. We have had some of the trench mortars digging, too. Some of the signallers from the old 12th Brigade are still with the trench mortar, so they are up digging too. We are supposed to see that they do it right. It seems funny for us to be giving orders to the fellows we used to work with. Ethel asked me in her letter what I was doing. I was sent from the trench mortars in April 8th to Divisional Signals, where I was attached till April 13th. I was then sent to 2nd Brigade, where I was attached till about May 18th. I was then transferred to that Brigade. About three days after I was transferred to 1st Divisional Signal Company. About a month later we were all transferred to the Signal Company of the Canadian Engineers, attached to the Artillery. She also asked me if I was on the 'phones. I am on the 'phone part of the time and on the lines part of the time. By being on the lines I mean that I go out and mend the lines when they get hit with a shell or get broken.

I am going to the wagon lines at 4 a.m., so I haven't got very long to wait. That is about the best time to go down, for he don't shell so much at that time and it is not too hot to walk. I am going on a signal course on the 9th, which will last about six weeks, so I expect to have a pretty good time while I am there. They generally have these schools back some distance from the range of Fritz's shells.

We are having lovely weather over here. How is it over there? I suppose you had a good time over there on July 1st. We never noticed it any different to any other day. Every day is the same here. Just as much shelling done on Sunday as Monday.

I guess you will think I have gone mad but sometimes I feel like writing and sometimes I don't. But I will have to close now, as I have no money and they will charge duty if I write any more. Love to all.

Your loving brother,
P. H. McCracken.

P.S.—I received the parcel of socks from mother that Miss Belcher sent me.

HEATED DISCUSSION OVER THE "BACON" REPORT

"Canadian People Are Sick of Investigations of Investigators" Declares Geo. W. Kyte—Action is Wanted at Once.

GOVERNMENT SCORED

OTTAWA, July 30.—The war and its successful prosecution comes first. But right after it and close upon its heels comes the cost of living problem. Despite the almost unbearable and stifling heat members of Parliament flocked back into the broiling Chamber to-day as soon as the news reached them that the House was considering the report of Government Commissioner W. F. O'Connor on the operations of cold-storage corporations. And the big attendance continued throughout.

The temper of Parliament concerning the report was manifested time and again in the cheers from both sides of the Chamber which greeted caustic general references to war food profiteers, cheers which were intensified when Judge D. D. McKenzie (Cape Breton) directly arraigned Sir Joseph Flavelle by name. Hon. T. W. Crothers' plea that the case was "sub-judice" seemed to have little weight with members on both sides, and indications seem to be that, in the event of Government failure to take drastic action Parliament may take the bit in its own mouth. The deluge of correspondence from individual constituents to their Parliamentary representatives is believed to be responsible for many of the scenes in to-day's sitting.

PUBLIC DEMAND QUICK ACTION

Following the Government request that Mr. Archie B. McCoig's questions concerning Mr. G. F. Henderson, K.C., Chairman of the Commission to review the O'Connor findings, stand over, Mr. George W. Kyte attacked the subject on the Government resolution to go into Committee of Supply. Mr. Kyte declared that the Canadian public were sick of investigations of investigators. They demanded quick and effective action. They wanted to know what the Government was going to do—and do at once—to bring down the cost of living. Mr. Kyte severely scored the appointment of the man who appeared in defence of J. Wesley Allison and the old Shell Committee, and in defence of the food profiteers in Ottawa city, as the Chairman of the Commission to investigate the O'Connor report.

It was "another gold brick" just like the Government's attempts at coalition, "trying to get a few Liberals in the Cabinet while they fill the Senate with partisan appointments."

Mr. E. M. Macdonald in a slashing attack, declared that Commissioner O'Connor had been getting too hot on the trail of profiteering friends, and he had to be "called off" while a new Board of Inquiry was put on the jog.

TWO PERTINENT QUESTIONS

Prior to the debate, Mr. Archie B. McCoig presented the following questions to the Government:

"(1) Is Mr. Geo. F. Henderson, K.C. Chairman of the Commission appointed by the Government to review the report of Mr. W. F. O'Connor, K.C., High Cost of Living Commissioner, on the operations of cold-storage corporations in Canada, the same person who appeared as counsel for certain food-supplying corporations alleged by the city of Ottawa to be charging extortionate prices at the Government investigation of cost of living conditions, held at the City Hall, Ottawa, in January last, at the request of the municipalities on behalf of its citizen consumers?

"(2) Was this investigation conducted at the request of the citizens, through their City Council, by Mr. W. F. O'Connor, K.C., acting for the Labour Department, on the question of the high cost of living?"

LA BASSEVILLE CAPTURED BY THE BRITISH TROOPS

German Forces Are Seen Reeling Backwards From the Force of An Unparalleled Blow Struck North of River Lys

FRENCH CO-OPERATE

(By William Phillip Simms, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

With the British Armies in the Field, July 31.—Field Marshal Haig sent the Crown Prince Ruphrecht's German forces reeling backward today from the force of an unparalleled blow struck north of the River Lys. French troops, co-operating with the British, crossed the Ypres-Lille canal and swarmed over the enemy's first and second lines. Meanwhile the British Tommies stuck savagely and successfully, driving the foe back.

The British forces captured La Basseville in the first dash. All counter attacks were repulsed here as well as elsewhere. This afternoon the victorious troops were consolidating their new gains.

La Basseville is located on the River Lys a little less than three miles south-east of Warneton, and about three and a half miles north of Armentieres, from where authoritative reports last week placed the British line, the capture of La Basseville appears to indicate an advance of at least a mile in depth.

Officers Are Off Strength

Lieut.-Col. Walker, Lieut. (Major) Duffus and Lieut. McElderry No Longer Members of C.D.F.

With the order issued a few days ago for the abolition of the Canadian Defence Force, the 57th Regiment, C. D.F., have passed into history. Word has been received from headquarters that Lieut.-Col. D. Walker, who has been in command of the local unit, Lieut. Duffus and Lieut. V. J. McElderry have been struck off the strength. Until further orders the Canadian Expeditionary Force recruits in Peterborough will be in charge of Capts. Watt and Lech and Lieut. Theodore Quinn.

The Canadian Defence Force scheme was doomed to failure since its inception. Nowhere was there shown any signs of men coming forward to fill the authorized units and some months ago all recruiting for home defence was stopped and the C.D.F. units were ordered to recruit men for overseas (Lieut.-Col. Walker and his staff have been endeavouring to do this ever since home defence recruiting was abandoned. At present Mayor Duffus is taking a course at Barriefield camp.

CHANGE AND CONTINUANCE.

Things can't remain as they are after the war, and we are told by the wiseacres to prepare for dealing with the period of readjustment of industrial, commercial and economic conditions that must come. One city firm is taking time by the forelock. The firm of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., have realized the lessened demand for harness caused by the auto displacing the horse, and doubtless feeling that "there's nothing like leather," are considering the substitution of the manufacture of boots and shoes. Such a conversion of the business, seems to be the alternative of discontinuing operations. It cannot be expected that the manufacture of harness will be conducted on the large scale of the past, involving the employment of a great deal of labour and capital, or on any scale at all, if an adequate market is not assured. If we are to continue to have the possession in Peterborough of the Ackerman works, we must assume a generous attitude towards the new proposal. If we are to have the Ackermans a fixture, as one of our great manufacturing industries, we must favourably consider the request for a fixed assessment of $23,780 for a period of ten years. This is not too great a recognition of what the Ackerman Company has been to the city of Peterborough, for the over a quarter of a century it has conducted a large and successful business here. The energy the company has shown and the success it has achieved, is a guarantee that it will make a similar success of the new business. We shall, therefore, be sure of a continuation of a manufacturing business that has in the past 25 or 26 years been a large factor in giving employment and distributing among us a large amount of money in the shape of expenditure for labour and supplies. The boot and shoe industry will take the place of, and continue in an enlarged form, the present industry, which with changed conditions of demand for its products, would necessarily be discontinued.

It doesn't look much like the auto putting the horse out of business when we read of a cavalry troop capturing a submarine on the Flemish coast.

PRICES AND PROFITS.

We are told on the authority of a Conservative journal, which wouldn't tell a fib, except in the interests of party, that the profits of the Wm. Davies Company, instead of being five and a half millions a year, was only one per cent. This is more than a typographical error. It is absurd. No man would be able to buy a hereditary title on such a narrow margin of profit. The earnings of packing companies may have been exaggerated, but no one outside of Orillia's government institution for the feebleminded would believe for a moment that one per cent. represented the profits of the Wm. Davies or any other packing company. These companies must have reasonable profits and we are all glad to hear of their growing rich with reasonable profits, especially as the prices they charge for their products are extremely unreasonable to those who have to pay them. It is to be remembered in criticising packing houses and cold storage companies, that they may make big aggregate profits without much excess of detail profits; the magnitude of their turn-over at even comparatively small profits is so great that the total is a big one. Still there is no reason to fear that the profits of these companies are so small as to endanger their existence. After all, the consumer has to stand the conditions of high prices, without much hope of relief during war time. Commissioner O'Connor is making investigations, but only succeeds in not reaching any definite conclusion, and we can't expect much help from him. Now, that Mr. Hanna has been appointed food controller, Mr. O'Connor slides off all responsibility upon his shoulders.

Canadian troops are reported to be getting plenty of rest behind the lines. They deserve it; for they have had plenty of work and have done it well.

THE POWER BEHIND.

Germany may boast of its efficiency, due to its organization and long preparation. But Great Britain can boast of effectiveness, superior to that of the much-lauded Hun. Germany entered the war after forty years of preparation, and a long apprenticeship to war work as a national industry. Great Britain, a peaceful, plodding "shopkeeper," entered the war three years ago, with a handful of an army. Since August, 1914, Great Britain has raised and equipped, trained and armed, between five and six million men, and made them the peers of the greatest fighting machine in the world; besides having between 400,000 and 500,000 men in the navy, that has swept Germany from the sea, and been the salvation of the allied cause. Besides this, Great Britain has placed at the service of her allies, a million and a half to two millions of tons of merchant shipping, and intends building next year, four million tons. The great and growing strength of Great Britain's militant and mercantile navy, bears a direct relation to the failure of Germany's only remaining hope, her submarine destruction. Not only is the submarine game incontestably a losing game—its losses decreasing and to decrease, but its power to starve Britain is gone, if it ever existed. The destruction of tonnage is diminishing and the production of British shipping is increasing; so that there is no human possibility of Germany winning in this fight by starving Britain. Germany may "strafe" Great Britain in its diabolical orisons but it can't starve Britain. The war is a long and weary thing, but with the inexhaustible resources of Great Britain, materialising the reproductive energy of the fabled Hydra; with the United States embarked "with both feet" in the war; with gallant France fighting to the death; with Italy risorgente at her best; with Russia, the land of the unexpected, and of infinite resources, likely to come back—with all these material elements arrayed against her, and with the moral sense of the civilized world opposed to her monstrous inhumanity of cult and deed, Germany is doomed to a drubbing to the finish.

It seems that with Rev. Sydney Smith, "there's nothing left for it, but to take off our flesh and sit in our bones."

WILLIAM ELSON DIED THIS MORNING

Deceased Suffered Fatal Injuries as Result of Falling Into Vat of Boiling Water

About three o'clock this morning the death occurred of Mr. William Elson, of Cavan Township, who, yesterday morning, was terribly scalded as a result of accidentally falling into a vat of boiling water. The deceased was employed in the veneer factory of Mr. Janes, Cavan Township. His entire body up to his neck was scalded. He was removed to the private hospital of Dr. H. A. Turner, Millbrook.

The late Mr. Elson was fifty-eight years of age. He was born in Hope Township, but for the greater part of his life has resided in Cavan Township. For the last few years the deceased has been tax collector for the township.

The deceased is survived by his wife and two daughters, Edith, at home, and Mrs. Downer, of Omemee. Three sisters and one brother also survive, namely: Mrs. J. Walker, of Port Hope; Mrs. J. Lancashire, of Millbrook, and Mrs. Tighe, of British Columbia. Mr. Harry Elson, of Cavan Township, is a brother.

The funeral will take place Thursday morning at nine o'clock. Interment in Welcome Cemetery.

Bill Smith, a country shopkeeper, went to the city to buy goods. They were sent immmediately, and reached home before he did. When the boxes were delivered, Mrs. Smith, who was keeping the shop, uttered a scream, seized a hatchet, and began frantically to open the largest one.

"What's the matter, Sarah?" said one of the bystanders who had watched her in amazement.

Pale and faint, Mrs. Smith pointed to an inscription on the box. It read: "Bill inside."

Heated Discussion Over The "Bacon" Report

MR. KYTE'S FORCEFUL ATTACK

Then followed Mr. Kyte. He struck from the shoulder and with all his force. He instanced the William Davies Company as "the greatest offendor in boosting prices," and declared the Matthews-Blackwell Company had followed its lead. He declared the report of Government Commissioner O'Connor to be "an indictment of the morality of the company's war-time dealings, not only with the consumers of Canada, but with the consumers of the allied countries."

He alluded, with stinging sarcasm, to "those who had preached against war-time profits"—a reference which caused cries of "Baronet Bacon" and laughter—and added that "it might have been expected that those who so preached would have been actuated by some patriotism to adhere to the doctrines which they had preached."

In opening, Mr. Kyte observed that although the Department of Labour had promised much, the report of Commissioner O'Connor was the first substantial benefit derived from the department since the war began. The United States, on the other hand, had acted promptly, and within three weeks of entering the war had appointed a Food Controller and declared it necessary to introduce legislation. Sir George Foster interrupted to remark that no legislation affecting the cost of living had yet been passed by the United States Congress. Mr. Kyte retorted that it had been already prepared. Mr. Hoover had been appointed as Food Controller, and his activities were already being reflected in Canada.

REDUCTION NOT CARRIED OUT

Mr. Kyte went on to say that the war had brought big business to Canada, and with it big profits. This had whetted the appetites of those engaged in handling the food supplies of the people. Mr. Kyte quoted extensively from the report of Commissioner O'Connor to show that of the 151,000,000 pounds of bacon handled in Canada in 1916, some forty millions had been controlled by the William Davis Company and the Matthews-Blackwell Company, both with headquarters in Toronto. The general argument was, said Mr. Kyte that the formation of large companies with their consequent reduction of overhead charges and cost of operation would mean a saving to the consumers. This had not been the case in either of the two large companies referred to. Neither of them was content with the margin of profits and they charged the largets prices in their history." No more striking case of the evils of monopoly had ever been shown.

Mr. Kyte presented the figures of the Government Commissioner's report to show that in 1916, while the smaller cold-storage companies had collected a margin of profits of 1.2 per cent. the Matthews-Blackwell Company had secured a margin of profits of 3.65 cents, while the Wm. Davies margin of profits was as high as 5.5 cents. Dealing particularly with the William Davies Company, Mr. Kyte pointed out that the volume of business in bacon was 14,000,000 pounds in 1914; 60,000,000 in 1915, and nearly 100,000,000 in 1916.

BUSINESS GREW, SO MARGIN AND PRICE.

Notwithstanding the great increase in business the margin of profits and the prices charged had steadily increased. The Matthews-Blackwell Company, Mr. Kyte added, followed the lead of the Wm. Davies Co., in increasing the margin of profits, "while all other cold-storage companies doing business in Canada decreased their margin of profits."

There were, he proceeded, 110 cold-storage plants in Canada, operated by 76 companies. The large companies had the greater distribution facilities, and could better handle and make profit from by-products, and it was reasonable to suppose the consumers would share the benefit. Notwithstanding, the larger the business and the larger the profits, the larger had been the prices charged to consumers. It was the result of monopoly, and "the bitter experience of the people of Canada for the last few years."

Mr. Kyte read from the O'Connor report the findings of eggs, cheese, etc. He emphasized the Commissioner's statement that there were "instances of profiteering of a criminal character," and the statement that had the order in Council subsequently passed by the Government been in force the previous year he would have thought it was necessary to lay the facts before the Attorney-General.

CHEAPER IN ENGLAND THAN HERE!

Mr. Kyte gave some illuminative figures as to to anomaly of selling Canadian food products cheaper in England than in Canada. Bacon, he said—and Canadian bacon at that—sold for 27 1-2 cents per pound in England. In Toronto it cost from 28 to 31 cents, and in Montreal from 31 to 33 cents per pound. Canadian ham sold for 25 1-2 cents per pound in England. In Toronto the consumer paid for the same article 30 or 31 cents. Bread made from Canadian flour sold at 5 3-4 cents per pound in England; in Toronto it cost 7 1-3 cents and in Montreal 8 cents. Strong bakers' flour cost $10.45 per barrel in England. In Toronto and Montreal it sold for $12.40 and $12.50, although, in the case of flour, quality was higher in Canada than in England.

Commenting on the reply of the William Davies Company to the O'Connor report, Mr. Kyte noted that even if the company's figure of 4.1 cents per pound as the cost of shipping bacon to England were correct, there was still wanting an explanation as to why the British consumer was able to get it cheaper than the Canadian consumer. Taking the company's figures of net profits, namely, .68 cents per pound, at face value, and knowing that they were doing a business of seven and a half million pounds per month for the last year, there would still be, said Mr. Kyte, a net profit of seventeen per cent. from bacon alone on the total common stock of the company.

A SERIOUS RUMOR.

In connection with the statement in the O'Connor report that the Davies Company had corralled most of the export business, Mr. Kyte referred to "a general rumor that this company, whose head was the Chairman of the Imperial Munitions Board were afforded export facilities through ships carrying munitions."

"Have you any facts to back up such an insinuation" asked Sir George Foster, indignantly.

"I am simply stating it as a rumor" replied Mr. Kyte. "If it si not true I shall be the first to cheerfully deny it."

Sir George Foster took Mr. Kyte to task for making unfair and damaging insinuations of this kind without having any facts to go on.

Mr. Kyte retorted by declaring that he, at any rate, was not in favour of "pussy-footing" in a manner of so much concern to the people of Canada. As to the fact that Mr. O'Connor had not given any figures as to cost items which must be deducted from "margin" in order to reach a conclusion regarding net profits, Mr. Kyte noted that the Davies Company had declined to submit data along this line which would have enabled Mr. O'Connor to make a complete case.

MERELY ANOTHER COMMISSION!

The important question, however, continued Mr. Kyte, was not as to the individual profits of any one company, but it was as to what action the Government was going to take to wipe out monopoly and ring down prices. Instead of taking the quick action which people demanded, the Government was now merely restoring to another Commission, which would take up more time without getting any practical results for the relief of the consumer.

And as the Chairman of this new Commission they had appointed G. F. Henderson, K.C., who had defended J. Wesley Allison when the Shell Committee was under fire, and who but a short time ago had appeared for the defence when some Ottawa companies were being investigated by Commissioner O'Connor in regard to alleged exorbitant prices for foodstuffs. Such an appointment, declared Mr. Kyte, would hardly tend to establish any confidence in the minds of the people.

This second investigating Commission, he concluded, was in line with other good bricks that had been handed out to the public by this Government, such as the tariff increase "in order to get revenue" and the coalition red herring.

In connection with the coalition efforts of the Government, Mr. Kyte noted that at the same time that the Prime Minister was beating the bush for some Liberals who migh come in to save the Government, he was filling up the Senate with extreme partisans. That did not look like sincerity or the right way of going about coalition.

MORGAN'S SON HAS MADE MORE MONEY THAN HIS FATHER

Estate of America's Financial King, Worth Seventy-three Millions, Most of which went to Son.

New York. — According to the completed appraisal made, the estate of the late J. P. Morgan was worth $73,149,000, of which $53,684,918 went to the present J. P. Morgan.

From what was learned the present Morgan firm has made as much money during the past two years as the old head of the house made during his whole career as the recognized financial and industrial leader of the United States.

In the first place under its contract with the British government the Morgan firm has received a commission of two per cent. on all munitions and supplies purchased.

Then there have been commissions for the Morgan firm in selling for the British government the hundreds and hundreds of millions of the foreign-owned American securities. Then there have been commissions and interest on call loans and interest and commission for stabilizing exchange; that is for buying when sterling went down and selling when the movement was upward.

In brief at the most conservative estimate, the present J. P. Morgan has within the past two short years, more than doubled his own personal fortune, basing the figures on the $53,684,0000 which was left to him by his father. No one has ever made money like that in this or any other country.

A small boy, whose record for deportment at school had always stood at a hundred, came home one day recently with his standing reduced to ninety-eight. "What have you been doing, my son?" asked his doting mother. "Been doing?" replied the young hopeful. "Been doing just as I have been doing all along—only the teacher caught me this time."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

H. C. HOOVER WAS POOR PLOWBOY

WAS MANAGER OF A BIG LONDON COMPANY WHEN THE WAR BROKE OUT.

When Herbert Clark Hoover, the U. S. Food Controller, had reached the age when he wanted to be something more than a farmer, he informed his parents of his desire for a broader education, they promised to send him to the Quaker school in the district, but young Hoover rebelled, and through his own efforts managed to make his way through Leland Stanford University.

"The man with a degree plus common sense," is the way other members of that pioneer class, that was graduated by the University in 1895, referred to Hoover. Something of his struggle from plowboy to his present position is told by a writer in the Providence Journal, who says:

Born on an Iowa farm, August 10, 1874, Mr. Hoover is the son of Jesse C. and Huldah R. Hoover, industrious Quaker residents of West Branch. His early life was spent upon the Iowa farm, where the hard work of wrestling with the brown earth and harvesting crops made his muscles firm and his nerves steady, and gave him an intimate knowledge of the lives of those who are forced to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow.

At an early age he developed an ambition to become something more than a mere farmer, and when the family moved to California, early in his 'teens, he voiced his desire to go to college.

It is related that this request of the lad was met by the parents with the promise to send him to a Quaker school and they were somewhat nonplussed by the assertion of the son, who declared: "I don't want to go to a Quaker school or a college founded by any other special sect. I want to go where I will have a chance to see and judge everything fairly without prejudice for or against any one line of thought."

So, when the Leland Stanford University was opened in 1891, young Hoover applied for admission. As it was necessary for him to earn enough to pay his way he looked about for opportunities. Declining an offer of a position as waiter in the dining room of the University he set his wits to work and finally started a laundry for the students. He developed an ability for organization, and very soon, "Let Hoover manage it," was the slogan of the undergraduates in all their undertakings.

In 1893, while still in College, he was an assistant in the Arkansas geological survey and was graduated in 1895 from the department of mining engineering. His first position as an "engineer" was that of pushing ore-laden cars in a California mine at two dollars a day. The same year he assisted in the United States survey of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, where he displayed such extraordinary ability that in 1896 he was given the position of assistant manager of the Carlistle mines in New Mexico. He remained there only a brief period before returning to California to become assistant manager of the Morning Star mines.

In 1897 he accepted a position as chief engineer on the staff of Bewick, Moreing and Company, one of the large concerns operating in West Australia. In 1898 he became general manager of the Sons of Gwalia and E. Murchison mines, and the following year he returned to California, and married Miss Lou Henry, whom he had met in his college days.

Immediately after the wedding the Hoovers went to China, where he had been commissioned as chief engineer of the Chinese Imperial Bureau of Mines, which was then taking up extensive exploration work in the interior of China.

During the Boxer rising in 1900, Mr. Hoover was in Tientsin in charge of important mining operations. He not only safeguarded the property of the company but kept faith with the Chinese people, and in 1901 became general manager of the Chinese Engineering and Mining Company.

From China, Mr. Hoover, who was now recognized as an authority on mining, went to London to take charge of several large companies.

It was Mr. Hoover's great work in behalf of suffering humanity in Belgium that made him best known to the world, though his energies were first directed to getting American tourists out of the country when the war broke out.

Sensation at Panama Pacific Exposition to be Seen at Toronto.

The famous World-at-Home-Shows will provide the Midway attractions at the Canadian National Exhibition, and the fund of amusement guaranteed is not only unique, but so arranged that no matter what one wishes to see or how diverse their tastes, they will find something worthy of patronage. "Creation," the original spectacle exhibited at the Panama Pacific Exposition, is one of the head-liners. From impenetrable darkness and absolute quiet and solitude, the wonderful tale of the birth of the universe is told and unfolded day by day, each incident as told in the first book of Genesis, being faithfully and artistically worked out and portrayed in every detail, even to the appearance of Adam and the creation of Eve. Venus, the most perfect woman in the world, is another feature, and there are rides and pony shows, submarine girls and a host of living curiosities.

PETERBOROUGH, ONTARIO

The King With The Canadians

By Arthur Machen, in the London Evening News

In the place of the anointing of the kings, in the place of burial of many of them, King George and his Queen, Queen Alexander, the people of England, the people of Great Britain, the people of all the Britains came this morning to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Confederation of Canada.

And King and Queen and people came also to praise the valour of the Canadian armies now fighting in the righteous quarrel, and also to utter the prayer:

We dedicate to Thy great glory the memory of our dear Brethren departed: Crown we beseech Thee with Thy mercy the offering of their brave lives! Grant unto them Thy eternal Peace and unto all that mourn the blessing of Thy perfect comfort.

The mists of the morning had cleared away and as the great congregation were assembling in the Abbey the sun shone through the painted Saints and Knights of the Church in the rose-windows of the transepts.

These old warriors of the Faith glowed red and golden from their ancient conflicts and their eternal glories; they shone down on the wounded Canadian soldiers as on men in some sort their fellows and companions; confessors at least in the great warfare for God against the devil, these soldiers who had offered the torment of soul and body and spirit.

The sun shone in all dyed and glorious and the tapers on the high altar and those before it were lighted as great rolling music sounded and triumphed on the organ. Queen Alexandra was escorted to her place in the sanctuary, and as the organ ceased, there was heard the noise of loud acclaims without. Then the King's trumpets, ringing and sonorous, at the western doors above the cheering of the people.

And now again the great pipes of the organ were opened; and the thundering voices sounded and echoed high in the far-lifted vault.

THE KING PASSES

The Dean, who was suffering from lameness, had already taken his place by the altar. As the trumpets ceased, the golden processional cross could be seen advancing through the choir gates. The choir went to their places, and then escorted by the canons in their golden copes, the King and Queen came slowly up the choir and into the sanctuary.

For a moment the King seemed to hesitate as to the place he was intended to occupy; and Queen Alexandra, seeing this, touched him lightly on the shoulder and indicated his seat with an affectionate gesture.

Then the song "O Canada":

O Canada! Our home, our native land,
Loyal and free, beneath thy flag we stand!
With chains of love thou hast bound us.
Thy winds have made us strong.
Our eyes have seen thy golden fields.
To thee we raise our song.
O Canada, our pray'r shall be
God bless and guard thee, keep us true to thee,
God bless and guard thee, keep us true, true to thee!

And, this ended, the prayers began for King George and the Parliaments in all the Dominions of the King.

A MEMORY OF WOLFE.

And when the anthem, O pray for the peace of Jerusalem, had been sung, the Dean in his blue and golden cope, crimson-lined came forward, accompanied by the Cross-bearer, and, having done his obeisance to the King and Queen and Queen Alexandra, he stood at the entrance to the sanctuary and praised Canada and Canada's noble men, quick and dead.

Let us now unite to commemorate the 50th year of the Confederation of Canada, and let us do honour to the brave men who have sealed with their lives the greatness of their country.

From this spot I point to the monument that commemorates the Victory and the Death of General Wolfe. There, see the symbol of Canadian Liberty! Behold that Mountment! It is now draped in the folds of banners which Canadian battalions, many of them at the Front, have left in the keeping of Westminster Abbey.

The Doxology was sung, the Dean gave thanks for Canada, for the Canadians, for their free-will offering of themselves in the war.

And then followed the entreaty of Rudyard Kipling's "Recessional":

God of our fathers, known of old—
Lord of our far-flung battle-line—
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!

After the blessing was pronounced from the altar, the "Maple Leaf" was sung, and "God Save the King" ended all.

The great drums beat and thundered, reverberating from the ancient walls and rolling in the hollow of the vaulted roof, the organ added its sonorous pealing and exultant voices, and all the people sang together.

As I stood outside the Abbey, in the sunshine by the open doors, it seemed as if all those carven stones and uplifted walls thrilled with song and melody, as if the stone angels exulted in their places, as if the painted saints in their dyed and shining robes bore up their part in the descant.

French Surgery Amazes Beholder

AMERICA AIDS THE BLIND.

The Re-Education of the Crippled Evokes the Enthusiasm of a Medical Writer.

The Paris correspondent of the Medical Record sends these facts regarding the health of the armies in the field and the re-education of the crippled by marvels of surgery:

"This is the first great war that has not had as one of its terrible features an epidemic that has claimed its victims by thousands. With the exception of the epidemic of typhus in Serbia, which was quickly controlled and subdued by the joint medical commission sent by America, England and France, the health of the armies in the field has been a surprise to all observers and this in spite of the trench form of warfare, with its dampness, cold and restriction of movement. This happy change is due to serum-therapy—vaccination.

"The surgeon has not been left behind by his medical brother, and from the beginning 'conservation' has been preached and practiced in all the formations; as a result one sees some peculiar malformations and distortions, and to make these crippled limbs useful there have come into vogue two new and beneficent adjuncts to complete the conservation work of the surgeon that are accomplishing great results.

"The first of these are the physio and mechano-therapeutic establishments and the second the institutions that have sprung into being everywhere it temporary quarters for the re-education of the crippled in some line of occupation best adapted to their deformity, and particulary the blind. The chief honor of organisation and support of the last named is due to the initiative of America, and Americans.

"The first man and the first establishment to be devoted to the development of machano-therapy are found at Troyes, known as Hospital Auxiliaire No. 2, and Dr. Bailleul is the man with the imagination that brought it into existence. The doctor was not in the class mobilised, but at once upon the outbreak of the war, offered his services to the government as a general surgeon.

"In the month of December, 1914, M. Millerand, the then Minister of War, commissioned him to organize his special service for the twentieth army, region at Troyes; he thus entered into the army service, though still remaining a civilian. As a rule this creates an anomalous position not often favored, but M. Justin Godart, Assistant Secretary of State for the Medical Department of the Army, the Medical Director and the General commanding the twentieth region, far from treating the civilian as an interloper, gave him every possible encouragement and assistance, and up to the beginning of March, 1917, there have been treated in this establishment more than 3,000 men.

"Similar establishments or adjuncts to large hospital formations, are now found in all the great centres and are a regular part of the treatment given the wounded. At Troyes there is an electro-therapeutic department, possessing every modern invention and convenience for the application of this treatment. In the mechano-therapeutic section there are machines and devices for every imaginable manipulation, many operated by electric power, others by hand. There is a department for the taking of plaster casts and one for the making of artificial limbs from these molds.

"There are a gymnasium and a field provided with ladders, swings, hurdles and various forms for exercise, as well as calisthenics, and the limbs imprisoned for months, in order to obtain bony reunion or repair, whose tissues and muscles have lost the remembrance of their functions, are slowly brought back to a state of usefulness.

"The Grand Palace on the Champs Elyses, Paris, one of the magnificent buildings annually devoted to the exposition of art, is now a hospital having 800 beds, and here again is found a perfect installation of mechano and electro-therapy for renewing the usefulness of useless limbs.

"In this connection I ought to speak of the wonderful work of Gosset and Morestin, although the work of each is worthy of a separate letter. Morestin has three services and works like a horse. He has what is practically his own hospital in 'De Rothschild' a service in 'Val de Grace,' and one at 'St. Louis.' He has created a new department in plastic surgery and recently exhibited before the Surgical Society fifty cases of his work, which stirred that body into open applause, a thing unknown to the oldest member present. He thinks nothing of making new maxillaries (jaws), noses, ears, cheeks, filling unsightly cavaties, and making a mutilated face as good as ever.

"Gosset has achieved some marvels in nerve surgery. He has promised to confide his full dossier of observations to me to assort, classify and report upon, and I hope at no distant date to furnish a communication to the American profession, fully illustrated, that will give some comprehensive idea of his accomplishment. Eight months ago, just before he was transferred to a front line hospital, he had notes of 146 cases of nerve-grating with a result at that time of eighteen successes, some failures, and others to be determined when sufficient time has elapsed to show the final outcome.

"With opportunities extending over many years for observing celebrated surgeons in many great centres, I have never seen his equal in precision and method of aseptic routine, not one to handle a bistoury and a pair of scissors with the delicacy combined with dexterity possessed by him. It is simply a delight to watch him in his delicate nerve dissections and manipulations."

RHONE CANAL APPROVED.

French Officials Favor Starting Work before the End of War.

Lyons, France. — Navigation of the river Rhone and the proposed canal lateral to the Rhone with electricity as the motive power, was the subject of discussion by representatives of the eleven departments of France, who just met here.

The conference recommended that work on the new canal be commenced without waiting for the end of hostilities. The resolution also asks that in all concessions for the utilization of the water power of the Upper Rhone, sufficient electric current be reserved to furnish power for the navigation of the canal.

The delegates were agreed that the early realization of the project would help largely to relieve the congestion of traffic and decrease fuel requirements. The project also comprises the irrigation of land needing it between Lyons and Marseilles. This is a port of the great canal project prepared in 1878 by M. de Freycinet, recently Minister of State in Aristide Briand's Cabinet.

CADET SCHOOLS

(By A. E. MORGAN)

When the 1914 campaign was stopped by the advent of the bad weather and the Germans began to dig themselves in for the winter, probably neither they nor any one else realised the ultimate result of that entrenchment. For over two years the war of manoeuvres was unknown, at any rate on the western front, and this strange new siege warfare of field works held the mighty armies millions on each side locked in seeming immobility. Those vast hosts seemed to be fixed indefinitely in this curious situation; but their immmobility was only apparent. They were like well matched wrestlers, who though motionless in one another's embrace, are trembling in every limb and nerve and fibre, straining with pent energy, and enormous, if invisible, power. Then suddenly the strength of one cracks, and all is whirl and throw and swift victory. It is just such deadly embrace that the opposing forces have been locked for months, for years; till now at length we see the strength of one giving way to the invincible power of the other.

Siege Fighting.

Probably it was the settling down of the war into siege fighting that saved Europe The conditions of trench warfare permitted the French to hold the Teuton hordes at bay, whilst the English quickly trained a large army that could be rushed over to France and Belgium. Leaving out the question of the rank and file, consider the problem of officers involved in the effort. Men without a day's military experience were made in a very short time almost a few weeks, into officers for the wonderful "Kitchener's Army." And yet these men justified the venture, and after a little practical experience at the front, turned out excellent and efficient leaders. Now such a thing would have been utterly impossible if the war at that period had been like the campaign of 1914. Trench warfare alone made it possible. But although the authorities were wise in carrying out so bold a policy, they were far-sighted enough to see that it would never do to rely on it to the end. So Officer Cadet Schools sprang up all over England to give a thorough training to specially chosen men, whilst behind the line in France somewhat similar schools were started to give further training to the officers who had already been so hastily improvised.

The Gunner.

No arm has developed so enormously in the importance of its role as the artillery, which has always had many sides to its technique. The gunner must, in the first instance, have a basis of mathematical knowledge on which to build the science of what one may call pure gunnery. If he is a light gunner he must be a good horseman and horsemaster; for no gun in the world is of any use unless you can transport it whither you want, and it is on horses that the field artillery depends. If his weapon is larger and more cumbersome, the gunner must have a more profound mathematical training to enable him to deal with the extremely precise calculations of heavy gunnery; and he must also be able to cope with the increased difficulties of transport. Then every artillery officer must be an accomplished map reader; he must be able not only to find his way, and use a map for reconnaissance, but he must have reduced map reading to such a fine and accurate art that he can shoot at hidden targets which are spotted by aerial observers and given to him merely as points on the map. He also has to know every bolt and nut of his equipment, all the workings of the parts of the gun with which he fights, for nothing makes for long life in equipment like thorough detailed knowledge on the part of the officer.

Gun Drill.

Then the drill that an artillery officer must know is so diverse. He must be able to move bodies of men on foot, though the foot drill for mounted arms is simpler than the drill of the infantry. But that is a small part of his business. He must be skilled not only in riding, but in driving in teams; he must be able to manoeuvre a battery on the move, which is no simple affair in the Horse or Field Artillery, where pace is often of prime importance. To be able to manipulate a battery of twelve, perhaps even eighteen, vehicles, each with a team of six horses, at a trot or a gallop, an officer must have trained the drivers with extreme care and himself possess experience, horsemanship and above all swiftness of decision and rapidly of execution. When the guns are in action is the time to put to the test the drill, not of the driver, but of the gunner. A subaltern must know everything of all forms of gun drill and gun drill demands an infinity of precise and accurate manipulation of the weapon, which is to be attained only by careful instruction and long practice.

The Cadet.

All these things the Artillery Cadet must now learn and then prove by a series of progressive examinations that he is competent. Only then has he a chance of becoming an officer. As many months now as weeks in the earlier days of the war are devoted to the training of officers. Moreover, the whole system is organised and arranged on definite plans, and carried out by specially selected instructors—officers and non-commissioned officers. There are many items of training even beyond those described; routine, discipline, military law, etiquette, antigas defence, ammunition, rifle drill, field fortifications, tactics and perhaps, most important of all, the actual direction of the fire of a battery. This is practised for weeks and months on sand models, which are sometimes developed into highly realistic landscapes, all complete with miniature woods and roads, villages and churches, hills and valley trenches, and even moving troops and toy railways. On these model ranges the Cadet "shoots," until he is thoroughly skilled in fire tactics and the control of the fire of a battery and can give his orders easily and readily. The fall of shells is marked by all sorts of ingenious devices— sometimes by the simple contrivance of a piece of cotton wool on the end of a stick, sometimes by an elaborate mechanical arrangement by which actual bullets are fired out of a small calibre tube inserted into a real gun. When the aspirant subaltern has learned how to shoot and observe on these baby battle fields, finally, at the end of his training, he does the real thing with real guns on a long range artillery range.

Why is all this necessary, if the three weeks of cramming sufficed two years ago? Chiefly because the siege warfare of the trenches is passing, and once again war is becoming a question of manoeuvre and fighting on the move. Thousands of Cadets so trained have become officers and the British armies are not only prepared, but eagerly desirious, for the return of warfare in the open. Hindenburg vaunted that he would draw the Allies from their trenches to destroy them. They are no longer in that rigid trench line, but he has not yet shown the exact way in which he proposes to lure to destruction these highly trained armies, which not only match but surpass the Germans, individually and collectively, in technique as well as in material and in spirit.

Bale For The Labrador Mission Was Appreciated

Those who contributed to the bale, sent to the Labrador Mission will be interested in reading the following letter received by Mrs. James Wood:

My Dear Mrs. Wood,—Your generous donation of useful and perfectly good clothing, reached us in good condition. We are, indeed, glad to receive it, as our needy ones are in dire want as regards clothing, and, through your Society's generosity, we are enabled to relieve the absolute need. We appreciate more than ever the efforts our kind friends are putting forth to help our fisher-folk when there is so much being done for our brave lads across the sea. We rather feared we would be neglected, but our helpers are most kind.

Thanking you for your thoughtful time and financial help. I am very sincerely yours.

Mrs. Wood is arranging to send another bale to the mission.

Street Railway Conductor Hurt Last Evening

Harry Smith Sustained a Severe Electric Shock While in the Discharge of His Duties

Harvey Smith, Kenneth avenue, a conductor on the Street Railway was brought to the fire hall last night, suffering from the effects of an unusual and painful accident. Conductor Smith was in the trailer of a "five cents an hour's ride" car, when, at the corner of Edinburg and George streets he grasped the back rail of the car in front and at the same time the front rail of the back car thus forming a circuit in some unknown manner, which gave him a bad electrical shock. On arrival at the fire hall at 9.15 the pulmotor was used for three quarters of an hour and Doctors Harvey and Galvin called. When he was revived the Chief took him to his home, and the man after his narrow escape from death, is on duty to-day notwithstanding the fact that he received painful burns about the hands and arms and a serious nervous shock.

Switzerland Shows Teeth To Germany

After having placed scarecrow to the Swiss for a few days and assumed an attitude so menacing that a newspaper as unsensational as the Journal de Geneve thought it proper to allude to the "intact army of Switzerland," Germany calmed down and consented to defer her ultimatum. Therefore the Federal Council will negotiate with Berlin. The French believe that, though there was a threat of war, there was never any real danger of it.

"After reflection," says the Figaro, "Wilhelmstrasse doubtless understood that the time was badly chosen to risk having one more enemy on her hands and especially one whose army is intact. In the meantime, in order to keep up a pressure on Switzerland, German imports have been partly stopped. Iron, for instance, is no longer passed. They have not dared to bar coal, and it is hard to see how they could have done so, for the position of Switzerland in this respect is unassailable.

"Before the war, foreseeing the difficulties in which she might be placed in case of conflict between her two big neighbours, Switzerland made agreements with France and Germany assuring freedom of transit. France guaranteed the transportation of grain which might arrive in her ports destined for Swiss territory, and Germany made the same arrangement with regard to coal. Switzerland then was buying her coal in Belgium and had it transported over the German railroads.

"Now, although Belgium is occupied by German troops, from the Swiss neutral standpoint the coal mines of Belgium are still Belgian, and the right of Switzerland to get coal from Mons or Charleroi, which Germany is obliged to transport, is indisputable. All the resources of German casuistry could avail nothing against the formal engagements made by the Government.

Exiled Prince Dead; Displeased Kaiser

Prince von Radolin, formerly German ambassador at Paris, died the other night on his estate near Posen.

Prince von Radolin was a social favourite at the French capital and popular in the German colony there during his incumbency, from 1901 to 1910.

Nothing had been heard of Prince Hungro von Radolin since June, 1915, when he and the Princess von Radolin were reported banished to their estate at Jarotschia, Posen, for the expression of sympathies that displeased the Kaiser. Earlier in that month the Prince, according to despatches published in an Italian newspaper, was arrested on the order of the German government. The report was never verified.

Prince von Radolin was related to the Russian house of Radziwill, and his wife, who was the daughter of Count Opersdorff and Countess Elizabeth Talleyrand-Perigord, was a niece of the French statesman, Prince de Talleyrand.

From 1901 to 1910, when he was the German ambassador to France, Prince von Radolin was one of the favourites of the diplomatic corps. Upon his retirement his friendship received recognition in the form of the Grand Cordon of the French Legion of Honour.

Prince von Radolin was born in 1841. He was educated at the universities of Bonne and Berlin and entered upon his diplomatic career at the German legation in Florence in 1865. Subsequently he served as secretary of the legations at Paris, Dresden, Stuttgart and Madrin. His next appointment was that of First Secretary of the embassy at Constantinople. He was popular with Emperor Frederick III. of Germany, and during the latter's reign received one of the five highest court ranks, that of Premier Grand Ecuyes Trenchant.

From 1892 to 1895 he was the ambassador to Turkey, and in the following years he held the post of ambassador to Russia. He was a hereditary member of the Prussian House of Lords and had been a member of the Privy Council.

HIS OBJECTIONS.

A lawyer died in an American provincial town and his fellow lawyers wrote over his grave:

"Here lies a lawyer and an honest man."

Not long after, the governor of the province visited the town, and among other places, visited the cemetery. When he came to the lawyer's grave he stopped, read the inscription once or twice, and turning to the head inspector said:

"Look here, my friend. We wink at a good many things in this province, but I do object to your burying two men in one grave."

"OVER THERE"

(The student officers of Plattsburg, the despatches say, have added George M. Cohan's latest patriotic song to their repertoire of marching tunes. Mr. Cohan, who wrote songs about the flag when war was a myth to this country, dashed off his latest contribution a few weeks ago, and Nora Bayes has been singing it eversince in the varieties. The words are printed below.)

Johnny get your gun, get your gun, get your gun;
Take it on the run, on the run, on the run.
Hear them calling you and me,
Ev-ry son of liberty.
Hurry right away, no delay, go to-day,
Make your daddy glad to have had such a lad,
Tell your sweetheart not to pine,
To be proud her boy's in line.

CHORUS.

Over there, over there,
Send the word, send the word over there,
That the Yanks are coming, the Yanks are coming,
The drums rum-tumming everywhere.
So prepare, say a pray'r,
Send the word, send the word to beware,
We'll be over, we're coming over,
And we won't come back till it's over over there.

Johnny get your gun, get your gun, get your gun;
Johnny show the Hun you're a son of a gun;
Hoist the flag and let her fly,
Yankee Doodle do or die,
Pack your little kit, show your grit, do your bit.
Yankees to the ranks from the towns and the tanks,
Make your mother proud of you and the old Red, White and Blue.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont is in Newport endeavoring to raise a fund of $100,000 for the campaign of the woman's part, which is to have half a million to be used for the purpose.

Though the Huns had so wormed their way into Paris that a large number of French dressmaking firms were controlled by Germans, the Rue de la Paix now says "Never again!"

Cocchi Swears He Got No Aid From Police

Priest The Only Other Man Who Knew of Crime, He Declares —Wants to Die Now, Fighting in Army—Denying American Citizenship, He Expresses Great Fear of Punishment Here.

BOLOGNA, July 31. — An official transcript of the interrogation in the Alfredo Cocchi murder case has just been made public. Cocchi swears he was not helped by New York policemen and says he confessed solely to Father Morretto, manager of the St. Rafael Society for Italian Immigrants, New York.

The slayer declares he killed Ruth Cruger with a stick because she refused to cease calling for help. He did not assault the girl before or after he struck her, he declares. He says he would not have killed the girl had she promised not to tell of the attack.

Cocchi denies charges of his association with policemen for unlawful purposes or that he had an accomplice in the murder. Cocchi further denies American citizenship.

His replies were made to pressing questioning by Judge Zucconi, taken down by the Judge's clerk. The transcript contains a long, detailed history of the crime and subsequent events.

The text of the statements made by Cocchi during various interrogations by Judge Zucconi was received by Cocchi's counsel, Signor Venturini, to-day. There were eight interrogations between June 15 and July 20 and the record of them covers nine typewritten pages.

Denied Crime on First Day.

On the first day, the record shows, Cocchi denied the crime, asserting that the reason he left New York was because of his wife's jealousy and the quarrels to which that led, although he admitted that he had sharpened a pair of skates for Ruth Cruger. On the second day Cocchi began by declaring that the girl came to his shop in company with two Italians, who were not known to him and who ordered him to leave, he doing so and they remaining in the room. Under cross-questioning by Judge Zucconi, however, Cocchi began to weep and, holding his head in his hands, declared:

"It is true. I killed her. For a week I had been constantly quarrelling with my wife. This day, the 13th, when I ate my midday meal at home I drank five glasses of California wine to make me forget my family troubles.

"In my nervous condition I went to my shop about twenty minutes past one o'clock, when there immediately entered the girl who before noon had left her skates for sharpening. She was very beautiful, and I lost my head. When she went to the rear of the shop to get her skates, without her seeing me I barred the street door with a block of wood so that no one would be able to open it from the outside. Then I started to embrace the girl, but she was very strong and threw me backward. I tried again and succeeded, despite her resistance. I picked her up and dropped her into the repair room below through a square door, feet first, holding her by the hand and shoulder. All the while she was screaming, 'Police! Police!'

Not Hurt in Fall.

"She fell about twelve feet below, striking a motorcycle sidecar on her side, but was not hurt. I jumped after her, she being again on her feet, fighting and resisting with all her power. I remember that before dropping her below I said to her: 'Please say nothing, as I have two boys,' but she continued shrieking for the police, although I do not believe any one heard her.

"When I joined her in the lower room my head was gone. I tried to embrace and kiss her, but again did not succeed, she was so strong. I remember she was of dark complexion and stout of body, also that her hat fell off when I first attempted to embrace her.

"Finally exasperated by her resistance, I grabbed in my left hand a stick of heavy wood a yard long, and struck her twice or thrice across the back of the neck, holding her with my right hand. She groaned, and sank down.

"Horribly frightened and sorry, I would have killed myself had I had a revolver. Expecting to be delivered at any moment, I took the body and dragged it into a box in the left-hand corner of the room, putting the head in first and then the body.

"This day I left it so, placing the toolchest across the opening to a lower room I finished by four o'clock but remained in the shop until 6 o'clock cleaning with benzine the black gloves I had used in handling the body.

Covered Body With Coal.

"On the night of the 13th I neither ate nor slept. On the morning of the fourteenth I hurried to the shop at 6 o'clock, covered the box containing the body with coal and pieces of old iron and old clothing. I read the newspapers telling of the lost girl. Then came the parents of the girl, and a policeman unknown to me.

"After a troubled day and a sleepless night I went, on the 15th, about half-past three o'clock, and confessed the crime to Father Morretto, who had married me. I then decided to return to Italy.

"Leaving my house at 9 o'clock I took the Hoboken ferry and slept that night in Weehawken. I went to Philadelphia on the 16th, spent the day looking for a chance to work my passage on a ship, and slept in the house of an Italian named Romano. On the 17th a young American who slept in the same place showed me a shipping agency in South Second street, where, under the name of Louis Leroi, I shipped as a sailor on the munition ship Manchester, and reached Havre on the 28th. I shipped as an Italian subject. Nobody asked me for a passport.

"What I have related is the truth. Now I ask merely to be allowed to go into the army, where I hope I shall be killed. If the girl had pardoned my first offensive act and listened to my prayers to tell nobody, I would have let her go without touching a hair of her head. I was beside myself, fearing the severity of the American law.

"Nobody helped me in the crime, nor knew about it save Father Morretto. The policeman who first investigated the case was unknown to me. My police acquaintance was with the motorcycle squad, who were customers. Never before had I committed such a crime. No policeman knew of the Cruger crime or helped me escape, although, because of my shop business, I knew Policeman Haliam, More, Corrigan and Donovan and Sergeants Judson and Raffael, also a few others whose names I have forgotten.'

Butter and cowardly soldiers develop like reactions if exposed to the fire.

CHATHAM ALDERMEN SENT FOR TRIAL ON CONSPIRACY CHARGE

CHATHAM, July 31.—Magistrate Arnold committed for trial Aldermen C. S. Coatesworth, Frank Baxter and F. H. Briscoe, on charges of conspiring to solicit a bribe from officials of the Chatham Gas Company. Bail of $500 was granted in each case.

The preliminary hearing of the conspiracy charges were heard several weeks ago, though judgment has been reserved on different occasions. The three aldermen are charged with having solicited a bribe of $5,000 from the Chatham Gas Company, of which, it is alleged, they would relinquish their opposition to a proposed deal between the city and the gas company for the purchase of the electrical end of the latter company's business.

DANCER A SPY; DEATH DECREED

Marguerite Zelle Macleod Takes Appeal from Court.

PARIS, July 31.—Marguerite Zelle Macleod, known theatrically as Mata Haria, Hindu dancer, was sentenced to death for spying, and appealed. Col. Sempron, presiding over the court martial, is expected to give a ruling soon.

When found guilty and sentenced to death, the dancer paled and almost fainted. Her lawyer, Edouard Clunet, seized her around the waist. Sniffing from her sal volatile bottle, the dancer recovered her composure quickly and walked out unaided.

The dancer was born in the Dutch Indies. She married, divorced her husband and then travelled extensively as a dancer. Three months ago she appeared in a Paris theatre wearing such an airy costume the authorities objected and she cancelled her engagement. She is accused of sending information to the enemy.

CLOSES CONTRACT FOR SERIES OF GREAT FILMS

Dr. F. L. Robinson Signs Up For New Goldwyn Productions Representing Largest Collection of Motion Picture Stars Ever Gathered Together Under One Producing Organization.

The public of Peterborough are to see the greatest motion picture productions during the coming year. Dr. F. L. Robinson, the progressive owner of the Empire Theatre, completed arrangements on a recent trip to Toronto with the Regal Films, whereby he will show Goldwyn pictures exclusively in Peterborough. This is the most important announcement that has ever been made to the motion picture fans of this town.

At Work for Year.

The Goldwyn Picture Corporation represents the largest collection of motion picture stars ever gathered together under one producing organization. Samuel Goldfish, the man responsible for the phenomenal success of the Paramount Pictures, is the head of the new company. Edgar Selwyn, producer of many stage successes, is also an officer of the Goldwyn Corporation. For more than a year this company has been working quietly, gathering the best stage and screen stars obtainable, and also arranging famous stage successes for the screen. During the last six months, the company has been busy working on their first pictures. The company has already spent over one million dollars on the pictures that they have finished up to the present time, and not one production will be exhibited before the middle of September.

Goldwyn has obtained the services of such stars as Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Jane Cowl, Maxine Elliot, Mary Garden, Mabel Normand and Geraldine Farrar. The writers are all well-known to everyone through their novels and articles in the leading magazines of the country. Irvin S. Cobb, Porter Emerson Browne, Margaret Mayo, Roi Cooper Megrue and Arthur Hopkins have been engaged to write the stories for the pictures.

First Pictures Masterpieces.

The first four productions are already well-known to the public as all were adapted from either successful stage plays or novels. The first release will be "Polly of the Circus," a screen adaption of the successful stage play which was written by Margaret Mayo. This is without question the most famous circus romance ever written, and has for its star, Mae Marsh, the heroine of "The Birth of a Nation." Motion picture critics declare this to be the motion picture epic of the year.

For the second release, Madge Kennedy, the most popular stage commedienne, appears in "Baby Mine." This production on the stage was reputed to be the most popular comedy-farce ever presented. The star is known to hundreds of thousands of theatre-goers through her work in the stage successes, "Twin Beds," "Over Night," "Fair and Warmer," and "Little Miss Brown."

The international stage favourite, Maxine Elliot, appears in the third picture, "Fighting Odds." The scenario was written by Irvin S. Cobb, America's foremost humorist, and Roi Cooper Megrue, author of many successful stage plays. Maxine Elliot achieves in this, her screen debut, the greatest success of her entire career.

Jane Cowl, America's greatest emotional actress, takes the leading role in the fourth production, "The Spreading Dawn." This is a screen version of the successful Saturday Evening Post serial by Basil King that delighted millions. Miss Cowl was the heroine of three recent stage successes, "Within the Law," "Lilac Time," and "The Common Clay."

The later releases include Maxine Elliot in "The Eternal Magdelene," Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" and Jane Cowl in "Wild Honey." It will be seen that the most successful stage plays and widely read novels have been obtained by the Goldwyn organization for their productions and the greatest stage and screen stars have been signed to take the leading roles.

High Price Paid.

Dr. Robinson secures these pictures for his theatre at a greater price than he ever paid for a feature programme in his house. One very notable feature of the showing of these pictures is the fact that they will be shown locally shortly after their exhibition in the Strand Theatre, New York, and the Regent Theatre, Toronto. In the past nearly all of the pictures that have been shown have been several months old before they reach this town.

After signing the contract for the Goldwyn Pictures for the coming year, Dr. Robinson said: "I have obtained these productions because I mean to have the best pictures obtainable for my patrons. I have faith in the men behind the Goldwyn company, and am sure that I have the best pictures ever made. I am paying more for these pictures than any others, and am sure that the people of Peterborough will appreciate my efforts in getting the best pictures directly after their New York and Toronto showings."

GEORGE STREET - - NEAR SIMCOE ST

Made Profit Of $5,000 By Sweeping A Dirty Floor

Would you pay $4,000 for the privilege of cleaning a dirty floor? There's a man in New York who made a profit of $5,000 by doing that very thing.

Some months ago a manufacturing jeweller on Pearl Street decided that twenty-five years was long enough for any sane man to work and at once set about the business of retiring. Among his assets was listed the privilege of sweeping the floor of his factory, and he called for bidders.

One offered $1,000, which was refused with open amusement; another bid $2,500 and was turned down, and then a third, after carefully appraising the floor, ceiling and walls, concluded to take a long chance and bid $4,000.

First the bidder had the floor cleaned carefully. Then a carpenter was called in. The floor boards were taken up, and after the sweepings that had piled up under them had been carefully collected new boards were put down. The old boards were planed off, and the shavings, together with the sweepings and the dust from the ceiling and wall, were burned.

Here stepped in the modern alchemist. The ashes were turned over to him, and through a secret process of his own he recovered enough gold, silver and platinum to net the successful bidder a cash profit of $5,000.

Cloths used for cleaning precious metals are saved and burned, when no longer usable and the ashes sent to a refiner to be subjected to a recovery process. Even the water in which the metal workers washed their hands was saved. Poured into barrels, it was allowed to settle and the sediment was taken out, dried and delivered to a refining company for processing.

If a man asks you in an indifferent tone if you have any old gas mantles lying around, don't think he is a harmless lunatic who is collecting them in obedience to the mandates of a diseased mind. He isn't. Each mantle has a tiny bit of precious metal which may be recovered by assaying. There are folks who are making money out of the wornout gas mantles.

And the alchemist! Is he long and spare, with shaggy grey hair and bespectacled eyes staring into the depths of a mysterious conglomeration slowly changing form in the vessel before him? Not at all. He is the typical alert business man. He has an up-to-date office downtown, and his firm runs half a dozen smelters and refineries, salvaging annually from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 from wastage.

While the amounts recovered in individual cases are not large, as a rule, running from $20 to $30 annually for manufacturing jewellers, the aggregate is a fairly respectable sum.

The bookbinders, too, are frugal. Here the same care is exercised to save all waste paper, bindings and covers which have a showing of gold. These are submitted to the test of fire and the ashes turned over to the alchemist for conversion into gold.

Boys Breaking The K. E. Park Lights

Unless it was the Council's intention to have placed electric lamps on the King Edward park band stand to serve as a target for boys throwing stones, some action should be taken to stop this practice. The Park has been put in good condition, and benches have been distributed, but every day finds the benches overturned and thrown around in confusion. If it is necessary to teach the youths of the south end a proper appreciation of public property, the most direct method is to detail a policeman to visit the park at times. It is regrettable, but apparently true, that the worst offenders are young men of seventeen and eighteen years.

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION

Dr. Brown was a phlegmatic man who usually took his own time at answering even urgent calls, but one day he bustled around in a great hurry.

"Mrs. Weaver has sent for me to come and see her boy, and I must go at once," he said.

"What is the matter with the boy?" asked the doctor's wife.

"I don't know," he said, but Mrs. Weaver has a book on "What to Do Before the Doctor Comes," and I must hurry up before she does it."

Factories Sent Their Employees Home To Escape Heat Effects

Solicitous of the health and comfort of their employees the Bonner-Worth Company closed their factory yesterday afternoon because of the torrid temperature that prevailed.

It was practically out of consideration for the many girls employed that shortly after they had returned at 1 o'clock, the management shut off operations and told the staff to spend the afternoon in the coolest places they could find. This commendable action was doubtless not without some sacrifice by the company and it indicated that the management is not unconcerned about the welfare and the best interests of the employees.

Similarly the Colonial Weaving Company ceased work at 5 o'clock, yesterday, and to-day instructed its girl employees that those who wished to remain at home were permitted to do so. As a result most of the girls stayed out this afternoon.

It was stated that the Metal Products Company had installed big fans for the comfort of the women employed in one department, and it was also reported that the intense heat had caused a number of collapses in various factories.

PORT HOPE SHELL FACTORY HAS CLOSED

The Port Hope Guide says:

"Where there is life there is hope" and so long as the wheels continued to turn at the Brandon Shell Factory, the workmen faithfully gave their services For more than four weeks they have been waiting for their promised salary, but all in vain and to-day the outstanding wages amounted to about six thousand dollars Notwithstanding this the men and women worked steadily along and when the seven o'clock whistle sounded this morning they were all on the job again. About two hours after they had commenced operations a representative from the firm of H. W. Petrie, Toronto, arrived to remove the machinery. The employees at once left their benches and flocked to the town hall and made known their grievances to the Police Magistrate. Mr. White gave each one a hearing and will do all in his power to assist them, but it looks like a rather hopeless case. H. W. Petrie Co. have a lien on the machinery and with this gone there is not much left for the employees.

It is unfortunate that such a magnificent plant should meet such a fate, but no fault can be attached to the local authorities, as they have done everything possible to keep the wheels in motion.

According to the agreeemnt with the town, this factory was to employ at least 25 men and pay out in wages $10,000 yearly. Failing to live up to this obligation, the building was to revert to the town. But Mr. Brandon paid a visit to the Harbor Board in the month of September and pointed out, that with this string attached to the building it would be impossible for him to get stock subscribed. He must have the building clear and so as not to cause Mr. Brandon any inconvenience, the Harbor Board immediately passed a resolution to meet Mr. Brandon's desires and, if this resolution holds good, the town to-day is trimmed once more. The agreement, whereby the building was to revert to the town, was approved by the vote of the ratepayers, and we are at loss to know how this agreement could be amended by a resolution of the Harbor Board. It is the duty of our Council to deal with this matter, and at no later date than this evening's meeting. Further, the taxes against the building should be looked after at once.

91 DEGREES IS TO-DAY'S HOTTEST MARK

While the extreme heat still continues, the thermometer to-day did not touch the high figure it did yesterday. This afternoon about 2 o'clock the mercury reached 91 degrees as its highest. Last night was again extremely warm, the lowest figure reached being 73 degrees.—W. P.

Ship Sells For Eight Times Price Paid 3 Years Ago

Three years ago this month, the Chilean ship Puerto Montt, now lying in Port Townsend, changed hands for less than $15,000, says the Seattle Times. Since then she has earned a fortune in freights and now she changes hands again for $125,000, more than eight times the price paid for her in June, 1914.

On her last voyage from the West Coast to Tacoma and Du Pont, the Puerto Montt earned nearly $20,000 gross for her owners. It is estimated that the net proceeds from the voyage equalled the price paid for he vessel three years ago.

Until her sale in June, 1914, the Puerto Montt was owned by French interests. They sold her to R. Duncan & Co., a Chilean firm. Since then she has been a frequent visitor to Puget Sound, bringing nitrates and other cargo from the West Coast and carrying western Washington lumber on the return voyage home. Duncan & Co., according to the advices received, sold the vessel to other Chilean interests a few weeks ago, delivery to be made in Port Townsend. The new owners will take possession in a week or so, their representative now being en voyage up the Pacific.

The Puerto Montt sale gives the latest development as regards the increase in the value of ocean bottoms since the fateful days of August, 1914, when Europe went singing to war. Since then her owners have cleared many times the price they paid for her, voyage after voyage netting figures close to that amount, and now in the sale of the ship they receive back $8 for every $1 given for her in 1914.

In the latter part of May the Puerto Montt completed loading a cargo of lumber for Valparaiso at the Port Ludlow mill of the Puget Mill Company. She shifted to Port Townsend May 28 and has since lain at anchor there, while the deal for her sale was being closed.

"Been hunting to-day, stranger?" "Yes." "Shot anything?" "I don't know yet—I'm waiting for the rest of the party to get into camp so that we can tell the roll."—Country Gentleman.

Girls Brave Lack Of Facilities For Swimming Here

This is the season when the advocates of public swimming places should collect the material for their propaganda if they purpose to continue this year. They should first of all round up the aldermen and take them to the swimming places in order that they may have concrete and visual evidence of this city's demand for just plain, decent facilities. Convince them now that they have been derelict in their duties in the past and that since the people will swim anyway the attendant conditions should be as favourable as the city can provide, and there will be no need for argument and petitions when the ice bonds grip the river again.

It is disgraceful to a city of this size to realize the furtive preparations of hundreds of girls whom the weather simply forces into the water at remote places where there is no supervision or protection.

The parents of these girls are numerous and prominent enough to form a deputation that would move the Council even in winter, but the time to talk swimming place for next year is right now. Hence, Mr. J. W. Worth, Mr. M. E. Ketcheson and other enthusiasts behind this movement might be well advised to act now, if they have not been utterly discouraged by past aldermanic objections.

News Notes From Around The City

Just For a Day.

James Smyth was a policeman for a day. He joined the Thompson squad on Saturday and likewise left on Saturday, ostensibly to return to a munition factory.

An Exchange For Stock Taking.

Mr. R. L. Johnston, of the Hamilton Oak Hall store, is in the city this week helping Mr. M. J. Maher in stock-taking, and according to the new system the company inaugurated, Mr. George Wesley has gone to Hamilton for stock-taking there.

Otonabee's Wheat Falling.

Mr. Edwards of Lang, Otonabee, interrupted his hay harvest this morning to bring a load of cheese into the city. He states that fall wheat cutting is in full swing in Otonabee, and while the average yield per acre may not be unusually large, the grain will be of the best quality. It has headed out and ripened with the result that the kernels are large and firm.

A Comfortable Diversion.

Hot as it was, to-day had a little compensation for the city's employees. The ghost walked and it was an acceptable parade.

For a Real Record.

The weather man's thermometer registers the comparatively cool conditions on Victoria Avenue. Hence, while it was officially 95 degrees yesterday, had W. P. set his instrument on George street about noon, it would have reached 99 or 100 degrees.

No Warm Weather Subject.

Ald. Dobbin exemplifies the mentality that surmounts matter these days by discussing the fuel situation.

Or the Ice Man.

The ideal job for weather of this kind would be driving a snow plough.

Newfoundland Adopts New War Measures

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., July 30.—A bill imposing a tax on excess business profits has been passed by the Newfoundland Legislature. As many lines of business have been unusually prosperous during the last three years it is expected that this will yield a large amount of revenue for the Government.

Other war measures adopted are the creation of a Department of Militia and Defence to ensure a more effective carrying on of the colony's war operations: a provision for food control, with a view to preventing exactions by dealers in foodstuffs, and a system of pensions for soldiers and sailors disabled in the war and the dependents of those who have died while on active service.

Died Like Flies In Soltau Camp

AMSTERDAM, July 30.—The Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant publishes a communication concerning Belgium's civilian population deported to Germany and compelled to perform forced labour while quartered at Soltau Camp. These deported Belgians were distributed over five camps, including Soltau. Efforts were made by the Germans at Soltau to induce the Belgians there to sign a work contract, but only a few signed. The Belgians were then distributed over small subordinate camps near Soltau. The commandants of these sub-detachments were forbidden to permit the Belgian soldiers in the camp to give their compatriots extra food. The food given by the military authorities was so inadequate that some of the deported people fell down from weakness in a few days. The infirmaries were quickly overcrowded, and the worst patients were obliged to be removed to the Soltau hospital. Many died in the infirmaries and a number in the barracks. Thirty-nine died at Lichtenhorst, a sub-camp of Soltau. Almost all died without the consolation of religion. A Belgian priest was not allowed to enter the civilians' camp. In the Soltau hospital three died on an average daily in one month, four on an average daily the following month, and in one day 11 died. In view of the frightful mortality the commandant of the smaller camps repudiated all responsibility, and the deported were reconveyed to Soltau, where, though the food was better, many of the deported died of debility. Ultimately the ration was increased by 100 grammes daily, and soldiers were allowed to give their own food to compatriots. Thereafter the mortality notably diminished. Many of the deported people were sent back to Belgium. No epidemics occurred and almost all died of debility, heart failure, inflammation of the lungs and pleuritis. The doctors were not badly disposed, but obviously discouraged, as the patients had neither good food nor drugs. The dead bodies were obliged to be conveyed for funeral services to the chapel by the soldiers in the camp, but the long processions of coffins were so alarming to the soldiers that those in authority after one month forbade the bodies being brought there, and they were afterwards taken from the mortuary to the churchyard. The Belgian Catholic priest was obliged to leave suddenly without any reason with 500 ill in the hospital and four dead in the mortuary. Three dying in the camp remained without a priest. This was the fate of deported Belgians, at the moment when German authority, it is maintained, is behaving humanely.

PRESS ON ENDING OF SHIPPING DISPUTE

"Ended In the Only Way Possible."

Brooklyn Eagle: "An unfortunate quarrel which had assumed the dimensions of a national scandal has been ended by the President in the only way possible. The resignation of Major General Goethal, as general manager of the Emergency Fleet Corportion has been accepted. The resignation of Chairman William Denman of the Shipping Board, has been forced."

"Would Never Have Arisen"

Pittsburg Press: "The necessity for letting both the General and Denman go—if there actually was such a necessity—would never have arisen if the President had intervened to protect the General from Denman's interference before the latter became so ill-natured, so constant and so open as to create a public scandal."

"Quarrel Passes Into Background."

Baltimore News: "The quarrel passes into the background. The immediate profit from the fact of its settlement is that the United States can now return to its original practical business of raining ships down the throats of submarines till they sink from sheer discouragement."

"No Further Complications."

Providence Journal: "We may well believe that the President has urgently presented the necessities of the case to his new appointees, and we shall all expect that there will be no further untoward complications in the creation of the great fleet that is to help in the defeat of the German submarines."

"Better Now to Look to the Future"

Chicago Tribune: "It is better now to look to the future and not the past. The substitution for General Goethals, if any substitution was to be, of our leading naval constructor, Admiral Capps, cannot but be welcomed. Without disparaging General Goethals' conspicuous administrative gifts it must be remembered that he was an army engineer, and it may very well turn out that Admiral Capps is exactly the man for the head of the emergency fleet corporation."

New System May Work Much Better

Springfield Republican: "If Admiral Capps is impartial enough to press all possible kinds of construction with energy, and if Mr. Hurley is satisfied to look after other shipping problems without interfering in ship construction, the system may work very much better than was possible while jealousy and pride of opinion caused friction."

"Has Been a Costly Controversy."

Buffalo Commercial: "Let us hope that we have heard the last of this disgraceful squabble. It has been a costly controversy. We have lost by the delay 250,000 tons of shipping, with absolutely no excuse for it."

"No Excuse Will be Accepted Now."

Troy Record: No excuse will be accepted now for not rushing construction on thousands of ships. The delay already occasioned by the differences of the emergency fleet corporation and the shipping board and by the inaction of the President makes imperative that not another moment shall be lost."

LITTLE CHANCE OF WORLD'S SERIES OWING TO DRAFT

CHICAGO, July 31.—Amplifying an interview given out in New York in which he urged baseball players not to claim exemption from military service, Ban B. Johnson, president of the American League, said on his arrival here that there is likely to be no world's series this year as a result of the drain on major league clubs by the draft. He said that a tabulation of draft numbers held by players showed that probably twenty-five men would be taken from the American League, and that the league would not play the series if it were handicapped by that serious a loss.

Mr. Johnson added that the military drill installed by the league at the opening of the season would not cause the war department to extend exemptions to ball players until the end of the season. His information, Mr. Johnson said, was that the ball players would be drafted about September 1.

FRENCH REPORTERS A BIT MIXED OVER A BALL GAME

The French are prepared to accept not only the American soldier, but his games. "Excelsior," the only illustrated French daily, carried a large picture on its back page one day last week of a baseball game at Colombes between nines of the American Field Service. The photograph was taken of a batter hitting a wide one. "Excelsior" undertook to explain to its readers the nature of the game, but failed to bring out some of the finer points through the fact that it confused the catcher and the batter.

Thus the picture was titled 'A player goes to catch the ball, which has been missed by the catcher," and underneath ran the following explanation: "We have given in our number of yesterday the rules of baseball, the American national game, of which a game, which is perhaps the first ever played in France, was played yesterday at Colombes, between the soldiers of the American ambulances. Here is an aspect of the game. The pitcher, or thrower of balls, whom one sees in the distance, has sent the ball. The catcher, or 'attrapeur,' who should restrike the ball with his wooden club, has missed it, and a player placed behind him has seized it in its flight."

Peterborough, July 30, 1917.

Editor Eaminer:

Dear Sir,—Having read in your valuable paper re the outing for returned soldiers, what about the wives, mothers and fathers who have lost husbands and sons, men who have fought and paid the supreme sacrifice for their king and country, which includes Peterborough? Could they not be given a treat? Could not they be included in the city officials' generosity? I feel sure every returned soldier would willingly stand down for the widows, orphans and mothers and fathers who have lost a dear one in this great conflict.

Thanking you in anticipation, I remain,

Yours truly,
FAIR PLAY.

NO FAVOURITISM.

To the Edit of the Examiner:

Sir,—The Globe's large type scandal item to-day charging, via Kingston Whig special, that Lieut.-Cols. Brown and Wilson are being retired from headquarters, Kingston, because the Government wishes to promote favourites, is false. I am fully cognizant of this case, and had it from these gentlemen's own lips last week that although they had wanted to get to the front they were needed at Kingston, and remained there, and that the reason they were being retired is that officers from the front will get first chance of home promotion, those in England next and those not out of Canada last, and these officers come under this class, and will go back to civil life to await the call of their class.—Yours, etc.,

J. H. Burnham.

Peterborough, July 30.

Elaborate Sarcasm.

The people of the little frontier town had met to decide upon a suitable name for the place.

"Mr. Chairman," said a man with a rasping voice, rising in the back part of the hall, "I move that we call this village 'Old Glory.'"

"What is your reason for making such a motion as that?" demanded the chairman.

"Because, sir," rejoined the other, "this is nothing but a flag station."

The New Woman Of 1916 Has Been A Result Of The War Conditions

(London Weekly Despatch)

"Well, they're some women," said a tall, gaunt Canadian as the procession of fourteen thousand women workers passed through London yesterday.

He was perilously poised on the top of a taxicab and those standing near cheered him and his sentiments. That was the attitude everywhere yesterday afternoon. Everyone was on the best of terms with every one else, and most of all with the women workers, hundreds of them, marching proudly by with floating banners. It was Women's Day in London and the greatest ovation came from the men in khaki, and those in the familiar faded blue hospital garb.

Women began to gather on the Victoria embankment soon after two o'clock. They came in groups of five or ten first taking their places in their appointed sections and prepared for a long wait, as the procession was booked to start at 3.30. There were women in simple white gowns, women in nursing garb, in the overalls of the munitioners, and the khaki of the Women's Reserve Ambulance. There were sad and worn elderly women with husbands or sons in German prisons.

No section came in for so much notice and chaff—which was returned with interest—as the party of railway engine cleaners rigged up in dark blue dungaree trousers and smock to match. Many of the women had hastened down from their morning shift, without having had a moment to spare for a brush up.

One young girl had come along without her working gear. New dungarees were found in the wagon near by, but the lassie found something wrong and could not get into the overall. A gallant Jack-tar came to the rescue, and amid general amusement his help overcame the difficulty.

The trousers indeed aroused much good-natured badinage. The wearers were aged from eighteen to a grey-haired woman or two of fifty. "Hullo Ma" said a working man to her, "Got the trousers on? * * It ain't the first time you've a'worn the breeks, I'll bet * * Nah they'll want the vote."

The Spectacular Touch.

Women were taking their grandchildren to see the procession. One little baby girl was much excited in the search for mother. At last grandma espied her. "But why has she got daddys trousers on?" was the tremulous question.

No W. S. P. U. procession would be complete without the spectacular touch, so there were floats and tableaux and flowerdecked lorries filled with small, whiteclad boys and girls, children of W.S.P.U. members, and there were countless banners extolling Hughes: "We want Hughes," "Everyone Wants Hughes Except Pro-Germans," "Bring Back Hughes" etc. But it was the groups of women workers which roused the enthusiasm of the great crowds lining the streets. St. Michael (Miss Olive Terry) in shining armour, Joan of Arc (Miss Farmar-Bringhurst) mounted on a staid old horse, Queen Elizabeth in all her glory, the sister nations, France and England, grasping each other firmly on a high waggon, Serbian peasants picturesquely garbed, all these were applauded; but it was the women who are doing the real work who were cheered to the echo.

There were over 300 women from munition factories, in grey, khaki colour, blue, or brown overalls and caps. Most of them were on night shifts and had no sleep, but were in high spirits all the same. "Our manager didn't want us to come," said one of them. He told us it was a suffragette procession, but we came all right. It's for Old Glory all the same, we say." Most of the munition women were tall, straight and young, but here and there one found an old and worn face and stooping figure.

The "Danger Section"

The crowd shrieked itself hoarse when the shell fillers who work in the "Danger Section" went by, marching like young Amazons, some wearing respirators, others wearing white veils and all with hands stained a deep yellow, and sometimes with yellow spotted faces. As this group passed a lorry filled with wounded soldiers the men waved crutches and stumps of arms as a great strapping girl held up her yellow hands and shouted: "We've got scars, too, good for old England!" and a woman here and there in the crowd wiped her eyes even as she smiled. It was English youth showing its grit; it was Britain at her best.

There was none of London's strange reserve in the women's greetings to wounded soldiers in passing conveyances. Never before have Londoners seen so clearly the intense, underlying affection between the firing line and the munitioneers at home.

The women in the Women's Reserve Ambulance Corps marched exceedingly well, and wore their khaki as to the manner born. They were like a group of trained soldiers among recruits. While the procession was lining up a woman brigadier passing in a motor car called to a sectional commander: "Captain—captain," she cried aloud six times. Then a stern "Lizzie" secured Miss "Captain's" attention. She had, unaccustomed to rank, forgotten the lettering upon her shoulder sash!

Ten women gardeners wore loose blue coats and wide trousers, the women grocers were in neat blue cotton frocks with veils round their heads; they are volunteer workers who send packages of food to Belgian depots in London. The ladies who serve at canteens were in coats and skirts, and the chauffeuses, in tan coats and caps, ran their cars slowly and carefully through the crowds.

"Seems like old times," sid a policeman as the last glimpse of purple, white and green left the Embankment. "Only a bigger crowd than the Suffragette procession brought out, and there goes the mascot of all these shows," and he pointed to Miss Billinghurst, the cripple, in her wheeled chair, who has been in every W.S.P.U. procession for years.

At the War Office, where the greatest crowd had gathered, Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Samuel stood on the first balcony above the main entrance. Bareheaded they found the sun too strong and went inside for hats, and immediately afterwards were joined by Mr. Winston Churchill, who stood in the centre with the new War Miniser on his left hand

Mr. Lloyd George was loudly cheered by all the sections as they passed by, and he again and again acknowledged the cheers and beamed upon his new-found helpers who had rallied around his munition banner.

The "Canaries".

Among all these brave women were numbers of "munition casualties"—the wounded women Tommies of the work-shops. Their hands and faces were yellow as the long lost sovereign. Marching bravely in the procession. London yesterday had an object lesson from these women—"canaries" th munition towns call them—that can never be forgot.

Here was an object lesson of what women are doing in the war—daily risking their health, undermining their constitution, voluntarily suffering unsightly disfigurement. Wages could not buy that heroic, self-sacrificing devotion to the men in the trenches.

These yellow women were the soul of the procession. None of the hundreds of thousands who saw them could again doubt whether it is the women's war, too.

In the absence of Mrs. Pankhurst in America, Miss Annie Kenney told a representative of the Weekly Despatch of the changed attitude of London towards women.

"No one," she said, "even in the wildest flights of fancy gave women credit for the wonderful changes war could bring out.

"Could any woman, or man, have seen those disfigured women shell-workers without a rising lump in the throat? I have seen hundreds of such women. The girls can only work in those T.N.T. sheds for a short span. But there is never a lack of more to fill their places—though they know, too, will come out disfigured as their predecessors.

"There is no suffrage question today.

"And until a full and lasting victory is achieved women will have no political axe to grind.

Heading Off Trouble In Restless Ireland

DUBLIN, July 30.—Lieutenant-General Bryan Thomas Mahon, commander-in-chief of the British forces in Ireland, issued an order under the Defence of the Realm Act, forbidding the wearing of uniforms of a military character except by State forces, and the carrying of weapons except for lawful employment or pastime. The order will immediately affect volunteer bodies formed in recent years.

Dundee Re-elects Winston Churchill

LONDON, July 31.— Winston Spencer Churchill was re-elected yesterday member of the House of Commons for Dundee, the by-election being made necessary by his recent appointment to a Cabinet position. Mr. Churchill polled 7,302 votes. His opponent, Edmund Scrymgour, prohibitionist and Labourite, received 2,045 votes.

Brave Russian Women Shoulder Rifles And Fight In The Ranks

LONDON.—The news that Lida Shimky, a strongly-built Russian girl of 2[illegible] who for some months fought in the Russian ranks, is now lying in one of the Riga hospitals, severely wounded, reminds one that there are quite a number of girls fighting in the Russian ranks, worthy prototypes of the fabulous race of female warriors in Scythia. Lida Shimky entered the Lettish Rifle Battalion last autumn, passing off as an attested man, and fought so valiantly that when her sex was discovered she was allowed to remain in the ranks. This is the second time she has been wounded.

These women fighters are not new Russian "bylini" (sages) are full of to Russian history. The ancient stories describing the gallant deeds of young "polenitsi," the maids of pre-historic Russia, who, side by side with their fathers and brothers, defended their tribal homesteads against the savage bands of robbers operating in the northern backwoods of Russia.

WOMEN IN ARMOR.

In 628, when the Greeks inflicted a crushing defeat on the fleet of Russian gallery which approached the ancient Constantinople (even then the possession of the "King City," as the Russians called it, was the dream of Russia's rulers), they found a number of fair-haired, blue-eyed maidens among the crews of the Russian galleys. Again in 971, after the battle of Dorostol, the victorious Greeks were amazed to find Russian women warriors in male attire and shining armor among the dead and the wounded.

IN ALL NATIONAL WARS.

Right through Russian history we find women fighters in the Russian ranks whenever Russia is fighting a truly national war. It is a noteworthy fact that it is only such wars, when Russia is fighting for her very existence, that produce these amazons. While hundreds of Russian women fought in the Napoleonic war, in the Crimean campaign, and in the present war, no such woman warriors were heard of in the Russo-Japanese war of a dozen years ago.

It would thus seem that it is not a mere love of adventure that brings these women to the battlefield, but a more deeply rooted passion springing from the same source as the general patriotic upheaval of the nation.

Gen. A. D. Nicoloev, who in time of peace is known better as a brilliant military historian but who now commands a Russian division on the eastern front, has made, with the assistance of some of his others, a special study of this question namely, the active participation of Russian women in the present war, and the results of their investigations form a comprehensive volume.

WITH EVERY REGIMENT

There is now scarcely a regiment in the Russian army without one or two women warriors. They are mostly girls or young women of the better classes. A certain percentage of them, although a minority, are actuated primarily by a romantic impulse, by a desire to be near their sweethearts or husbands in the firing line. Others are there to avenge their beloved dead, but the majority have been prompted purely by militant patriotism.

They invariably join a regiment on the march to the front, when all formalities with regard to volunteers are usually waived. They try hard to pass as men, and very often succeed in doing so. Time after time their identity has been discovered only at a hospital after they have been wounded.

Intersting Story Of Escaped Prisoner

Escaped Doctor Tells of Experiances —Luxembourgers Now Embittered Against Prussians.

Some inside facts about the life of the prisoners in a Prussian internment camp were disclosed last night by Dr. A. M. Mars, of San Francisco, Cal., who arrived at an Atlantic port on board a Spanish steamship. Although he is an American citizen of French parentage and has lived in the United States since he was two years old, Dr. Mars, who is the publisher of l'Avenir, a French paper in San Francisco, was seized in Luxembourg by the Prussian army and kept a prisoner for more than two years.

When taken to the Prussian internment camp, at Die Kirch, he was treated as roughly as were the other prisoners. Finally there was a serious outbreak of dysentry among both the Prussians and prisoners. He showed the army officers in charge that he could remedy the condition of the men and they permitted him to do so.

Drugged His Guards.

His work in this emergency altered his status and the Prussians allowed Dr. Mars to sleep and eat with the officers of the guard from that time on until he made his escape. He gave a sleeping potion to the two officers and, donning the uniform of one of them, got past the sentries into the open.

Dr. Mars said it took him two months to reach Madrid after suffering many hardships, and being forced to eat grass and leaves at times. It came easy to live this way he said, after his experience in the internment camp, where the prisoners and others subsisted on a stew made from peelings of potatoes, grass and black rice.

Even Rice Failed.

At the last the rice failed the Prussians, as it could not be obtained from Turkey. Water and artificial coffee were the only beverages for the 3,000 prisoners at the camp. Many were too weak to try to escape. When they did so they were bitten by the watchdogs that were trained to bite any one not wearing the Prussian uniform. Dr. Mars was able to escape the dogs on account of his borrowed uniform.

Forced to Factory Work.

"British and Belgian prisoners receive the worst sort of treatment unless they work hard in the Prussian factories," he said.

Dr. Mars stated that the people of Luxembourg, who at one time were in favour of the Prussians, changed their attitude when they suffered at the hands of the army. Now their Grand Duchess, Marie Adelaide, is a prisoner in her castle and the people are greatly embittered against the Prussian invaders.

Kaiser Not Popular.

He said that even the Prussian guards of the camp were losing hope that Germany would win the war, and that they hated Von Hindenberg and also criticised the Kaiser and ruthlessness.

A couple of Kentuckians, meeting in a feud district, according to an exchange, one asked the other:

"Look here, Bill, what did you shoot at me for? I ain't got no quarrel, didn't you?"

"You had a feud with Ben Walker, didn't you?"

"But Ben's dead."

"Well I'm his executor."—New York Tribune.

Yes, Builds You Up in 5 to 10 Days

Iron For the Blood and Phosphorus For the Nerves

Weak, nervous run-down, nervous persons will be glad to know that they can be restored health to their youth vigor by the discovery of this new drug called Ironized Phosphorus with Iron.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. Now you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the cure of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their grave, ruins health, makes you weak, runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron acts directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. You start to day and take one or three tablets of Ironized Phosphorus with Iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger.

This drug does not not like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is discussed by one druggist in each city. F. G. Wester dispenses it for Peterborough.

FOUR THOUSAND GERMAN PRISONERS TAKEN

Sir Joseph Flavelle Replies To Charges Made By G. W. Kyte

He Explains Arrangements For Space For Bacon Export on Munition Ships—Received No Favours For Private Contracts—Minister of Shipping Responsible.

SUPPLIES FOR GOVERNMENT

OTTAWA, Aug. 1.—In the Commons yesterday afternoon Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance, gave notice that to-day he would give a statement respecting the railway situation in Canada and certain financial proposals designed by the Government to meet the situation. Sir Robert Borden informed Hon. Frank Oliver that he was still waiting for further information regarding the suppression of "The Fiddler."

Sir George Foster read a letter from Sir Joseph Flavelle, head of the Imperial Munition Board, regarding a statement made by George W. Kyte, of Richmond, yesterday to the effect that the rumor was current that the William Davies Packing Company was able to secure space for its products on munitions ships going to England. Sir Joseph stated in his letter than the inference to be drawn from that statement was that he, as head of the Imperial Munitions Board was able to secure preferential treatment as to space for the Davies Company. It should, he said, be sufficient to state that the Davies Company was under contract with the British Government to supply so much per week. Arrangement for space were made by the Minister of Shipping, and the company had nothing to do with it.

RECEIVED NO FAVOURS

For private cantracts the company had to get its space in common with all other companies. Sir George Foster moved the third reading of this bill for the formation of a technical and industrial research committee, but before the bill was allowed to go further Mr. A. K. MacLean of Halifax, went on record as opposed to the personel of the board. He did not think the country could expect any practical results from the board. Those who were paid were not, he believed competent to carry on the work mentioned. The others could only come once or twice a year and could give little of their time. He thought the head of the commission should be a young man of administrative and executive experience. Sir George Foster said that only the administration chairman was paid. He declared that the board met once every month. The bill received the third reading.

"A NEFARIOUS PROPOSAL"

Mr. J. G. Turriff took advantage of a motion to go into supply to bring to the attention of the House to the present regulation regarding the sending of parcels to Canadian prisoners of war in Germany. Prior to last Christmas, he said, the relatives of prisoners were allowed to send whatever they desired. After that a charge was made, and they were prohibited from sending such parcels unless to officers. This was one of the grounds of which Mr. Turriff complained. The work had been handed over to the Red Cross, and though he had every respect for this great organisation and its work, but judging by results in this case its work had been absolutely unsatisfactory. It had neither been thoroughly nor well done. The proposal had been made said Mr. Turriff, that prisoners should contribute out of their pay toward the Red Cross. He considered this a nefarious proposal.

BRITISH CAPTURE ST. JULIEN

Ground Lost Two Years Ago Recaptured by the British—Four Thousand German Prisoners

DRIVE CONTINUES

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The British have captured St. Julien, Hooge and eight other big villages, with four thousand German prisoners and some guns in the present big offensive, which still continues.

The most titanic concentration of men and engines of destruction the world has ever known, was still juggernauting its bloody way over the German lines to-day. In twenty-four hours the war monster, representing England's and France's supreme efforts, has spread over thirty square miles. An area of that size, blackened by a rain of shells such as even the greatest of wars has not heretofore seen, and dyed probably by blood of thousands, has so far been wrenched from the invader. London is not counting the cost today. It expects great human sacrifice. It hopes, however, that the stroke may be so aimed that Germany must relinquish her submarine bases on the coast. The count of prisoners has not yet been reported, but it will reach at least 5,000. German losses in killed and wounded will be staggering. Line after line of German trenches were literally levelled into crumbling earth by the British artillery, the concrete emplacements being reduced to dusty fragments. Britain and France are driving at what military experts have judged to be the most vulnerable spot in the German line.

THE U-BOAT CREW.

Alas, alas for those blonde boys who stalk
Their prey in ambush of the shuddering seas,
Whiling the wait with merry, tender talk
Of some dear knot of flower-clad cottages
Beyond the Rhine! The merchantship draws on;
Their swift torpedo strikes its mark; the sea
Moans with the dying; for a victory won
They thank the pagan god of Germany.

Happier to die the hideous, smothering death,
Too deep for mercy, in their own snared trap,
Than live to learn how time interpreteth
The cause they served—the tragical mishap
Of pride that pledged The Day and brought The Night:
Than live to loathe their Fatherland, a name
So high, so fallen, that betrayed their bright
Young loyalty to savageries of shame.

KATHARINE LEE BATES

Most Of Those Physically Fit Must Serve Under Tightening Of Draft Rules

Disability Exemptions Are Estimated at Twenty-five Per Cent—Geological Survey Provides a Test—One-Fourth of the Men, Used to Out of Door Life, Are Rejected.

REJECTED LIST WILL BE LARGE

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 1.—General tightening of the regulations governing exemptions from service in the new National Army which is to be formed this week is foreshadowed by the instructions sent to all local examining boards by Brigadier General Enoch H. Crowder, provost marshal general. Only those men whose services are actually required elsewhere will be excused. The burden of proof will be with the individual.

War Department officials are determined to get all the men needed for the armies that are to be hurled against the Prussians from the men whose names have been drawn. They want to avoid asking Congress, at least for some time to come, to change the age limit.

Prospects that there will be more men disqualified for physical reasons than at first anticipated makes it essential, army officers assert, that the strictest possible rules be followed in granting exemptions.

It is to impress the local exemption boards with their grave responsibilities in granting exemptions that the instructions were sent out by General Crowder. The fear has been in the minds of officials constantly that local boards, feeling that there were many men from which to draw, would be lenient in some instances in granting exemptions. There has been no idea that any of the boards, which are composed of leading citizens of the various communities, would play politics of favour certain individual with influences, but it is realised that the boards, upon pressure, might satisfy themselves in their own minds in granting some exemptions which should not be granted.

PHYSICALLY FIT TO SERVE.

That is not to be permitted. Every man who is physically fit for service will be compelled to be ready any time he is called, in order of the numbers drawn at the Capitol ten days ago. Where there are exemptions there must be no reason for doubt that they are justified. The district appeals boards will attend to that after the local boards have passed on every case.

Notices have been sent out from all the exemption boards, officials of the War Department have been advised, notifying those whose names were drawn first to be on hand for examination. The examinations in the East and Middle West will be the first to be held, because the receipt of the "master lists" mailed from Washington last Tuesday, were received in those sections first. In the West and Pacific coast States the examinations will run into next week, perhaps.

Preliminary and unofficial reports indicate that the number of men who will be rejected on physical grounds will be large. Originally the War Department officials figured that the number of rejections on physical grounds would be twenty-five per cent. Later the figure was increased to forty per cent. Now the talk is that it may be more. There may be a letting down on the physical requirement later. The War Department wants an army of men as nearly perfect as possible. There have been no real, general tests of men drawn which will show a fair percentage of those who will show a fair percentage of those who will be rejected on physical grounds, but there are a few instances which have come to the attention of the officials.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY TEST

One or them is the examination of the field force of the United States Geological Survey, which has been commissioned and placed in the federal service to do mapping in France That field force is composed of about eighty, chiefly men who have lived for years in the open in carrying on their field work in the United States. Of the eighty there were twenty-two, or more than twenty-five per cent., who failed to pass the army physical tests.

In one district in Chicago, which got to work early, there have been sixty-one men examined of the 160 ordered to appear. The men were from various walks in life, and the number found to be physically unfit for service was in excess of twenty-five per cent.

The fear is that when the physicians get down to examining the rank and file of the men drawn, especially men who follow indoor occupations, the percentage of physically unfit will increase. The prevailing ailments are said to be hernia, flat feet, hemorrhoids and poor eyesight.

The uncertainty concerning the physical percentage has brought the War Department to a determined stand that all men whose services are not actually required elsewhere must be prepared to join the colors. There are to be no exemptions on technical grounds. Married men who ask for release merely on the ground that they are married will not be permitted to get off. They must prove to the satisfaction of the exemption boards, and if not them, the appeal boards, that the wife actually is dependent upon the husband's services. There are many men who have independent means or whose wives have independent means sufficient for their support.

Similarly, the exemptions based on agricultural and industrial grounds will be held to a minimum.

The general trend of the War Department's ideas in that regard was demonstrated several days ago in an order issued by General Crowder declining to exempt coal miners as a class, even though coal is essential to the operation of factories turning out war materials.

Presentation To Leo Flood Of Ennismore

Prizes Awarded to Successful Pupils at Recent Entrance Examinations

Leo. Flood of Ennismore was the winner of the gold watch donated by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., for the pupil taking the highest percentage at the entrance examination, while Patrick Perdue and Miss Velma Lowes of School Section Number Seven Emily township, were both claimants for the five-dollar gold piece awarded by Mr. Jas. Lynch of this city to the second on the list.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., will give a five-dollar gold piece to Miss Lowes. Leo. Flood and Patrick Perdue were both pupils of Miss V. Galvin of Ennismore township.

The presentation was made Monday evening. Among the visitors from the city were Mr. J. H. Burnham, Mr. G. A. Gillespie, His Honour Judge Huycke, Ald. A. H. Stratton, Mr. G. S. Helson, Mr. James Lynch and Mr. W. A. Pratten.

Reeve John Young of Ennismore Township, who presided, made an excellent chairman. Following the presentation to the successful student, Mr. Burnham gave an instructive address, during which he praised the educational work accomplished by Father Fitzpatrick, a former parish priest of Ennismore, and which is now being continued by his successor, Rev. Father McGuire. Mr. Burnham expressed regret at the illness of Father McGuire, who is now in St. Joseph's Hospital.

His Honour Judge Huycke gave an interesting address, and was followed by Mr. G. A. Gillespie and Ald. Stratton. Later in the evening Mr. Burnham presented a prize to Miss Clara Murphy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Murphy, in recognition of her ability to name an apple two years ago which even the experts of the Ottawa Experimental Farm were unable to classify.

An orchestra comprising Miss Agnes Scollard, J. E. Galvin, and P. Padigan rendered an excellent musical programme. Miss Galvin contributed two solos and other vocal selections were rendered by Mrs. J. E. Donahue and Miss Lottie Donahue.

The singing of the National Anthem brought a very pleasant evening to a close.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

How They Got Rid of Him

By MARJORIE CLOUGH

The village of Bubbling Rock—named for a spring from which gushed an abundance of pure water—was a very quiet community. There were a couple of dozen married couples with children—some grown to manhood and womanhood, but most of them still children. For Bubbling Rock was a new settlement in the new colony of Virginia, and old persons are seldom pioneers. The inhabitants cultivated the tobacco plant, at which they made a good living, and so long as they were free to worship God in their own way they were content.

But the peace of Bubbling Rock was destined to be interrupted. A man—an unmarried man—came there from Jamestown, who taught the men of the town to which he came games of chance. He not only won their money, but set them to gambling among themselves. This interchange of their funds with one another would not have been objectionable if it had not set them to quarreling. For there is nothing that will so soon make enemies of friends as winning each other's money. Instead of working the men were constantly gambling, and not only was the tobacco neglected but not a day passed but there was a fracas.

When a number of men who had previously been fast friends had bloodied one another's noses and one man had been killed, the wives and mothers of Bubbling Rock put their heads together with a view to getting rid of the instigator of the trouble. The deliberations were behind closed doors, and the women were pledged not to reveal the plan adopted.

Those were the days when the population of Virginia was kept up and increased by shipments of persons of all grades, from the younger sons of noblemen to the most hardened criminal. The highest and the lowest met on shipboard and on arrival scattered themselves over the new country.

To the surprise of the husbands of Bubbling Rock their wives suddenly seemed to take a fancy to the gambler who had made all the trouble. They invited him to their houses, and one or two of those having the most seductive tongues held up before him the advantages of matrimony.

"Get married," said Mrs. Ralston, "and become one of us. It is only as a husband that you can achieve real happiness. This is a lonely country, and its loneliness can only be done away with by the companionship that is to be found in wedlock."

"Where shall I find a wife?" asked the gambler. "There are five men to one woman in the colony."

"Leave that to me," replied the lady. "I'll find you a wife who I will guarantee will change your life completely. She is coming out from England and is due to arrive within a fortnight."

The gambler seemed grateful for the kindly interest the lady took in his welfare and expressed himself glad at the prospect of meeting her friend.

Ten days later a ship arrived from England, bringing a cargo of women sent out to be wives for the single men of the colony. Mrs. Ralston boarded the vessel and was closeted with the captain for a few minutes, at the end of which time he summoned a young woman, to whom he said:

"You need not be put up with the rest for a husband. This lady will provide for you." Then he left the two women together.

Eunice Dargan, the young woman who had just arrived, was rather small and had mild blue eyes and golden tresses. She was the comeliest of all the women on the ship. Mrs. Ralston took her ashore with her and domiciled her under her own roof. That night she sent for the gambler and introduced him to her friend.

The next day the man for whom this gentle lass was intended discharged the cost of her transportation in tobacco and there was a wedding at the house of Mrs. Ralston.

That night the stillness of the settlement was broken by voices raised in anger emanating from the home of the man the lady had arranged to make happy. A man and a woman's voice were raised alternately in crescendo, the woman's constantly gaining the ascendancy till the sound of some heavy weight striking against the wall of the house put an end to the man's side of the argument. Then the slamming of a door was heard and all was still.

The next morning all the men in Bubbling Rock peeped from their windows to see what had been the end of the previous bridal night amenities. Not so the women. They were all posted. When the door of the gambler's home opened the meek looking bride stepped forth. Then every woman in Bubbling Rock knew that the gambler had vanished.

When the plan adopted by the wives to get rid of the gambler leaked out it was learned that on the arrival of the cargo of women sent over for wives Mrs. Ralston had asked the captain for the one bearing the worst reputation of all. He had produced the blue eyed, golden haired creature, who looked as gentle as a fawn. She had troubled the police of London more than any other person in that wicked city. To get rid of her they had sent her to Virginia.

The problem remained to get rid of the means by which the gambler was ejected. This was accomplished by giving her to an Indian chief. Then for the first time in her life she behaved herself.

China's Population.

Something near ninety-five per cent. of the population of China is confined to one-third of the area of the country, with a density of two hundred to the square mile. Five per cent. of the population inhabits sixty-five per cent. of the area, with a density of ten to the square mile. Lack of transportation facilities and the absence of adequate means of protection account for the sparseness of settlement in the outlying dependencies. About forty per cent. of China's population is in the provinces south of the Yangtse River, with a density of two hundred and thirty to the square mile.

WOMAN GIVEN TWO DAYS

To Make Up Her Mind for Surgical Operation. She Refused; Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"One year ago I was very sick and I suffered with pains in my side and back until I nearly went crazy. I went to different doctors and they all said I had female trouble and would not get any relief until I would be operated on. I had suffered for four years before this time, but I kept getting worse the more I took. Every month since I was a young girl I had suffered with cramps in my sides at periods and was never regular. I saw your advertisement in the newspaper and the picture of a woman who had been saved from an operation and this picture was impressed on my mind. The doctor had given me only two more days to make up my mind so I sent my husband to the drug store at once for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and believe me, I only took four doses before I felt a change and when I had finished the third bottle I was cured and never felt better. I grant you the privilege to publish my letter and am only too glad to let other women know of my cure."—Mrs. THOS. McGONIGAL, 3432 Hartville Street, Phila., Pa.

We Can Help You Stimulate Business

A little stimulation in Midsummer may put you back in the running again, and even yet, if you concentrate your efforts, use liberally the means that have made others prosper in your line of business you can succeed as they did.

Some Merchants Say:—

"As Soon as Business Picks Up I'll Advertise"

This is not consistent. The farmer does not wait until harvest time to sow his seed—and, remember this, that if you ever reach the point in business where you believe you can get along without advertising, somebody else will own your business. ¶ It isn't the age of a house that counts most. It's the efficient, up-to-date, daily publicity that brings its goods before the buyers that spells SUCCESS.

If it's ADVERTISING—let us talk it over with you. Our service is at your disposal at any time.

SUBALTERNS' SCHOOL

"Discipline yourself first." The words, clearcut and precise, came from the top of the college hall. "You must get discipline by personal example." A hundred cadets sat perfectly still, rose to their feet as the officer took up his hat, and stood stiffly to attention as he passed. The lecture was over. Take a look at the men as they file out, note-books in hand. A bronzed, upright, crowd of young men in officer-like clothes, you notice, without the stars of rank. Some are over thirty, a few barely twenty, but mostly they are between the two ages—a manly lot. One in every ten or so wears a ribbon, a Distinguished Conduct or Military Medal. They were serious-faced a few moments ago, but now there is a boyish fun-loving mood creeping over their faces. They have open faces, straight eyes that have been used to looking death full in the face. Ninety per cent. have seen active service of twelve months or thereabouts—a few twice that time—and mainly they have won their stripes (that they took off on becoming officer-cadets), and the recommendation for commissions which brought them home, in the field. From the field they came direct to England to this school.

SUBSTITUTE FOR WAR

Eskimos Settle Disputes by Dancing or Singing Contest

Mr. Christian Leden, a young Norwegian explorer, who has lived among most of the tribes of Eskimos, believes that in many respects the Eskimos are the happiest people in the world, and that in many respects their civilization is the highest existing today. Mr. Leden has spent most of his time since 1909 living among the Eskimos, and he knows most of the tribes that have been discovered by white men. He recently returned from a sojourn of three years and a half among the Eskimos of Canada.

"In some ways we can learn as much from the Eskimo," says Mr. Leden, "as he can learn from us. We commonly think that the world ends where the timber line ends and where the great Arctic waste begins. The Eskimo thinks that the world ends where the ice ends and where the timber begins. In many respects the Eskimo civilization is the highest in the world."

For instance, the Eskimos never indulge in tribal warfare. They cannot conceive how one whole nation can make war on another. Occasionally there are fights or duels between two Eskimos, but even these affairs are rare, and, as a rule, are carried out with a cold-blooded formality that would astound us. One method for settling a dispute between two men is for them to swap blows until one cries quits. A offers his shoulder to B to strike, then B does the same for A. Then A permits B to hit him on the temple, and again B reciprocates. This goes on until one man has had enough, but there is never any temper shown. This is usually just in sport to see who can stand the hardest blows. As a rule, however, the real disputes between two individuals are settled in another way—by a sort of competition.

The two disputants try to outdance each other or outsing each other, and when the judges have decreed one the more proficient, honor is satisfied. But the idea of men marching out to kill other men whom they have never seen is incomprehensible to them.

KERENSKY'S ANSWER

Enough to Shame One Coward in a Regiment

The following incident occurred on the Northern front in Russia. M. Kerensky, Minister of War, was addressing a concourse of soldiers in advanced positions. One of the men interrupted, saying, "If we attack all will perish, and the dead have no use for liberty on land." He was continuing in the same strain when M. Kerensky made the scathing reply: "The best Russians during long years have not gone to the scaffold to enable the first coward to put his own selfish interests above those of his country and people. He who trembles for his skin is unworthy of liberty."

M. Kerensky requested the colonel to turn the soldier out of the army. The colonel asked for authority to treat similarly five or six others, thus shaming the whole regiment. "No, one is enough," M. Kerensky replied, and, addressing the soldiers, he said: "You cannot possibly share the opinions of this coward?" "No!" shouted the men, "we don't; we back you, and are willing to die if necessary." M. Kerensky: "I don't doubt you, comrades."

The lieutenant of the company to which the disgraced soldier belonged afterwards spoke to M. Kerensky, and said that the rear was responsible for the lost enthusiasm of the front and the inability of the army to attack. When drafts were dispatched only lists arrived, and banners glorifying liberty.

ON DUTY IN PALACE

Italian Minister from Toronto Attached to Red Cross Work

Rev. N. Cacciapuoti, minister in charge of the Methodist Italian Mission in Toronto, wrote from Italy as follows: "Italians have made up their minds to achieve impossible things, and the Austrians are face to face with a crushing defeat, which, we hope, will put an end to this world tragedy. I am proud to hear that Canadian troops are crowning themselves with never-dying glory, fighting against the German army, which is reeling back before their sledge hammer blows.

"I am now on duty in the royal palace. The British Red Cross has presented our Queen with a well-equipped shop for the making of artificial limbs for our wounded and disabled soldiers. Instructors of the orthopedic work are some English officers. I am like a bridge between them and the Italian soldiers and workers, and am in charge of the discipline of the shop. Her Majesty the Queen takes a personal interest in what is being done. She comes every day to the shop, and I report to her. The King, too, comes when he happens to be in Rome."

BAGS POPULAR.

Bags become more and more ornamental. They bear, as a rule, some relation to the dress with which they are carried. The morning bag of leather or other substantial fabric which assists in bringing home the ornamental trimmings of the family meals by the sensible souls who go to market is replaced in the afternoon by a brocade, satin or embroidered crepe de chine bag. Then there is the evening bag, a thing of great and special elegance always, at least a collateral relation of the dress. We do certainly all belong to the great army of bag-women.

If you wish to soften butter quickly, turn a thoroughly heated bowl over it.

Ammonia will relieve the burn from iodin which has been put on too thickly.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfils that purpose as nothing else can.

Among The Glaciers

STAND with me on the summit of a Canadian Pacific Rocky Mountain. What a wondrous panorama is unfolded: not only of peaks and ranges, tier on tier, line on line, but of vast glittering fields of snow and ice, making a white world of the upper heights, a region of eternal winter in striking contrast of the flower-covered beds of the valleys a mile below us, or the green of the alpine meadows and the forest depths.

We are standing in a realm where rivers of ice flow, for it is one of the manifold wonders of nature that these huge snaky lines of ice are slowly but surely moving down the mountain slopes to their death in a terminal moraine. And while they thus travel down hill, they are at the same shrinking, so that with few exceptions they show a gradual recession which is marked in some glaciers by scientific study, huge boulders carrying the year when the toe of the glacier reached that spot, with later markings indicating the shrinking process. The Illecillewaet Glacier, for example, receded up the valley, between 1890 and 1898, a distance of no less than 962 feet.

The Illecillewaet glacier, in the Selkirks, is one of the largest remaining glacial deposits in the Canadian ranges, a gigantic icy river of green and white-flowing valleyward with a magnificent sweep. Longfellow's description comes to mind as one gazes on the scene as "a glittering gauntlet which the frost king has thrown in defiance of the sun," and so it seems as it glitters back its radiance from its white bosom and its crystal architecture.

Or stand on Lefroy or Hungabee, or better still, on Temple, in the Lake Louise region, and again the eye is held in thrall with the colossal [illegible] and the icy glaciers on every peak. Who will forget that superb view of the Victoria Glacier from the Lake Louise Chalet, or the white masses on the lofty roofs of the Ten Peaks, when a full moon floods them with silver light? The sheen of a hundred sparkling waterfalls makes a drapery, while at times the ear is bombarded with the sound of a mighty avalanche tumbling from inconceivable heights.

The wonder of the glacier is more fully realized when they are explored at close quarters, when their fantastic caverns and awesome fissures are entered or crossed, when the mountain climber picks his way over a mass of ice masses thrown up as if in mortal agony by the pressure of the upper deposits that cause the downward movement. Yonder is the snow field from which the glacier flows, here is a "bergschrund" as the ugly-looking crevasse is called that separates the glacier from the mountain side. Seracs — curious ice towers — look like monuments of the gods, and the tongue or snout marks the end of the glacier from whence flow the melting waters that mark the birth of great rivers.

In this vast Canadian Garden of the Gods, of Rockies and Selkirks, in which scores of Switzerlands could be put, nothing is more wonderful than the great glaciers ever journeying to their obliteration, ever sweeping toward the valley beds.

OUR DUTY—FIGHT OR GIVE

(American Lumberman).

A mighty nation strips for war. Let the eye turn where it will, there is no escaping the precursor of approaching combat. And except a Power beyond that of man intervene America will soon seal her devotion to high ideals of liberty and justice with the blood of her bravest sons.

Thousands of gallant lads, perhaps among them our own sons, may keep their "rendesvous with death" in flaming town or at disputed barricade long "ere spring trips north again." May God forbid, but against that hour we must make immediate and adequate preparation.

As President Wilson has well said in his proclamation designating Red Cross Week, only a small proportion of our people can have the opportunity or are fitted to serve the country upon the actual field of battle, but all—men, women and children alike—can serve effectively by insuring proper care for those under arms. In the words of the national slogan for Red Cross Week, we are out to win this war, and everyone must FIGHT OR GIVE—and the time to do the latter is RIGHT NOW!

Indian Slaves of South America.

Timid, cringing, taking off his hat respectfully to every white man he meets, the Indian of the west coast of South America is a pitiable object.

In the cities he shares with the burro the honor of being everybody's burden bearer. No one but an Indian will be seen with even the smallest package, and you can engage a detachment of the "children of the sun" to carry home anything from half a pound of tea to a 200 pound trunk. You pay him what you will; he dares not chaffer about price with a white man.

On the great plantations and in the mines the Indian is a virtual slave. There is no free agricultural labor on the west coast. Four days a week the peon must work for the great landholders at the munificent wage of 10 cents a day. The rest of the time he may devote to his own acre or two, which must feed and clothe his family. —World Outlook.

Round Towers of Ireland.

No one knows exactly when or why the round towers in Ireland were built, but some believe that the druids erected them as watch towers and places to which to go for safety in time of danger. A good many of the towers have the tops broken down, and those which show the cone tops intact have mostly been restored. There is no door on the ground, the doors being purposely built at about ten or fifteen feet from the ground and were reached by ladders. After the people had climbed inside they drew their ladders up after them and thus were out of reach of the Danes who frequently invaded the country. The tiny windows of these towers are far up toward the top also. About eighty round towers remain in Ireland, but only a few of them are perfect. According to one authority, they were probably built between the ninth and thirteenth centuries.

Two Freaks of Nature.

Two contrasting freaks of nature are the Island of Fire and the Lake of Snow. The Island of Fire is called the Home of Hot Devils. It is situated in the midst of a large lake of boiling mud in the island of Java. The steam and gases which arise from the sticky mud form themselves into bubbles, attaining a diameter of five or six feet, and sail high up in the air like balloons, carried hither and thither by the wind and finally exploding with a loud crash.

The biggest snow lake is seen from the summit of Hispar pass, in the Karakoram range. It is more than 300 square miles in area. In Switzerland the sea of ice might better be called the sea of snow, as the surface is broken up by solar heat, which makes a minute fissuring in the ice, giving it the appearance of snow.

When a Man Is Most Efficient.

In the American Magazine Dean Herman Schneider of the School of Engineering of the University of Cincinnati says:

"A man is most efficient when he is doing the work that gives him the greatest satisfaction. From the laborer to the business executive, every man should get three things out of work—a decent living, development and discipline and satisfaction in the doing.

"If your job gives these to you give back to it the best work of your hand and brain. If it fails to give you these face the fact that you are a misfit and seek your appointed place. You have no right to let life remain separated from its two handmaids—liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Animals and Rhythm.

Animals have no sense of rhythm, though they may be taught to "dance." This is the announcement of Dr. Craig of the University of Maine. "Horses driven in span," he says in the Guide to Nature, "make no attempt to step together. Two birds, however sweetly they sing solo, never sing in time with one another nor with any other music. Even the so called dancing animals of the circus get their rhythm from the trainer, not from the tune."

A Telescope His Tomb.

After Keeler had become head of the Lick observatory and died there and his ashes were brought back to Allegheny for burial it was his friend Brashear who sealed them up in their last resting place, a hollow in the supporting pillar of the thirty inch reflector, which is Keeler's memoral.

Earthquakes are subterranean disturbances propagated through the earth in a series of elastic waves. How they originate is not clearly known. Many are associated with volcanic action, while just as many occur without any evidence of such association.

Gray Hairs Can't Make You Old.

People do not grow old so fast as they used to. Time was when the fathers and the mothers seldom left home.

They would not think of taking part in any sort of frivolous conversation.

Grandfather and father, too, went around the house with a "dark as the tomb" sort of face, and if the young folk got too hilarious "Tut, tut," you would hear them say.

Now granddad enjoys a good play, a football game, and a baseball game makes him as young as the next one.

Bravo! That is the right idea. Don't give up to the gray hairs.

Silver threads should not absorb all the golden hues from your life.

Keep abreast of the times. Read up so you can converse with your children on modern topics.

Interest yourself in their work and their play. Help them play and you will keep your heart young.

Henry James' Adverbs.

Stevenson spotted the unconscionable repetition of certain adjectives in "Roderick Hudson," but probably the most marked characteristic of Henry James' style is his passion for adverbs and adverbial clauses. He is the most adverbial of English writers. You will find more adverbs to the page than even in Meredith. And he had a quaint habit of putting the adverb before the verb, when most writers would put it after. One of his ladies (for examples are taken at random) "thankfully felt," another "quite beautifully and tenderly smiled." And "after all" crops up all over the place. But one would not have these things altered; they were part of the man. One does object to them, however, in his imitators, who have learned the trick, but missed the spirit behind it.—London Chronicle.

Chewing the Crude Rubber.

About the first process rubber goes through on the way to become a tire or tube is mastication. After the crude Para is washed it is broken up into lumps and tossed into the crackers. These are machines with heavy rollers, which take the rubber in between them and chew it. Entering the masticating room of a factory, the first impression is that there is a brush fire burning or else there is a den of snakes at hand. The rubber snaps and crackles like burning branches and then hisses shudderingly. The stuff is kept at until it comes up in regular sheets, very thin and looking like a sort of cake dusted with crumbs. Then after thorough drying in vacuum chambers it is ready to be put in with the chemicals and other things that make up the compound.

A Hint For Young Romeos.

If the hero has no bad habits he should acquire some or at least lead her to believe that he has one or two. Courtship isn't complete unless the heroine can beg him to quit something that is destroying his sweet health or, worse still, something that makes him almost a bold, bad man. She used to beg and beg us to quit gambling, and a few years after the wedding she was cruel enough to tell us that she knew all the time that we were not a gambler. She was just humoring us.—Claude Callan in Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

A Deed of Daring.

Asked what was the bravest deed he had ever seen, Lord Roberts said he remembered that while he was on his way to Lucknow his force was stopped by a walled inclosure. A little soldier, a Punjabi Mohammedan, seeing the difficulty, endeavored to open the door which barred the way. When he tried first to draw the bolt one of his hands was cut off by one of the enemy; then he managed to unfasten the bolt with his other hand, which was subsequently nearly severed from the wrist.

What Is a Bath?

What is a bath? Is it the simple bath of hot or cold water and soap, or the Turkish bath of hot air or the Russian one of steam, or the mud bath of St. Amand-les-Eaux, or the compressed air bath of Reichenhall, or the baths of wine favored by famous beauties, or the sun bath of modern hygienists, or the Laplander's plunge into the hot blubber of a just killed whale, or the bath of asses' milk, to provide which for his consort an Earl of Portman bought cheap the Portman estate north of Oxford street as a farm to keep a herd of asses? Now, which of these, think you, is a bath?—London Chronicle.

Wheat Market Strong Yesterday

Flour Situation Is Unsettled—The Cattle Markets

Manitoba cash wheat was in demand yesterday, the market going up two cents over Monday's quotations for store, Fort William prices. Ontario wheat was also quoted nominally higher. In the speculative markets some of the shorts were caught in their July wheat and oats deals, this being the best day of the month for delivery. Towards the close of the market there was a rush for wheat, and but little offering. Bids jumped July wheat up 13 cents, touching the maximum fixed price at $2.76, the market finally closing at $2.74. July oats were run up to 85c. at Chicago, and to 83 at Winnipeg, the latter closing at 80 1-2c. The October wheat option was weak, the market closing four cents below yesterday. Flour situation is unsettled. Ontario flour going up 20 cents to-day, after a decline Monday of 25 cents.

Cattle Markets.

Union Stock Yards— Receipts, 22 cars, with 291 cattle, 80 calves, 295 hogs, and 101 sheep and lambs.

With a very light run of cattle in yesterday, the market was comparatively quiet, and prices about steady with yesterday. Good demand for choice butcher, but these were scarce in yesterday's offerings.

Calves were firm.

Sheep steady and lambs strong, at a further advance to $15, for the best lots.

There were scarcely enough hogs on sale to make a market, but prices were firm to 25c. higher.

STUDY AIRPLANE DISEASES.

Varnish Used in Coating Wings Causes Illness among Workmen.

Workmen engaged in the manufacture of airplanes are subject to various diseases caused by some of the materials used in manfacture, and especially by the varnish used in making the wings and other parts of the planes, impervious to water and air. Because of the experiences of workmen in Europe engaged in the making of planes, the State Industrial Commission directed its Bureau of Inspection to make an investigation of the conditions of the eight factories in this State where planes are made.

Reports received from English and German investigators were to the effect that numerous cases of illness and many deaths occurred among the men and women employed in the airplane factories. Dr. Lester Roos and Dr. Rosalie Bell of the commission, who made the investigation in this State, have just submitted their report, which says that, inasmuch as the industry of making airplanes and hydroseroplanes is in its infancy in the United States, methods should be adopted to save the employees from danger before the industry grows so great as to threaten lives. A list of precautions that should be taken by those in charge of the factories, has been prepared by the commission. In the list appear these suggestions:

"In airplane factories where the waterproofing varnish is used a downward system of ventilation should be furnished.

"Each morning and afternoon should be interrupted by a fifteen minute rest period, men to go into the open air during these periods.

"Hot running water, soap and individual towels, also overalls, should be provided for the workers.

"Any workers who complain of dizziness or sleepiness should be immediately removed from the work for 48 hours."

An attachment for camera carrying cases that also carries tripods when folded has been patented by an Iowa inventor.

Madrid gets its eletricity for lighting and power from a hydro-electric plant 120 miles from the city.

Most of the lead mined in the United States is smelted in three states —Missouri, Idaho and Utah.

Accurate Timekeepers.

The most perfect clocks are used in astronomical observations. One of these has run for months, with an average error of only one fifteen-thousandth of a second a day. In order to run so perfectly a clock must not only be constructed and adjusted with the greatest care, but must be installed in a special room, such as an underground vault, where the temperature is practically uniform. It must also be free from jar or vibration and must, therefore, be mounted on a heavy masonry pier. Lastly, it should always be kept under the same barometric pressure, and this may be effected by inclosing it in a glass or metal case, from which the air is partially exhausted. In order that the case may not be opened or disturbed the winding is done automatically by electricity, the frequency of the winding in some cases being as often as every minute. Only pendulum clocks can attain the highest degree of accuracy. —Wall Street Journal.

Naval Chronometers.

With a view to providing the exact time for chronometers used on warships, the navy department has a master clock in a vault under the Naval observatory, where the temperature is never allowed to vary more than the hundredth part of a degree. This evenness of temperature is ensured by means of a thermostat and a small electric stove. When the temperature rises the two-hundredth part of a degree above normal the thermostat automatically turns off the stove. When it falls below normal the stove starts working again. Sometimes the electric bulb is switched off and on again over a dozen times a minute. Before being dispatched from the observatory all chronometers are kept under close scrutiny in a room hung around with wet cloths. This is done so as to accustom them as far as possible to the conditions of moisture which prevail at sea.

The City of Silence.

Amyclae, an ancient town of Laconia, situated on the eastern bank of the Eurotas, was a famous city in the heroic age. It was the abode of Tyndarus and his spouse, Leda; of Castor and Pollux, who are hence called the "Amyclaean Brothers." It was only shortly before the first Messenian war (743-724 B. C.) that the town was conquered by the Spartan king Teleclus. The inhabitants had been so often alarmed by false reports of the approach of the Spartans that, growing tired of living in a state of continual alarm, they decreed that no one should henceforth mention or even take notice of these disagreeable fictions, and accordingly when the Spartans at last came no one dared to announce their approach; hence arose the Greek saying, "Amyclae perished through silence."

A Dissected Plateau.

Standing on a hilltop almost anywhere in New England on a clear day and looking around at the horizon one notices that the high level surfaces of one hill after another approach the plane of the circular sky line. It requires but little imagination to recognise in the successive hilltops the remains of the even and continuous surface of what was once a great plain, from which the valleys of today have been carved by the erosive action of flowing water. This is most easily recognised from a considerable elevation, especially in the broad upland high level areas of western Massachusetts at Whitcomb hills, on the Mohawk trail. This is termed a dissected plateau.—Geological Survey Bulletin.

Cultivating the Soil.

Nitrogen is the most costly and most necessary of all elements of fertilizers, and therefore anything aiding nitrification tends to increased fertility. Deep stirring is one solution, and the longer a soil has been cultivated the deeper and more thoroughly should it be stirred. Rich virgin soils should be plowed more shallow or too much surface nitrification takes place, resulting in rank vegetation.

Air and Temperature.

Heaviest air is coldest, and a clear, still atmosphere allows this to settle down to the soil, though it may be ten degrees warmer ten feet higher. Wind keeps the colder air from settling and mixes it with warmer strata at varying heights, so that all near the earth is of uniform temperature.

Books of Youth.

The books that charmed us in youth recall the delight ever afterwards; we are hardly persuaded there are like them any deserving equally our affections. Fortunate if the best books fall in our way during this susceptible and forming period of our lives.—Alcott.

Three Days at Once.

Three days can exist at the same time! It sounds impossible, but it is nevertheless a fact that when it is very late Sunday night at Attu island, Alaska, it is Monday noon in London and Tuesday morning at Cape Deshnef, Siberia!

Swimming With a Cold.

In an address before the leading ear, nose and throat specialists of the country Dr. Hill Hastings of Los Angeles recently called attention to the danger of a person's swimming, and particularly diving, when he has a cold in the head. Comparatively few persons realise that it is dangerous, and many even believe that when they have recovered from a cold and are still annoyed by excessive thick secretions in the nose they can find relief by diving or plunging the head under water. The purulent matter washed out is not only a danger to others, says Dr. Hastings, but the diver himself runs a risk of forcing some of the pus into his middle ear. Most specialists have observed that cases of mastoid abscess are common every summer during the swimming season. At the large ear, nose and throat hospitals it is recognized that the swimming season invariably brings on "a crop of masteids." The advice to keep out of the water until a "head cold" is entirely cleared up cannot be too strongly emphasized.

Our idea of an optimist is a farmer who thinks he could live happily in town on $40 a month.

Sincerity is the basis of all true friendship. Without sincerity it is like a ship without ballast.

In Spain very few horseshoers have forges in their shops. They make their shoes without the aid of a fire, a possibility largely due to the pure, soft, ductile iron primarily manufactured with wood and charcoal.

ALLIES CONSOLIDATE ALL THEIR GAINS

ALL GERMAN COUNTER ATTACKS FAIL

Heavy Rain Did Not Impede British Progress and Positions Are Improved in Minor Operations South of the Ypres-Comines Canal.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

(By Carl D. Groat, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, August 1.—The United States will talk specific terms of peace only when Germany is beaten. This is the decision of the Government as the allied democracies enter upon the fourth year of the world struggle. Behind it are found the reasons for America's refusal to support now the retention by France of Alsace-Lorraine as a peace provision. It further reveals that the United States is committed to press through to the finish, side by side with her allies. And it may be stated with authority that there is an understanding among all these nations—America included—that there will be no separate peace.

The Government to-day is concerned only with victory. The Government refuses to state even what terms it has in mind—if any—though the belief is that the allies now have a comman understanding with this country as to how far the war should proceed, and what must be wrested from Germany when victory comes.

COPENHAGEN, August 1.—Kaiser Wilhelm disclaims all idea of ambitious schemes of conquest as the aims of the war, in his annual war anniversary proclamation, part of the text of which was received here to-day. "We stand erect at the gear's close," he said. "Immovable victorious intrepid. Hard tyals await us, but we shall meet them with grave mien and full faith."

LONDON, August 1.—A heavy driving rain did not impede the British forward progress in their great drive to-day. Field Marshal Haig reported in the neighbourhood of Ypres-Roulers railway the British artillery had crushed a German counter attack which formed during the night. He said rain had been falling steadily since early yesterday. Haig's report declared all gains had been consolidated during the night, and all German counter-attacks repulsed. The only offensive fighting, however, was in the nature of "minor operations" south of the Ypres-Comines Canal, where the British positions were improved.

PARIS, August 1.—In a "torrent of rain" the French forces assisting in the great drive in Belgium succeeded in consolidating all the ground they won yesterday, according to to-day's war official report. The statement likewise detailed further advances by General Petain's troops on another front—the Chemin Des Dames. On the Aisne throughout the front artillery fire was continued, the War Office reported. East of Corny the French counter-attacked vigorously and progressed. All German counter-attacks were repulsed.

LONDON, July 31.—The official statement from British headquarters in France to-night reports the capture by the allies of the following villages: La Basseeville, Steenstraete, Bixschoote, Verlorenhoek, Frezenberg, Saint Julien, Pilkem, Hooge, Westhoek and Hollebeke, and more than 3,500 prisoners. The reports from Sir Douglas Haig read:

Afternoon—"In conjunction with the French troops operating on our left we attacked at 3.50 o'clock this morning on a wide front north of the River Lys.

"The allied troops have captured their first objectives on the whole front attacked, and are reported to be making satisfactory progress at all points.

"Considerable numbers of prisoners already have been captured."

Evening—"The operations of the allied troops begun this morning in the neighbourhood of Ypres have been continued with success during the day despite unfavourable weather. The enemy's positions have been entered and our line has been advanced on a front of over 15 miles, from La Basseeville, on the River Lys, to Steenstraete, on the River Yser. Both of these villages are now in the hands of the allies.

"On the extreme left the French troops, acting in close co-operation with and protecting the left flank of the British forces, captured the village of Steenstraete and rapidly penetrated the German defences to a depth of nearly two miles. Having gained their objectives for the day at an early hour, they continued their attack with the greatest gallantry beyond their original objectives and captured Bixschoote and the enemy's positions to the southeast and west of the village on a front of nearly two and a half miles, including the Kortekerrt Inn.

"During the afternoon a hostile counter-attack was successfully repulsed.

"In the centre and on the left centre British divisions penetrated the enemy's positions to a depth of two miles and secured crossings on the River Steenbeek, which constituted their final objectives.

"In the course of their attack our troops stormed two powerful defensive systems and carried by assault the villages of Verlorenhoek, Frezenberg, Saint Julien and Pilkem ,and many strongly-defended farms, woods and organized localities.

"Further south, in the right centre of our attack, after gaining the whole of their first objectives, which included the village of Hooge and Sanctuary Wood, our troops fought their way forward against very obstinate resistance from the enemy in a difficult country in the neighbourhood of the Ypres open road and carried the village of Westhoek. In this neighbourhood, where heavy fighting has taken place throughout the day, and still continues, we have penetrated the enemy's defences to a depth of about a mile. A number of powerful counter-attacks have been successfully repulsed.

"On the extreme right, south of the Zillebeke-Zandvoord Road, our troops gained the whole of their objectives early in the day, capturing the villages of La Basseeville and Hollebeke.

"In addition to heavy casualties inflicted on the enemy, over 3,500 prisoners have already been brought in, but no accurate estimate of our captures can yet be made."

ENEMY FRONT BROKEN BY RUSSO-ROUMANIANS

PETROGRAD, August 1. — Russo-Roumanian advances between the Cassin and Putna Valleys resulted in the enemy losing between July 24 and 26, ninety-eight guns and about 4,500 prisoners. Enemy front of forty miles was broken to a depth of between eleven and thirteen miles.

300 DEATHS FROM THE HEAT

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.— More than 3,00 persons have perished and more than 800 have been prostrated by the terrific heat of the last three days throughout the country. In the west to-day some relief came through rains, but the east continued to swelter. In New York alone the total deaths will reach fifty, and prostrations had amounted to 180 by noon to-day.

WAR VETERANS ARRANGE DETAILS OF BIG EXCURSION

Returned Soldiers and Their Families Will Visit Idyl Wyld—Two Steamers Have Been Chartered For the Occasion

SUNDAY'S MEETING

At a largely attended special meeting of the Great War Veterans' Association held in the Barrie Building, arrangements were made for the commemoration of the thiid anniversary of the beginning of the war. There will be a mass meeting in Victoria Park on Sunday night next, to which all returned soldiers in Peterborough will parade.

On Friday, August 10th, the earliest date on which steam boat accommodation could be secured, the War Veterans and their families will be entertained at a picnic at Rice Lake.

Ald. Duncan, Stratton and Dobbin represented the City Council at last night's meeting, at which the arrangements were discussed. The Steamers Stoney Lake and Geneva have been secured for August 10th and the objective of the excursion will be Idyl Wyld, if Mr. Hooper, owner of that beautiful spot is agreeable. All returned soldiers in Peterborough and their families are expected to attend this picnic and the War Veterans wish to extend a hearty invitation to the widows and children of Peterborough soldiers who have died overseas to be on hand and share in the pleasure of the outing.

It is desired that every returned soldier who intends to go on the excursion should leave his name at club headquarters, Barrie Building, as soon as possible, together with information as to the number of people he will bring with him so that the committee will be able to get a line on the accommodation needed..

All members of the Great War Veterans who have not received their three months' extra pay are asked to call at club headquarters and sign the paper which will be found there. The Dominion executive of the G.W.V.A. is taking this matter up and the Peterborough branch is anxious to have the names of all members who have not been paid this money. It should be understood, however, that the Veterans are only fighting the battle of their own members and that any returned soldier who wants the efforts of the Dominion Association exerted on his part should join the Peterborough branch if he has not already done so. There were a dozen members enrolled last night, and the membership of the Peterborough branch is close to the 100 mark.

At last night's meeting, cigars and chewing gum were very kindly provided by Yeates Bros and the members wish to express their appreciation of the firm's kindness.

All returned soldiers are asked to meet at the Barrie Building on Sunday night at 7.45 o'clock in uniform to parade to Victoria Park for the mass meeting.

President Dalliday was in the chair at last night's meeting. Sidney Whatley is acting as secretary during the illness of Secretary T. R. Cooper.

ATTENDED FUNERAL.

Chief Thompson's Brother-in-Law Was Gored to Death.

Chief Thompson returned last night from London, Ont., where he attended on Sunday the funeral of his brother-in-law, Mr. David H. Carrol, a farmer living near London, who was gored to death by a bull. The deceased, who was 46 years old, had established a large purebred Holstein stock farm.

Funeral Of Late Mrs. Joseph Quinn

The funeral of the late Mrs. Joseph Quinn, who died on Monday in Winnipeg, will be held to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock to the Sacred Heart Church, thence to St. Peter's cemetery from the residence of Mrs. Quinn's father, Mr. Timothy Mulcahey.

WANT CONSCRIPTION ENFORCED AT ONCE

Peterborough veterans of the Great War want to see conscription put into force at once. At last night's meeting in the Barrie Building it was unanimously decided to prepare a resolution to be read at the mass meeting on the third anniversary of the war on Sunday next. The resolution will call upon the Dominion Government to put the Military Service Act into force immediately without waiting for an election. The War Veterans know how badly reinforcements are needed, and they are anxious to see that there is no delay.

LIEUT. DON. MUNRO FORMER LOCAL BOY IS REPORTED KILLED

Former Employee of the C. G. E. Test Department Meets Death While on Duty With the Royal Flying Corps—To-day's General Military News.

Word was received bw some of his Peterborough friends last night of the death as the result of an accident, of Lieut. D. R. (Don) Munro, of the Royal Flying Corps. Lieut. Munro's home was in Amherst, Nova Scotia, and coming to Peterborough he was employed for a time in the test department of the Canadian General Electric Company, where he was particularly well known.

Lieut. Munro enlisted at Ottawa with the Flying Corps. His many friends in Peterborough will be shocked to hear of his tragic death, of which no particulars have yet been received.

Pte. J. H. Lawson, of the 109th Battalion, who was reported in the Examiner last night as wounded, is a cousin of Mrs. John Trotter, 155 Lake street. Mrs. Trotter has had two cousins and an uncle wounded and one brother killed within the past year. If all Canadian families were doing their bit as well there would be no need of conscription.

Mrs. and Mr. Adam Davidson have received a message bearing the good news that their son, Driver Adam Davidson, (No. 203) is on his way to Canada, having been granted a furlough for six months' leave. Driver Davidson left Toronto for the front when war was declared and no doubt all his friends will be glad to see him home once more. His mother does not just know what his condition is, as he is coming by hospital ship.

PTE. CLARENCE KENNEDY

Toronto, August 1.—"Private Clarence Kennedy was severely wounded in the wrist on July 17th, and has been admitted to the 26th hospital, Etaples," was the message received by his wife. His former address was 76 College street, and although two requests were sent to Ottawa to change to 173 Brunswick Avenue, the telegram went the old way. Private Kennedy enlisted with the 126rd Battalion on December 4th, 1915, went overseas in July, 1916, and has been in the firing line since August 1916. He has said little about his engagements, confining his remarks to sore feet, one of which has arch trouble He was born in Peterborough, 23 years ago, but came to Toronto to live when a small boy, and was in the employ of T. Eaton and Co. Mrs. Kennedy is a member of Bloor street Baptist Church. She and a little girl of six months live on Brunswick Avenue

The Kingston Whig says:

A meeting of the returned officers and men from overseas was held last evening for the purpose of forming a branch of the Great War Veteran Association of Canada. The meeting wishes it distinctly understood that this is in no sense antagonistic to any local organization, but simply to link veterans up with the great Dominion-wide association which is doing such important work for returned men at the present time.

The organizing secretary of the Great War Veteran Association will be asked to address a public meeting in Kingston next week in the City Hall, of which notice in the press will be duly given.

PLATTSBURG, N.Y., July 31.—The first trench veteran to speak at the officers' training camp here was Captain S. A. Dion ,of Ottawa, of the Canadian army, who gave a talk on trench bombs before a conference of company instructors yesterday afternoon. Captain Dion was a bombing officer with the Canadian overseas army, and was wounded in action and invalided home. The ship on which he engaged passage for his return to Canada was torpedoed and the Canadian officer was picked up clinging to a spar by a British patrol boat.

For a time Captain Dion was bombing instructor at the Valcartier training camp. He is now on leave of absence from Canada and is attached to the junior Plattsburg private military camp for boys of the preparatory school age, situated at Long Point, about eight miles north of Plattsburg.

Captain Dion showed the officers the various bombs used by the British forces, and explained their construction.

Chicago, July 31.—British recruiting officers were counting [illegible] to-day on a total of at least 4,000 men from the Chicago district for service under the Union Jack. The big rally last week resulted in the enrolment of 650 men.

NEW YORK, July 31.—The British Recruiting Mission reported to-day that 238 British subjects were enlisted for the British and Canadian armies throughout the United States yesterday. Chicago, New York city and San Francisco in the order named, led all other cities in the number of recruits.

The official said the recruiting campaign is arousing British citizens in the United States, and they expected enlistments for the British and Canadian armies soon will reach a thousand a week.

OTTAWA, July 31.—On motion to go into supply, Mr. J. G. Turriff brought up the matter of the prevention of sending parcels direct to Canadian soldiers who are prisoners in Germany. Last Christmas, he said, a change had been made which prohibited the sending of parcels of food, etc., direct from Canada to Canadian soldiers unless they were officers. Mr. Turriff protested against this discrimination. He was aware that parcels could be sent through the Red Cross Society in London, but this work was not done thoroughly or well. He had a great parcel of protests from parents, sisters and other relatives of Canadian soldiers.

Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of Militia, said that action had been taken on the recommendation of Sir George Perley, that no more parcels be sent direct, but that the money be sent to the Red Cross in London, by whom parcels would be forwarded. It had been decided, however, to revise this regulation, and after August 1 parcels could be sent direct to men as well as officers. Sir Edward Kemp said there might have been irregularities, but he paid tribute to the work of the Red Cross in London, a tribute in which Premier Borden concurred.

Hon. Charles Marcil directed attention to the report that an arrangement had been made between Britain and Germany for the exchange of prisoners. He asked if Canadians would be affected, and whether steps could be taken, under the arrangement for the release of Hon. Dr. Beland. Sir Edward Kemp replied that he was asking the Imperial authorities for information. He had no reason to doubt the arrangement would cover Canadians.

LONDON, July 31.—The Canadian Press understands the new arrangements between the British and German Governments concerning the return of prisoners is unlikely to affect Canadian prisoners for some time at least. There will be many prisoners from English sources, such as those taken at Mons, who will receive consideration first. Therefore, although many Canadians have been in captivity almost a couple of years, they cannot be dealt with for some time.

About the most impossible thing possible is the millionaire in comic opera.

Epoch-Making Drive Launched By Allies

Big Gains Made By British and French Between River Lys and Boesinghe—First Three Lines of Enemy Trenches Taken.

VILLAGES ARE CAPTURED

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

BRITISH FRONT IN FRANCE AND BELGIUM, July 31. — An epoch-making offensive, launched by the British and French against the German lines between the River Lys and Boesinghe at daybreak, has, with few exceptions, accomplished all that had been planned for the first day of this battle, which in its early stages, gives promise of being the greatest conflict of the war.

Roughly speaking, the British penetrated positions held by Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, between Boesinghe and Warneton, and at the time of filing this despatch, were in possession of the first three lines of the German trenches at most points throughout this front.

Reports received from the French troops, which are attacking on the difficult territory between Dixmude and a point near Boesinghe, say that they have forced their way across this marsh-studded and partly inundated region and captured the first two lines of German trenches.

The casualties of the Entente Allies have been surprisingly light, and the morale of the men continues at the highest pitch. The contact between the British and French armies has been constant and excellent.

Late to-day it was reported that the Germans had begun a heavy counter-attack at the point where the allied forces join.

The German front line trenches, which had been torn to pieces by the preliminary bombardment, offered little resistance, but once the allied forces had penetrated beyond them they met with fierce resistance at many points. Directly east of Zillebeke and again a little to the north the British were temporarily held up by a heavy machine gun fire, but only temporarily, for the troops charged through the rain of lead and forced the Germans from their positions in hand-to-hand fighting.

Again at a redoubt which was strongly held in the German line and defended by concrete fortifications, the British were brought to a stand by machine gun fire. But they charged with bayonets and dislodged the Germans.

Charged Through Their Own Barrage

One of the most striking and spectacular events of the day's fighting occurred at the so-called Menin Tunnel, a great underground fortification constructed by the Germans on the Menin road opposite Hooge. The British preliminary bombardment had forced the Germans to hold the French line thinly here, and the British division, which was to attack at dawn lay out all night in shell holes within 25 yards of the German line waiting for the signal to advance. When the time arrived for the charge, and the British gunners had dropped a protecting barrage on the German front trench ahead of the British troops, it was seen that the Germans had taken to their heels and were fleeing.

The British, seeing their prey escaping, went mad and charged directly through their own barrage, fortunately without heavy casualties. The Menin Tunnel, which was expected to be occupied by several hundred Germans, was found to be held by only 41, the rest having retreated.

It was only at the second line that the British met resistance, and here, after sharp hand-to-hand fighting, was seen that the Germans had taken No check has yet been made on the number of German prisoners captured, but they are flowing in a steady stream back of the British lines. Many of those capture dat the Menin Tunnel and other points are mere boys.

VICTORIA PARK IS CHOSEN FOR SUNDAY NIGHT'S MEETING

Commemoration of Britain's Entry Into the War By the Citizens—Will Begin at 8:15 O'clock

PROGRAMME ARRANGED

Sunday night's public meeting to observe the third anniversary of Great Britain's declaration of war will be held at 8.15 o'clock in Victoria Park. Acting-Mayor Duncan has had letters sent to the Ministerial Association requesting that the regular church services be abbreviated to enable the congregations to attend on time. He will act as chairman and addresses will be given by His Honour Judge Huycke, His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P.P. and Mr. George A. Gillespie, M.P.P. The War Veterans will be present, and arrangements are being made for a band. It is with a deeply solemn spirit that this third anniversary is approached, and this will be the sentiment of Sunday night's meeting. It is assumed that the citizens will attend in large numbers and that the occasion will be fittingly celebrated by them practically in a body.

Impressive Service Held in Warsaw

WARSAW, Aug. 1.—A very impressive service was held in the Town Hall on Sunday evening, July 29th in memory of Ptes. Percy Brew, Samuel Scott and Frank Armstrong who were killed in action in France in June. All three were members of Warsaw L.O.L., and as a mark of respect the members of the Lodge marched in a body to the service. W. M. Charles Tighe presided at the service which was taken by Rev. H. Brown of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. J. J. Robbins of St. Mark's Anglican church. In the course of his address, Mr. Brown spoke of another member of his church, Corp. Clayton Selkirk, who was killed in action on June 23rd, and who was well known in the community.

The Warsaw Women's Institute has sent another shipment of boxes to Dummer boys in khaki. The contents were all home made, and each boy was sent a generous piece of fruit cake, several dozen cookies and home made candy.

The regular meeting of the Women's Institute will be held on Thursday, August 9th.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 1, 1917.

PETERBOROUGH NEGLECTED.

Peterborough has been shabbily rewarded for its devotion to the support of the Borden government. It has steadily supported Sir Robert Borden, Hon. Bob Rogers, and the anti-British Nationalist members of the government, and as a reward cannot get even a Senator appointed for Peterborough. In the last new batch the claims of Peterborough have been entirely overlooked. "Our member" might have put up a claim. If he could have done nothing else in case of refusal or opposition to his demands for a Peterborough Senator he could have "kicked over the traces," as he did in the matter of conscription of wealth. Doing this in the interests of his own popularity with a certain element he might have taken an equally strong stand in the matter of enforcing recognition of Peterborough's claim to a Senatorship

The Ottawa defenders of the extortion of the food manipulators, appreciate the benefits of cold storage.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

The conditions to which Canada has been brought by the disintegrating influences encouraged and fostered by the personnel and party of the present government, make justifiable the demand that after fifty years of existence the Canadian Federation will have to be remade. Conditions have developed in Canada in which are inherent similar conditions of deadlock to those that called for Confederation as a solution half a century ago. The present conditions are not quite identical in character, but the necessity for new departure is the same. Instead of being unity there is schism between the elements of the country. It is claimed that one province, Quebec, is isolated from a large part of the Dominion by sentiment as well as language, and extremists fail to find words strong enough to describe the attitude of Quebec towards the rest of Canada, and its duty in relation to the war. Yet these extremists chiefly belong to the party, or the party leaders responsible more or less directly for the Quebec of to-day, and the political conditions that demand some reconstruction upon party lines to save Confederation and to "save the face" of Canada in the present crisis.

There is no doubt whatever that the aloofness of Quebec from the rest of Canada in the matter of national aid to the Empire and its allies in this war; her indifference; her hostility to compulsory service, are a direct result of the debauching of the national sentiment by the anti-British cult of Nationalism, a doctrine of owing no duty to Great Britain, and no obligation to help her in just warfare. This doctrine preached by a few disaffected agitators, had little or no standing or influence till within the past few years. It was first put on its feet by the election of a candidate of its cult in Drummond-Arthabaska, and the result the triumph of an anti-British cause, and a means of "killing Laurier," was applauded by Mr. Borden, leader of the Opposition; and one of his lieutenants sent a telegram of congratulation to the victorious anti-Britain. Thus Nationalism was given a start and a standing. In the elections of 1911, Nationalist candidates were helped by Conservative election funds, with the result that about twenty were elected and pledged their support to Mr. Borden on condition of his killing that British monstrosity, the Laurier plan of a Canadian navy. Mr. Borden did better for Nationalism than that; he took its apostles by the hand and "made them to lie down in green pastures" of pap—made three of them Ministers of the Crown—to which they held they owed no duty. Meantime the anti-British doctrine of Nationalism was preached in every parish in Quebec, and the common people heard it the more gladly because it was endorsed, embraced and rewarded with fat offices by the government of the country. Thus Nationalism killed recruiting in Quebec, and if Quebec is a disappointment to the rest of Canada and the Empire, the blame rests upon Nationalism and those who gave it a standing and official recognition. And if we find the country split into factions, the historic parties at loggerheads, and a deadlock in prospect, the most lightly-thinking, in view of the facts, can have little difficulty in tracing and placing the blame of the present unsatisfactory condition of national affairs, and national and imperial interests.

Does the government at Ottawa, with its reeking record, really think it is worthy of sole custody of a great enterprise like conscription?

PREPARING FOR THE FUTURE.

This war has worked a wide revolution in all respects. It has changed our outlook and has even affected our political, industrial, commercial and domestic conditions. It has changed the character of our social and personal relations. In many ways we shall be living in a new world when the war is over. There will be many obstacles to returning to the status quo ante bellum. There will be necessity for devising and adopting many schemes of readjustment and reorganization.

The most important problems are presented in relation to our industrial activities. We are devoting our chief attention at present to the manufacture of munitions. When the war ends this industry will be at an end, and there will be much idle labour and capital, and much special machinery rendered useless.

As people of resource we must face the changed conditions and prepare for a return to normal conditions of manufacturing, or the adoption of new forms which circumstances may render necessary. An illustration of the necessity of preparing for the future is furnished by the decision of the Ackerman Company to adopt a new form of industrial production in preparation for the changed conditions that have been created in their business.

The wise act of foresight of the company mentioned, should furnish an example to all our people. A little, or indeed, a good deal of precautionary enterprise of this character will go far towards preventing an universal "slump," such as will come if wise and general measures of readjustment are not taken. The war would have been over long ago, and perhaps never have taken place, if Great Britain and her allies had been as well prepared as Germany. This fact illustrates the value of preparedness, something that appeals specially to us Canadians in view of the necessity of readjustment and reconstruction that faces us.

While this necessity involves every form of industry and occupation, it bears most directly upon our transportation problems and interests. The submarine feature of the war accounts for immense loss of shipping, and the replacing of the destroyed tonnage is a matter of vital importance. Shipbuilding, therefore, interests Canada specially, both on account of our great expanse of some 2,500 miles of internal navigation, and on account of our export trade. Canada must be prepared to provide transportation in the interests of internal development, and as a complement to the policy of home utilization of our resources. Logically home manufacture of our resources involves the policy of ourselves sending the products to the ultimate markets in our own shipping.

It seems to be the duty of the government to take more direct interest in encouraging shipbuilding enterprises. Government assistance in the form of generous subsidies is necessary to stimulate shipbuilding in Canada. The initial cost of a shipbuilding plant is very large, and large capital is a necessity, and with our inexperience, we cannot compete with British builders in the matter of cost, without, at least, initial, government assistance. Shipbuilding in Canada should be encouraged, because the shipping is a decided necessity. It should also be encouraged to promote the development of our resources, and the stimulation it will give to other industries. We have abundance of coal and iron. We make in Canada most of the materials that enter into the construction of a ship but we produce little of the equipment, such as winches, windlasses, anchors, chains, and similar things, so that in preparing for the production of these things there is an immense field for industrial development.

It is evident that upon our industrial development in a wide range, depends our prosperous future, and upon prudent foresight depends frictionless readjustment of our industrial and economic conditions. We must lay the foundation and begin with our children. If Canada is to take its place in realisation of the immense possibilities her resources represent, there must be thorough preparation. We should lose no time in taking measures to promote technical education as one of the basic conditions of a larger and more fruitful industrial skill in our people as a condition of industrial success.

EPOCH-MAKING DRIVE LAUNCHED BY ALLIES

from all sections of the British front say that their work has been most satisfactory. Large numbers of these monsters were employed and in many cases pursued their destructive and uncheckable way to a distance far within the German lines.

Further information obtained from German prisoners concerning the effects of the British preliminary bombardment indicate that the effect of this unparalleled expenditure of ammunition were disastrous in the extreme, both in damage and to the morale of the German troops. Within the past few days six Bavarain divisions were withdrawn from the line and replaced by fresh troops, because they forced the Germans to withdraw, by the inferno of fire which they had undergone. Photographs taken by aviators back of the German lines show that there was scarcely a square yard of territory along their front which was not devastated by the high explosives. It is no small wonder.

DUAL MONARCHY HARD HIT

NEW YORK, July 31.—A special despatch from Washington to the World reads

The Food Administrator to-day gave out the following statements regarding prevailing food prices and conditions in Austria and Hungary:

"Reports from Budapest, Hungary, reaching here indicate that the population of the provinces has been not far from famine conditions. The majority of the people actually live on vegetables, for meat is only for the very rich and the vegetable supply is seemingly very limited.

"The information received stated that green peas were selling at $145 a kilogram (2 1-4 pounds). Milk was absolutely not to be had for cream. Skimmed milk cost 60 cents a pint. There was no butter or cheese. Cherries were 85 cents per pound. The principal stock seemed to consist of dried peas and dried plums. Young chickens were selling at $2.50. In the egg market were found only empty boxes. Potatoes were not to be had.

"Cabled press advices from Austria received during the past few days indicate that an even worse condition now prevails. The reports state that luncheon cannot be purchased in any restaurant for less than $5. Three pounds of meat for $5, olive oil $10 per quart, butter $5 per pound and chickens at $10 each are some of the prices quoted."

SHIPBUILDING IN CANADA

50 Wooden Steamers will be in Service Within Year.

Ottawa, July 31.—Fifty wooden steamers of a uniform size of twenty-five hundred tons, will be added to the ocean-going tonnage of Canada within the next twelve months. The first of them will be launched this fall and on the others good progress is reported.

The ships are those which are being built for the British Government through the agency of the Imperial Munitions Board. About thirty are in yards on the Pacific coast, and the others at Atlantic or lake ports. From five to nine months is the time required for completion. Simultaneously with ships of steel construction the various ship building plants are stocked with orders to their full capacity for the coming year.

NEARLY CLOSED FRONTIERS

Holland About to Take Action Against Germany—Hollweg is Blamed

Amsterdam, August 1.—One reason for Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg's retirement was that his policies had antagonized neutrals, according to the declaration in the Berlin Tageszeitung yesterday by Count von Revenlow.

"It is learned from an excellent source," von Reventlow declared, "that just before Chancellor Hollweg resigned, Holland was ready to submit to the Anglo-American blockade demands and to the closing of her frontiers to Germany in entirety. "It will be the new Chancellor's first duty to re-establish Germany's prestige among neutrals."

CURIOUS SOUP.

Here is a quaint extract from the recent orders of the —th Division, B.E.F.:

". . . . Sufficient supervision is not given to incinerators. At present, whenever they are visited, it is invariably found that there is a large quantity of material being burned in them that could be utilized for making dripping soup, etc. It was particularly noticed that at one incinerator recently there were two pairs of practically new woolen drawers, and some twenty pairs of old socks thrown in the heap to be burned. . . ."

But would these new woolen garments and the other less novel articles have made good dripping, or, even tolerable soup?

THE BRAVE CHILD WIVES OF ENGLAND

BY A FRENCH SOLDIER.

(From the London Daily Mail.)

She came like the sun and kissed the sleep from my eyes. A hundred and nine dreary, train jogged miles had been as nothing to her, nor the leaving of her mother in an instant, nor the midnight journey alone. A few words ripped along the wires, a few hours through the dawn as I sat waiting till sleep, rather a distant friend then, had shut her eyes, and lo, she was come. She seemed very small and fragile; the months of waiting had taken some of the colour from her cheeks, but not the light from her eyes, the roundness from her form, but not the courage from her heart.

She had waited, as the child wives of England all are waiting, with a steadfastness that never wavered in its surety of right, in its cheerfulness before the world's eyes, and its refusal to endure the luxury of tears except at long intervals and in solitude.

So you shall know them and yet know them not; you shall meet them at the theatre and never guess their identity; you shall talk with them and learn nothing of the anxiety that may be rending their hearts or the strain that may be imperiling their health. They have the calm, placid look of a mountain—with a raging volcano within; they present a cold mask to all but their most intimate friends.

It was my privilege to bear news to the child wife of my friend. She was dressed with scrupulous care in the costume and necklet that he liked best, and her hair was dressed in the way that pleased him most—"even to this wisp of curl on my cheek," she confessed. "And how is my soldier man, and what is he doing and where?"—and her eyes shone and sparkled and her cheeks were flushed. "To see somebody who's just left him is glorious." She is wondrous patient, your child wife, and very little makes her happy.

She may be as young as 18 or as old as 26, but all are alike in the shortness and trials of their married life. Mostly they got married after their husbands joined the army, and their life together may be counted in months or weeks or days, aye, sometimes hours, and always it has been difficult with little money and the army (with all that that implies) overshadowing them, with fighting for him ahead and the return to her common task or to her waiting for him; with an added heartache for both that single life had never known, but a great content and peace that at last they were just each other's and wholly that; that the wide world could not part them: that mothers or brothers now took second place in law as they had long done in love; and that in death itself they were one.

Curious folk have asked them, and ignorant ones wondered, why these young folk launched forth upon the greatest adventure, and mostly they have smiled their reply from out each other's eyes. It is all so utterly simple to them and so incredulous and ill-advised to those that do not understand.

Soon, too soon, the war claimed him, and she began to live on his letters that, thank heaven, came with wonderful regularity; sometimes a line scrawled on a sandbag a score of yards from the Germans; sometimes a long epistle telling of nights at a concert behind the line or of little dinners at the cafes. And those she took about with her and read over and over again, and the green enveloped ones—uncensored—wherein he could pour out his soul for her eyes alone she took to bed with her and slept, one hand clutching it tight beneath the pillow that maybe had never yet known his head, and the other hand clasping the tiny gold locket, slung on a thin chain round her neck, wherein his photograph lay with its lips to her lips, both of them looking very happy and absurdly young.

Her life in commonplace detail has been a little difficult, too, for employers—and many of your child-wives have sought work in hospitals, in munition factories, in shops—are never too ready to engage married women, and work folk are overwilling to suggest that married women should stay at home and not rob their sisters of jobs.

She has felt herself pledged, as she had never before been quite pledged, to be strictly true to him in spirit and letter. With scornful eyes and contemptuous lip has she withstood the attempted flirtations of men who had not seen the band of gold around her finger. She has walked and lived as one apart; apart from the recreations of her old girl friends, and still farther apart in spirit from her relations, who have not understood, and could not, the magnitude of her love.

So you shall find her travelling alone in the trains or omnibusses of England, a proud, quietly dressed little woman, with a brave face and soft wistful eyes, eagerly watching every figure in khaki, half expecting by some miracle to find his face beneath the peaked cap. There is the circle of gold round her finger and there is very likely his regimental badge worn as a brooch in her coat, but otherwise there is nothing to tell that she is the most romantic and bravest figure in the war, one who is bringing back the Juliet spirit to women.

ISAAC'S CHOICE.

During breakfast time in a large munition factory on Tyneside, where nearly every nationality is represented, a group of workmen were discussing Lord Derby's scheme, and the different battalions in which they could join. After various opinions had been given as to which was the best, Sandy said:

"If I hev to join, gie me the Tyneside Scottish."

"I'll join the Northumberland Fusiliers," said Geordie. "I think thor the best."

"Whaat aboot Isaac here?" inquired another workman.

"Oh," replied Geordie, "Isaac's gannen to join the Jordan Highland."

HOW THE TANKS ARE CARED FOR

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE (by Mail). — Under the shelter of a green ridge of shell-pocked farm land, about fifteen miles behind the present front line trenches, one may come upon the encampment of the tanks. A dozen of the monsters are lying stretched out in the warm afternoon sun, being combed and oiled and scoured by their industrious attendants. Over at the edge of the parade two or three of the big iron horses are being put through their paces. Grunting and puffing, creaking and complaining, they move along. They mount a terrace five feet high with the same clumsy, complaining nonchalance that they negotiate a mole hill, and the steady pace of their caterpillars is unchanged whether climbing up a steep slope or clamoring blunderingly along the level.

Hard to be a Tank Man.

The job of a tank man is no sinecure. The interior is not built for comfort. It is crowded with machinery and guns and armour, and in motion the deck sways and bucks like that of a little torpedo boat in a storm. Nor is the roof high enough to prevent danger of receiving a sound thumping if one is 400 tall. Men for tanks are picked for small stature and slender bulk.

If you would spend a few minutes on board a tank you must have your steel helmet with you and your gas mask carefully encased in its waterproof bag, ready for emergency. Climbing through the manbole requires a little knack of its own. Legs first is the approved technique, but one is in danger of placing a foot against a hot engine case.

Engines Well Protected.

Everything is spick and span, shining with abundance of oil, but no superfluous luxuries of brass or nickel to take away the business-like bareness and grimness of grey black armour plate which obttudes everywhere. As in a battleship, the preferential position from the point of view of safety is given to the engines. They lie just above the floor, stretching in a longitudinal position through the centre of the craft, while shafts and cranks run under a special armour casing at the back to the cams which operate the caterpillars, and the big push wheel at the rear.

Artistic Displays.

The painting of the tank is a great pastime in the encampment. Modern protective colouring of battlefield weapons offers a wide field for the development of the cubist art, and the decorative appearance of a tank going into battle suggests that some painter who all his life had specialized in barber poles had suddenly gone amuck with paint brush and colour pot.

BACON REPORT IN 8 WEEKS.

Chairman Henderson Promises That No Time Will Be Lost.

OTTAWA, July 31.—An interim report on the bacon and cold storage business will be submitted in five weeks, so George F. Henderson, K.C., chairman of the investigating commission, announced to-day on his return from the opening sitting in Toronto.

"It will take a couple of weeks to go over the books," he said. "After that Mr. Bain, K.C., the Government counsel, will come down here and go over the record, and incidentally look into the data supplied to Mr. O'Connor. After that, in Toronto, there will be public hearings and the examination of witnesses."

It is understood that a cost accountant as well as the other expert accountants will be secured. Mr. O'Connor, K.C., who made the first report, has recommended this as essential.

400 KILLED IN PETROGRAD.

Street Fighting a Week Ago Was of a Serious Nature.

STOCKHOLM, July 31. — Street fighting in Petrograd last Monday and Tuesday was of considerably greater proportions than admitted for publication, according to reliable information given the Associated Press by a man who has just arrived from there. Reports submitted to the Government showed four hundred killed and about a thousand taken to the hospitals.

Public opinion in Petrograd is highly inflamed against the Bolsheviki, whose leaders, so far as they have not yet been arrested, dare not show themselves publicly. Despite the especial indignation against Lenine, he is not generally regarded as a German agent.

British women have successfully undertaken the most difficult machining operations of big guns, such, for instance, as drilling vent holes in the breech mechanism of sixty pound howitzers.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN.

Nail the flag to the plow—
The country needs the grain,
While the sailor boys guard
The tracks of the main.
God gave you the fields
And the sun with its light;
Then doubles their yields
While the sailor boys fight.

Nail the flag to the plow—
The soldiers must eat
While defending the trenches
Or suffer defeat.
You can help the brave soldier
At this time of his need
By increasing your acres
And planting more seed.

Nail the flag to the plow—
Your children and wife
Must be saved from starvation
While the world is in strife.
Your duty is plain:
Your mission is grand;
Each man is a hero
Who's tilling the land.

You say you're too old
To fight with a gun;
Then work in the fields
Till the setting of sun.
And show to the world
By the sweat on your brow
That you're serving your country
With a hag on our plow.

EIGHT HOURS FOR MOTHER.

The principal of one of the leading schools of this country, in a public address, said that the favorite work of most inventors is the invention of labor saving devices.

Time is money and time saved is money earned, is the slogan of the great manufacturers. Financial gain without a corresponding moral gain, is not progress. It is the proud boast of Americans that the United States is the wealthiest nation time has produced, but of our moral wealth we have little to say. There is no short cut in the development of moral worth. No inventor has been keen enough to perfect a scheme or device that wil save time in the growth of a sturdy character.

Moral character is essentially the work of the patient mothers of our land. They know no eight hour limit. From early morning to late at night the Christian mother bends to her task. My boy, my girl, if the good mothers of this land should cease their labors for just one short week, the atmosphere of evil would be so dense that love and honor would be almost stifled.

While mother's labor of love is unlimited and ha " cognizes fatigue, mother's drudgery may know a limit. An eight hour day for mothers, and even less physical tasks, is possible, if son and daughter are thoughtful and dutiful. All of mother's work is measured by love, and love is really a hard taskmaster. Father, son, daughter, use your best endeavors to approximate mother's love—for you cannot match it. Does mother ever go on a strike? She might strike for more love, if that were possible, but never for shorter hours. Is there a case on record where anyone has forgotten his pure, right-educating mother? The weight of years does not dim the memories of childhood, but rather intensifies them. Back in those happy innocent days there stands one central figure—Mother.

The undying love of mother is beautifully expressed by Holmes: "Youth fades; love droops; the leaves of friendship fall; a mother's secret hope outlives them all."

There is a certain species of reptile found in all parts of the known world; its home is not so much in the jungles and wilderness as one might suppose. This serpent frequents the haunts of men, showing by this that it is of a sociable character; cities, villages and the sparsely populated neighborhood, each and all claim its attention. The name of this serpent is slander. We hope it has no abiding place in the home of any of our readers. The Home Circle Department is the best antidote yet discovered for this vile reptile, and seldom fails to drive it from the home its weekly visits.

Don't wait till someone is gone from you to tell them virtues. Don't wait until your sister is far away in another land to tell her how helpful, how pretty or how courteous she is; and don't wait until the weary hands are crossed and the long sleep comes before you make your mother know what a beautiful blue her eyes are, how tender her heart, and how dearly you love her. Tell it all now—now when the walk through life is hard, and the sunshine of praise is yearned for to brighten it, and to warm and encourage the pilgrim by the wayside.

* * *

Let the sunshine into the gloomy rooms, have a couch to lie on, a piano to play on; in fact a home to live in: one wherein a sense of hospitality and good cheer exudes from the very tables and chairs instead of a mausoleum of gloomy elegance, when everything is for show and nothing to be used.

* * *

There is an old saying to the effect that an untidy mother has disobedient children, and, while neither parents or children may realize the why or the wherefore of it, yet there is always a lack of respect and an indifference to the authority of a mother who takes no pride in her personal appearance.

* * *

The meanest men in the world are those who allowed themselves to drift away from their mothers and forget all about them. The best and bravest men in the world are thos who have never been so proud as when doing something pleasant for the kind old mother.

* * *

Do not choose a vocation for your daughter—do not insist that she become only a lady, when she might be a genius. Who knows but that the talent you repressed and strangled, might have electrified the world. Give it free scope and a hearty welcome.

WHEAT YIELD IS LOW.

Saskatchewan Crop Reports Are Not of an Encouraging Character —Rain May Help.

REGINA, Aug. 1.—Forty agents of the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Co., reporting under date of July 28, give in the main extremely unfavourable predictions as to the yield of wheat. When estimates are given they range between 10 and 12 bushels to the acre for early sown wheat, while the late sown crop, including oats and barley, are almost everywhere reported as being almost a complete failure.

If rain comes at once, many of the agents believe that early sown wheat will do better than expected, and that oats and barley, and even late sown wheat, will show a considerable improvement.

R. Smith Farmer Near Hamilton, Seriously Injured—Horse Frightened by an Auto.

HAMILTON, July 31.—R. Smith, a farmer residing in Castor, was probably fatally injured yesterday when his horses took fright at a passing automobile and hurled him into a reaping machine. His body was terribly lacerated, both legs broken, and his skull fractured. He is in a critical condition at the hospital here.

Tell the average person that he is worked to death, and he enjoys it better than a bank account.

REFLECTIONS

Deeper year by year we wear the groves in which we run. Year by year as a rule our opinions become crystallized beyond capacity to change and we become inhospitable to new ideas. Rare indeed are the men and women whose minds grow to the end of their days and who break out of the ruts of thought and the routine of life in which they had come to move. Only some great and sudden change, sorrow to joy, suffices, after youth is over, to allow the outlook on life.

And so it is with peoples. Tendencies become custome; customs grow into conventions and these come to be regarded as sacrosanct and to have the authority of moral law. The spiritual growth of nations may cease and their system of religious belief may become set and incapable of modification. Has the teaching or practice of Islam changed in the last five hundred years?

Might not a case be made for the contention that the nations, the world, was in a bad way when the war broke out; that materialism, commercialism, worldliness, selfishness were gaining ground alarmingly fast? Was not life manifestly becoming more artificial, superficial, and given over to sense pleasures, and the things of little worth? Were not money, luxury, self-inludgence becoming more than ever before the aim of endeavour and the end of life?

In any event this war is doing for the world what some staggering sorrow or disaster does for an individual life. Mankind is getting a mighty jolt after which the units of society will rearrange themselves as the molecules of powder do upon explosion. This war is cracking all the hard shells which prevented spiritual growth, and those things only—systems, institutions, customs, conventions, reeds, which are true and just and righteous will come out unchanged.

And this war is making it possible for men and women to do the significant things that down in their deep hearts they always longed to do. Millions have broken out of the tread-mill round and are finding something that satisfies them better than gathering gold or spending it on the vanities of life. A woman once active in society, now a nurse at the front, declares that she was never so happy before and cannot imagine how, when the call for her service and sacrifice is ended, she can ever be happy [illegible] it will be, for she can never be so happy again. But she will be, for she can never go back to the old insipid life. Millions of men are also finding out that the things which formerly contented them no longer seem of worth; but that different standards of value, different ideals to the world.

It is predicted that by 1940 half the women of the country will be self-supporting, and it is figured that by that time every two women out of three will be earning enough money to keep themselves.

FOUR HORSES NETTED A FAIR RETURN TO THE MEN AT THE INCINERATOR

Caretaker and His Assistant Find a Way of Salvaging Some of the Marketable Refuse at the City's Incinerator—City Loses Hundreds of Dollars a Year—Seven Dollars For a Horse Hide.

The death of four horses yesterday as a result of the heat, indicates big business for the two men who are in charge of the city's incinerator. Every time a horse is taken to the incinerating plant, the hide is removed and under the present system of civic management, it becomes the property of the two employees in question. The net proceeds may be figured at between six and seven dollars a hide. Last week two hides were sold at seven dollars each. This is only a small part of the revenue that the city is losing as a result of the present wasteful system of disposing of the garbage and refuse collected throughout the city. Rubbers and bottles from another source of revenue for the caretaker and his assistant. In the face of this the city is asked to boost the wages of the men in charge which is done in a blind fashion that characterizes many municipal activities. It is only a year or so ago that local dealers in junk signified their willingness to pay a substantial sum to the city for the privileges of reclaiming marketable refuse. This was not considered at the time. It is safe to say that with the present prevailing high prices for marketable refuse, men could be found who would be willing to take care of the incinerator for nothing in return for the privilege of marketing such refuse. In Europe where the incineration of refuse is highly developed, the very heat that is generated to burn the refuse, is used to heat nearby buildings or for power purposes. It would be difficult to estimate the hundreds of dollars' worth of marketable refuse that passes through Peterborough's incinerator in the course of a year. You can go down to the incinerator almost any hour of the day and see stuff being removed that has netted a fair return to the two men in charge.

Heat Penetrated The City Homes And Even Refrigerators

The heat has even penetrated refrigerators, and nullified their effects, according to the experience of a number of housewives who couldn't otherwise explain the failure to prevent the effects on food stuffs usually caused by hot weather. The butter was inclined to loosen up, meat and fruit refused to hold their essential qualities, and milk soured sooner than usual. All of these indications left little doubt that the heat was oozing into the miniature cold-storage plants with destructive and disappointing results.

In the smaller crowded homes there couldn't have been any comfort under conditions like those of last night. Citizens living in big spacious homes into which fans lured the languid breezes and revived them were fairly fortunate, but consider the conditions that must prevail in houses that were built solely for progt. Crowded together, without front or back lawn, low-lying ceilings, the barest facilities for ventilation, and in these homes three or four little children, perhaps an infant, and absolutely no relief.

People who are satisfied with their own conditions are usually those who have every reason and condition to promote that satisfaction. but the public as a whole needs more persons who will interest themselves in the conditions of other less fortunate and happily placed than they are. Hence, should be not be possible to insert into building regulations a clause that will limit the inhospitable conditions of many of the houses that are built only for profit? This is no vague reference. Whole streets in this city can be pointed out where in a community that has land sufficient for hundreds of thousands the lots are cut deplorably small, the house life necessarily cramped and thrown close together and comfort in these circumstances is out of the question. It has always been felt that the working man who is unable to build his own home deserves from the state more consideration than he receives in this city. On Sunday, the street cars are closed to him, on any day in the week there is no swimming place where his children may bathe under proper supervision, and even a weekly band concert, of long years' establishment, is now denied himself and his family. "And from him who hath not shall be taken away even that which he seemeth to have."

Vital Statistics For The Month

A comparison of the vital statistics in the city for July of his year and the same month last year shows a marked decrease in the death toll, and that the birth rate has been increased considerably.

	Births	Deaths	Mar.
1917	44	20	16
1916	35	28	18

Fourteen building permits have been issued from the City Hall last month, amounting to $15,460.00.

Conscription Should Be Enforced At Once Says Sen. Lougheed

OTTAWA, July 31.— An amendment proposed by the Liberal leader in the upper Chamber, Senator Bostock, that conscription be not enforced until after the coming general election, and a declaration by the Government leader, Sir James Lougheed, that it was the Government's intention to enforce conscription as soon as the military service bill received the Royal assent, were the features of the first day's discussion of the conscription measure in the Red Chamber.

The Government leader's declaration as to the immediate enforcement of conscription was, however, qualified to some extent.

"If I have anything to say about the matter," he declared, "I would say that as soon as the ink was dry on the signature of the Governor-General to this bill, the act should be put into effect."

When Senator Power noted that Sir James seemed to be speaking only for himself and not for the Government, the latter added:

"Well, I know of nothing to the contrary. I understand that to be the intention of the Government."

A little later on, when Senator Bostock was referring to the fact that Sir James Lougheed had gone much farther than the Prime Minister in declaring for immediate enforcement of the bill, Sir Mackenzie Bowell broke in with this somewhat significant remark: "He did not make the statement on the part of the Government. What he said was that if he had his individual way it would be put in force."

Voluntary System Illogical.

The argument of Sir James Lougheed followed fairly closely the lines of the Government argument in the Commons. He maintained that the honour of Canada was pledged to secure the needed reinforcements for the men at the front; that the voluntary system had failed, and in any event was illogical, since it put a premium upon cowardice. In Canada the declared no clique and no section of the country could logically refuse to serve in the defence of the Dominion, no matter how recreant the spirit of that clique or section of the country might be.

Laurier Not Against Conscription.

Senator Bostock urged the necessity of adhering to the spirit of democracy in enforcing a measure of such vital consequences to the whole people. He believed that a further trial of the voluntary system under proper methods would secure the needed hundred thousand men, and he suggested the possibilities of a vigorous recruiting among the 2,754,000 Canadians in the United States. He maintained that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had not declared against conscription itself, but had confined his objections to the measure to the ill-considered and abrupt manner in which it had been introduced, and to the administrative failures of the Government in connection with the application of the voluntary system.

Sir Clifford Misrepresents Laurier.

Senator Bostock took up at some length the letter addressed to him by Sir Clifford Sifton last week appealing for a union Government to save the situation. In that letter, said the Senator, Sir Clifford had entirely misrepresented the attitude and aims of Sir Wilfrid who, as much as any other man in the country, was whole-heartedly in favour of Canada's utmost efforts in the prosecution of the war. Senator Bostock noted that Sir Clifford now ascribed to Sir Wilfrid merely the Nationalist attitude—the attitude of the men with whom Sir Clifford himself and the Conservative party had been in alliance in 1911 when they sought to crucify Sir Wilfrid in Quebec on the naval issue for being too Imperialistic.

Probable Govt. Majority of Four.

A vote on the second reading will probably be taken to-morrow. Two of the Government members in the Senate, Messrs. Landry and Montplaisir, are expected to vote for the Liberal amendment. Two Liberal Senators are absent through illness—namely, Hon. Messrs. Domville and Sheyn. With the six new Conservative Senators introduced to-day, and with all the Liberals voting for the Bostock amendment, the Government has a majority of four.

PROMISED TO PUT RUSSIA OUT OF ACTION IN 60 DAYS

PETROGRAD, Aug. 1.—An official statement issued says:

"According to reports of secret service agents the present German offensive was undertaken as the result of detailed testimony concerning internal conditions of the Russian army which had been placed in the hands of the German chief of staff. Field Marshal von Hindenburg, it appears, had promised Emperor William that in two months he would put Russia out of action."

NO RUST PREVAILS IN MANITOBA CROPS

Winnipeg Aug. 1—Prof Bedford, of the Manitoba Agricultural College, has returned from a tour of inspection of crops throughout the Province of Manitoba. He reports that there is very little rust this year, rust being confined to a few isolated districts in small quantities.

George Wulton, of the Weed Commission, states that there also is a marked improvement in the matter of the elimination of weeds on Manitoba farms this year.

Amendment To Defer Bill Will Be Lost

Senate Will Pass First and Second Readings of Conscription Measure

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 1.—When the Senate takes up the conscription bill this evening it is expected that Senator Bostock's amendment that the operation of the bill be postponed till after a general election will be defeated by a meagre majority, as it is altogether likely that French Conservative senators will vote for the amendment. There may be other amendments, but it is likely that the bill will pass its first and second reading without change. It is expected the government will bring down proposals to-night for relief of railway situation and that they will embody the placing of the Canadian Northern, Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific under control of an operating commissioner responsible to the Governor-in-Council. Motive power and rolling stock on all three systems will be mobilized far the greatest efficiency and earnings divided according to mileage. Extensive financial assistance will be granted to the scheme by the government it is expected.

Pte. Horace Blake Home

Another Peterborough veteran of the Great War arrived home this morning in the person of Pte. Horace Blake, of the 4th Canadian Mounted Rifles, originally of the Peterborough Squadron of the 8th C. M. R. The joy of his home-coming is overshadowed by the double tragedy in his family since his departure for overseas, his brother, Pte. Leonard Blake being missing ever since the Battle of Zillebeke in June of last year, and another brother, James, having been killed in a sleigh-riding accident here, last winter.

Pte. Blake was one of the few survivors of the 4th C.M.R. to come through the terrific bombardment at Zillebeke. He was wounded in October, last year, by shrapnel, just after going over the top in the famous charge at Regina trench. He has now received his discharge from the service.

Serious Accident Near Bailieboro

A distressing accident occurred at Bailieboro about 5 o'clock Monday afternoon and the victim, Mr. Wells Bateman, is to-day in a very serious condition. Bateman is employed by Mr. Ira Dawson and was returning home with the mower after cutting hay. Just when near his own gate an automobile passed and the horses took fright and became unmanageable. Bateman was thrown to the ground in front of the knives and the mower passed over him. His skull was fractured, his shoulder and elbow broken, his face and head badly cut, several teeth knocked out and numerous cuts and bruises about his back and chest. Doctors were summoned from Peterborough and Millbrook and to-day Mr. Bateman is resting fairly comfortably, but his condition is quite serious.

Investigation 'A Disgrace Says The Tribune

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 1. — The Tribune (Independent) commenting on the McLeod-Tellier report, says:

"In the political history of Canada there is not anything which quite equals in crude scandalousness the McLeod-Tellier investigation. If this finding is to stand and if it is to be operative with Sir Robert Borden as it apparently is, then Justice Galt should be impeached. If Justice Galt is not to be impeached Sir Ezekiel McLeod and Justice Tellier should be ignominiously removed from the bench or have their pensions withdrawn, and Hon. Mr. Rogers should be forced to leave the Government.

R. ROGERS' WHITE SUIT ALMOST TOO GOOD FIT

Better For Goverament If the Job Hadn't Been So Well Turned Out

OTTAWA IS TROUBLED

OTTAWA, Aug. 1.—What is to be done about Judge Galt? That is the question being asked in the corridors these days. The Government as a whole, it is believed, would prefer to do nothing at all. But one individual of the Government at least is urging action. Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, secured exoneration from the Galt charges through the findings of the MacLeod-Tellier commission. Such exoneration was obtained through a complete and absolute reversal of the Galt findings, both as to fact and argument.

Mr. Justice Galt, according to the commission, not only found contrary to the evidence, but distorted certain evidence which he had. That is the only conclusion to be drawn by the supporters of the MacLeod-Tellier findings. That there are still people in Winnipeg and elsewhere, influential people who are stubborn enough to stick by the first report, is, however, realized by the Government. The Galts of Winnipeg are a highly respected family. But Mr. Rogers realizes that if Mr. Justice Galt (whom he was instrumental himself in having appointed to the bench) is retained in office, the findings of the MacLeod-Tellier commission must lose much of their weight, so Mr. Rogers' paper, the Winnipeg Telegram, has been broadly hinting that Mr. Justice Galt should resign so that the exoneration may be complete and convincing.

If Mr. Justice Galt does not resign, and there are no indications at present that he intends to, then the only resort Mr. Rogers can have is to secure his impeachment by a majority vote of Parliament. That this would be difficult to secure is admitted.

As a matter of fact, there is a feeling among Government members that it would have been better had the commission made a less complete job of it, and had not so sweepingly condemned the Galt findings.

WHAT ROGERS' PAPER SAYS.

Winnipeg, July 31.—The Telegram (Hon. Robert Rogers' personal paper), in a full page editorial comment on the MacLeod-Tellier report, states that the Parliament of Canada will be asked to remove Judge Galt from the Bench.

THOUSAND A WEEK BRITISH RECRUITS

Large Enlistments of Men in the Leading Cities of U. S.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—The British recruiting mission reported yesterday that 218 British subjects were enlisted for the British and Canadian armies throughout the United States yesterday. Chicago, New York City, and San Francisco, in the order named, led all other cities in the number of recruits.

The officials said the recruiting campaign is arousing British citizens in the United States, and they expected enlistments for the British and Canadian armies soon will reach a thousand a week.

An Aeroplane Comes To Grief At Downeyville

The Lindsay Warder says: Aeroplane No. 109, which sailed over the town of Lindsay on Saturday afternoon and landed on a farm at Downeyville, came to grief as the pilot began to rise again. Subsequently it was brought to Lindsay to-day on a motor truck and taken back to Camp Borden.

It appears that the young lieutenant was on his way from Aurora to Camp Borden and having no compass he lost his way, coming in an easterly direction for miles. At Downeyville he began to run short of gasoline and decided to make a descent to ascertain where he was and replenish his supply of gas. The descent was made in good order but in the attempt to get away again he had the misfortune to puncture a tire, and smash a wing on a fence.

A crowd on Sunday crowds gathered at the farm to observe the wingless machine and note the operations of the lieutenant. In the meantime, he telephoned to headquarters at Camp Borden and a large motor truck was despatched to Downeyville to pick him up and return to camp.

While in town the machine was the centre of attraction for down-town citizens as it remained at the corner of William and Kent sreets.

This is the first aeroplane to make a flight over Lindsay.

ENTERED NEUTRAL WATERS.

Netherlands' Government Issues Official Statement on Sinking of the Batavier.

The Hague, Netherlands, Aug. 1.—An official statement issued by the Netherland's Government says the steamer Batavier II. was shelled outside territorial waters by the British submarine L-55, near Texel on July 27. The vessel took refuge inside territorial waters where she was abandoned by her crew. The L-55 entered the area and placed a prize crew aboard, who took her outside the area. The Batavier drifted inside territorial waters again. She was then abandoned by the prize crew and the submarine departed after the Dutch had hoisted the signal's "respect neutrality." The Batavier, owing to the damage she had received, sank.

Canadian Pacific Fireman Testifies

"Jack" Thompson Had to Lay Off From Work About Two Days A Week

"Jack" Thompson Had to Lay off From Work About Two Days a Week.

"Tanlac is certainly a railroad man's medicine," said John Thompson of 1826 Dundas street, Toronto, a few days ago, "and since taking it I'm feeling better than I have at any time during the past twelve months."

Mr. Thompson, or "Jack" as he is familiarly known by his many friends in Toronto, has been in railroad service for years, and is now firing on the Canadian Pacific. He belongs to the Brotherhood of Firemen and Engineers and is well known especially among the railroad people of the city.

"I had been suffering with a number of troubles," continued Mr. Thompson, "and at the time I began taking Tanlac I was just about 'all in' and getting worse every day. I had no appetite at all and my stomach was in such a bad fix that nothing agreed with me. My food would sour soon after eating it and I would turn so sick at times I couldn't retain a thing I had eaten. I was constantly belching up sour gas and what I forced myself to eat seemed to do me little or no good. I lost over twenty pounds in weight, and my clothes just hung on me. Actually my pants would almost go round my waist twice. I had a haggard, sallow complexion, and simply felt all run-down and fagged out all the time. I had a terrible pain right under my ribs on my left side which extended clean around to my stomach. My kidneys were out of order and I had such an awful hurting in the small of my back at times I could hardly stand it. I kept getting worse in spite of all I could do, and all last Winter and Spring I lost two days' work out of every week. I would come in at night so tired and worn-out I would just flop down in a chair and never felt like eating a bite of supper. I was just not fit for work at all, and got so when I would come in from my runs I would have to stay in bed for two or three days. Sometimes my head ached all day, my tongue was coated and I hardly felt like getting out of bed in the mornings. I was in a serious condition, and had about decided it would take an operation to get me out of my trouble.

"But I had been reading so much about Tanlac I decided first to see if it would help me, and I certainly struck it right. I have just started on my second bottle, and can tell that it has done me a world of good already. My stomach trouble seems to be almost entirely gone and my appetite is fine. I can eat what I want now without suffering from gas or other signs of indigestion, and my tired, worn-out feelings have left me completely. The pain has disappeared from my side and back, and my kidneys are in fine shape. I have no more headaches or bad taste in my mouth and I get up in the mornings feeling rested and good. I'm beginning to fill out my clothes, and have improved so much that my friends are talking about how much better I look. I am certainly delighted with what Tanlac has done and is still doing for me and several of the boys I work with are now taking it on my sayso."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by Warne Drug Co

To Ask Housewives To Volunteer For Saying Of Food

OTTAWA, July 31—The housewives of Canada are to be asked to volunteer for food service. Hon. W. J. Hanna, Food Controller, proposes to utilize the machinery of the representative provincial committee to pledge every housewife in the Dominion to the observance of the orders and regulations which condition may determine to be essential to feed the Canadian division, the British forces and people, and the allied armies and nations.

Every housewife signing the pledge is to be supplied with a window card for her home, showing that the household has enlisted in the domestic food forces which Canada must have to support the soldiers at the front.

Specific instructions on methods of conserving, preserving, and substituting foods to take the place of those required for export will be issued from time to time.

War will be declared at once on the food waste which is costing the Dominion sixty-five million dollars a year. Adequate food supplies are essential to victory. The Food Controller looks to the women of Canada to do their utmost to provide these supplies.

5,000 BATHERS MAKE LAKE RISE 2 INCHES

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The water in the lake at Fairmount park rose two inches the other day. Not from the rain, but from the more than 5,000 bathers who began arriving at the park as early as 6 o'clock in the morning. The sport was so popular that it was hard work getting some of them out on the beach when the park closed at 10 o'clock.

The one-egg cake will be delicious if a little sour cream is used with the mixture.

MONSTER GUNS USED THREE CENTURIES AGO

Although one is astounded to hear of the immense size of the heavy artillery used by both sides in the present war it should be borne in mind that projectiles of even larger diameter were used long ago.

The first piece of artillery recorded, (according to London Answers), was made by Schwartz, a German, soon after the invention of gunpowder in 1330, while the first use of artillery in warfare was probably made by the Moors of Algeciras, Spain, in 1343. The town is situated on the same bay and opposite to Gibraltar. It is interesting to remember that the present Spanish governor's full title is "Governor of Algeciras and Gibraltar, temporarily in the occupation of the British," an example of optimism that surely deserves to become classical.

Edward III, at Crecy in 1346, had four pieces of cannon, and he also used artillery at the siege of Calais in the following year.

In Edinburg, to which it was transferred from London at the request of Sir Walter Scott, may be seen Mons Meg, a large cannon thirteen feet long and twenty inches calibre, which is said to have been used by James II at the seige of Thrieve Castle in 1455. This gun used stone shot. Five years later the king met his death at Roxburg by the bursting of a similar cannon, the Lion.

The "Queen Elizabeth's pocket pistol"—a quaint fancy—at Dover Castle, a present from Charles V to Good King Hal (Henry VIII) is twenty-four feet long and has given rise to the well known lines:

Load me well and keep me clean.
I'll carry a ball to Calais Green.

The largest bore recorded is a gun of twenty-eight inches calibre, made at Beejapoor, India, during the Seventeenth Century, and known as "Malick o Meidan," signifying "Lord of the Plains." By some authorities it is said to have been made of cast iron, and by others of bronze.

Cast iron cannons were not made until the latter half of the Fifteenth Century. Previously they were always made of bronze. As the Beejapoor gun was not completed till nearly two hundred years after the introduction of cast iron for guns the question may be genuinely open to doubt.

Be that as it may, the projectile fired by the gun weighed 1,600 pounds and at the time it must have been a formidable weapon. The 111-ton guns of the Benbow, a British battle ship built in 5, used a projectile of 1,800 pounds, so the Mahrattas, said to be responsible for the Indian gun, have no cause to feel ashamed of the capabilities of their earlier weapon.

Italy purchased in 1884 from the Krupp firm a 119-ton gun and the same firm six years later made a 135-ton gun, which is at Cronstatd, at the head of the Gulf of Finland in Russia.

SUBMERGE FOR SAFETY.

U. S. Torpedo Boat Destroyers Forced Foe Submarine to Seek Security.

American Naval Base in British Waters, Aug. 1.— American torpedo boat destroyers were reported yesterday to have engaged two hostile submarines, causing them to submerge without shooting.

One of the U-boats had just sunk a steamer and the other was attacking a merchantman

UNCLE SAM SETS OUT ON A SLACKER HUNT

Begins Looking for Large Numbers Who Failed to Register—A Rush for Exemption.

Washington, Aug. 1.—Claims for exemption from service in America's national army are running heavy. Initial examinations here and at other points where men are being called show a bigger percentage of claims than had been anticipated. A great hunt started throughout the country has for draft evaders. Warned by Attorney-General Gregory that "thousands of men failed to register June 5th and have been hiding ever since," the United States attorneys in all districts enlisted civilian help and started after these slackers. When caught, these men will go either to prison or to war.

The names of hundreds of youths who thought themselves securely hidden from the war boards have been forwarded to local authorities from the Justice Department.

Among the informants were many mothers whose sons registered for the draft and who couldn't bear to see the boys in the neighbourhood slip through Uncle Sam's net.

The slackers will be jammed right up at the top of the lists for examination whenever possible. This will be done by assigning them the numbers of men early on the lists who were discharged for physical or other disability.

Volunteer workers have been enlisted to compare registration lists with country tax and voting lists, from which deliquent lists will be made.

YPRES IS A NAVAL BATTLE

"More men of the British and Irish race have died in battle about Ypres than about any other place in the world," says the Manchester Guardian.

"Yet there has been very little plain speaking about the reason why and the real significance of the place in English history. Hastings, Crecy, Plassey, and Quebec each stands for something in English history.

"Does Ypres stand for something equally definite? And in any case, why are we fighting so desparately for the possession of a Belgian town? Is Ypres just a stick to beat Germans with, or is there some other good reason why we should be fighting there rather than elsewhere?

"The true inwardness of the situation seems to be that Ypres is really a naval battle. No doubt the fighting has come about there by a chain of events that the purely military, but the real reason why our army is fighting there is that it is against our interest as a sea power to let the Narrows fall into the possession of a naval rival. Ypres is just as much a naval battle as Edward III's Battle of Sluys, on the coast not far away. The Germans, indeed, used to call the fighting of Ypres the battle of Calais, and that is what it still is.

"Their first plan for the invasion of France took no account of Flanders; it was only later, when they realized how dangerous our intervention was likely to be on land, that they occupied Antwerp and descended along the Belgian coast towards the Narrows. And there is reason to believe that the first desperation of their attacks on Ypres had some connection with their plans for a submarine blockade of the British Isles which, though it was not proclaimed till three months later, had already shaped itself in their minds.

"Nothing is so certain as that if the Germans were to win in the west they would keep possession of the French side of the Narrows, even though they evacuated all the rest of Belgium and France, and hold it as one of the keys to the outer world.

"Ypres, then, is more to us that the name of a town in Belgium. It is the symbol of British sea power against a Continental military tyranny, and that is the real reason that we are fighting there.

"Ypres is the symbol but not, of course, the seat of sea power. The fight would be for the same object if it were ten miles northeast or southwest. The reason that it has centred round Ypres is that that is the point of equilibrium between the German drive to the south and the British drive to the north. It is difficult to appraise values in the course of a war, but we think that the value of the British defence of Ypres has been as much underestimated as the value of our services in the retreat from Mons.

CORP. CLAYTON SELKIRK WAS KILLED BY STRAY TRENCH MORTAR SHELL

Chaplain and Captain of His Battalion Write His Parents, Expressing Their Grief at the Death of Corp. Selkirk.

HAD BEEN RECOMMENDED

WARSAW Aug. 1.—The following letters were received from the Chaplain and Captain of the 5th C.M.R. this week by Mr. and Mrs. James Selkirk relative to their son, the late Corp. Clayton Selkirk, who gave his life that the Empire might live, on June 23rd, 1917.

Not only are they a great comfort to the immediate family, telling as they do, of the fraternal and social life, the reverence and personal attention paid to the departed, but, greatest of all, the height to which this young man has raised himself by his own hands and unselfish nature, making a name that will stand out for above, after generations of common-folk have come and gone.

The people of this place are justly proud of all the boys who have gone from here, especially those who will not return to receive any insignificant acknowledgment of services rendered might be tendered.

4th C.M.R., B.E.F.,
France.
In the Field,
June 29th, 1917

Dear Mrs. Selkirk,—You will, by this time, have received intelligence of the death of your son, Corp. C. R. Selkirk.

As Chaplain who buried him I am writing these few lines to assure you of my sincere sympathy.

Your son as far as I can ascertain was killed instantly, so that he was spared much pain and suffering. This will be, I know, a great comfort to you.

I am also glad to be able to tell you that his body was recovered and taken out, and now rests in the little British military cemetery at Petit Vimy, on the slope of Vimy Ridge. I was present and read our burial service. It was early in the day, about sunrise, reminding us of the resurrection. Several comrades were present. The grave is marked, registered and will always be cared for.

Your loss is indeed great, but you have the consolation of knowing that your boy died nobly, giving his life for his country.

May I, in closing, commend to you the God of all comfort who alone can carry our sorrow, and enable us to bear our cares, and bring us hope for the future.

Yours sincerely,
(Capt.) W. H. DAVIS,
Chaplain, C. of E.

Mr. James Selkirk,
Warsaw, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—Doubtless, by now, you have been officially informed as to the death of your son.

I wish to tender my deepest sympathy, together with that of my brother-officer to you in your sad bereavement.

Although we realize that our sorrow cannot be compared with that of a parent's, yet the death of one of our boys strikes us very hard, as in many cases we come to look upon them as brothers.

After the Vimy show, I recommend him for a decoration, on account of his exceptionally good work, and I was greatly disappointed when nothing came of it. He was also recommended by an officer of another battalion to which he was temporarily attached.

At the time of receiving the wounds which caused his death Corporal Selkirk was in charge of his gun on the most advanced post on our front. A stray trench mortar shell lit amongst the crew, and seriously wounded him. Although he was not killed instantly, he never regained consciousness, and he died on the way out. Everything was done to save his life, but his wounds were too many and grievous.

His brother was with him at the time, but fortunately received nothing worse than a severe shaking up. On account of the shock to his nerves, however, we sent him out of the line immediately.

Corporal Selkirk was buried by his comrades in a little cemetery near here, the location of which is known at Canadian Headquarters, but which for obvious reasons, I cannot give you.

Again assuring you of our deepest sympathy, I beg to remain.

Yours faithfully,
WM. J. ATHERTON, Capt.
France, July 3rd, 1917.

IN MEMORIAM

In memory of Pte. William Batten, who was killed at Vimy Ridge, April 9th:

In sunny France, where the balmy breeze
The olive branches blow
No more 'mid the leaves of the mulberry trees
Shall the silk worm's colours glow.

For the fertile fields are ploughed and seared
By the Germans' deadly shell;
And a crude cross erected near Vimy Ridge
Marks the place where William fell.

He went forth in the prime of his manhood;
He answered at duty's stern call;
What is life when his country's in danger;
He must go through in fighting, he fall

He had fought the battle of life in youth,
And through Christ the victory had won;
So when duty called, he knew he must go;
His country to guard 'gainst the Hun.

He fought like a brave Canadian;
He was faithful to country and king.
On history's bright pages in future,
Shall his fame and his praise ever ring.

Though o'er his grave no mother weeps,
Or father drops a tear,
Yet brave hearts laid the colours down,
In friendship, on his bier.

Though many years have passed away
Since he clasped his brother's hand.
Still letters and loving tokens
Were sent from that distant land

There is one we have not mentioned,
Who regarded him with pride—
A fair, sweet, English maiden.
Whom he hoped to make his bride.

To that broken heart what anguish
And deep sorrow, who can tell;
"Faithful unto death," he promised,
As he said his last farewell.

When his regiment marches home again,
With gallant hearts and light,
Though many a dear companion
Has perished in the fight.

She can look upon them proudly, with a calm, though tear-dimmed eye,
For her lover was a Highlander, too.
And not afraid to die

When his Orange brethren muster
To celebrate the Boyne,
And the Norwood Scarlet Chapter,
In Warsaw with them join.

Then they'll think of him whose absent,
Whose life so nobly gave,
And carried all its mysteries
To a gallant soldier's grave.

—Mrs. Geo. Clements.

SPRAYED WHILE ASLEEP.

Mr. A. Swartz Thought Flood of Water Was Rain Coming Through His Window.

While the firemen were flushing George street last night a length of hose near the hydrant in front of Jordan Bros. sprang a leak that shot the water up into the sleeping quarters of Mr. A. Swartz. He had drawn the bed close to the window and a stream of water sprayed him and his wife, who awakened in surprise that a storm had suddenly blown up and was dashing in sheets through the window. But the shouts of the firemen below changed their view of the deluge, which continued until the men rushed up and cut off the stream. In the meantime a considerable quantity of water had poured into the Swartz apartment, and leaked through to the store on the ground floor, occasioning some damage to the goods on exhibit.

WHISKEY MAY JUMP TO RADIUM PRICES

Men in Many Industries Likely to be Affected—Whisky now made will last Eighteen Months.

There is enough whisky manufactured and held in bond in Amreica to last the United States about a year and a half under ordinary circumstances of consumption, according to a calculation made by a leading Distiller. At the end of eighteen months, according to his figures, if the food bill with the amendment prohibiting the further manufacture of whisky finally is passed by Congress, whisky will be as scarce in America as radium, and probably as expensive.

Likewise, according to calculations of the same man, the man on wihsky will throw 100,000 men out of employment, deal a staggering blow to industries capitalized at nearly $100,000,000, and cut off revenues of the Federal government amounting to $150,000,000 a year.

"There are about 180,000,000 gallons of whisky distilled and in bond at the present time," said the distiller. "Of this liquor, not more than 20 per cent. is held by the distiller; the rest is held by the wholesale and retail liquor dealers, grocery stores and drug stores. The average consumption of liquor in the United States is about 130,000,000 gallons a year so that you can calculate for yourself just how long it will be before a man will have to forget he ever heard of whisky, if the Gore amendment finally becomes law.

"Whisky pays excise taxes of $150,000,000 a year to the Federal government, and they are planning to get $300,000,000 from the industry when threat of prohibition ended that discussion. You would be surprised, too, if you should stop to consider how many trades and how many different sorts of people will be affected if the distilleries are forced to shut down. For example there are the barrel makers and the bottle manufacturers, together with the many employees at each distillery. There are, besides, the malsters—malt is a component part of whisky—and finally there is the little bank which has loaned its money to the distiller. These banks, many of them, will be pretty hard hit and through them their customers, the small town trader and the farmer."

Asked how much he thought the price of whisky now on hand would increase if the ban were placed on its further production the distiller shrugged his shoulders.

"I cannot say," he replied. "And I do not think that anybody else can. But the price is going to jump, and it will continually go higher as the stock of whisky in the country diminishes.

"A few, a very few, of the distilleries, may be turned into plants to make commercial alcohol, or perhaps some sort of war munitions, but the great majority are too small to be of service in this way, and the only thing left for their owners is to discharge their workmen and put up the shutters."

The distiller predicted an enormous increase in the consumption of beer and wines if whisky were forbidden.

CONVICTS MAN OF DRAFT EVASION

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—It required exactly two minutes for a jury in the United States Court to make its mind up what to do in the case of Meyer Graubarde, nephew of a one-time Assemblyman of the same name. Graubarde was tried before Judge Martin T. Manton on a charge of wilfully refusing to register in accordance with the terms of the Selective Draft law.

The jury listened attentively to the government's evidence and returned a verdict of guilty almost before it had time to leave the court room. Judge Manton kept up the record for speed by imposing a sentence of one year in the Mercer County (N. J.) penitentiary. Jacob Pankin, attorney for Graubarde, announced he would appeal the case to the Supreme Court on the ground that the Selective Draft law is unconstitutional.

Citizen Offered $50 Toward Fund For Bathing Places

"I was in Orillia recen where there are two public swimm places that were thronged by m and boys, women, young girls children. Blind Score Contest Causes Much Interest

Last night much interest was displayed in the rolling off of the "blind score"—118, at the Water Street Alleys At the end of the roll-off Dolan and Henderson were tie, with 118 each, and an extra game was played, in which Dolan won out with a 117 count, while Henderson rolled 120. There are two more bowlers to roll off the 118 score, and if they do not reach the 118 score, Dolan then carries away the big prize. The scores were as follows: Dolan 118 and 117; Henderson 8 and 120; McDonald, 100; Boyd, 128; Routley 125; Cocks, 120; Fielder 116, Langley, 121; R. Ross, 113; Shook, 127. Thompson and Gordon will likely roll off to-night

So much interest was manifested in the Blind score contest last night, the proprietor of the Alleys has decided to donate a handsome prize for another Blind score contest from Tuesday, July 31 to Aug. 11th. The score is from 115 to 126.

Mr. J. J. Solomon, proprietor of the Alleys, left last night for Ottawa, where he will spend the next few days.

KRUPP ORGAN WARNS OF BRITAIN'S POWER

Says England's Strength Has Almost Silenced "These Prattlers of 1914"

REFERS TO MAP OF WORLD

WRITER DECLARES SOUTHWEST AFRICA MUST BE GAINED—FALL OF BOER STATES DEPLORED.

Copies of the Rheinische Westfalische Zeitung recently received in London contain a series of articles on the war situation, in which the readers of this organ of the Krupps and leading mouthpiece of the German munition makers are warned not to be too optimistic regarding the future, and great stress is laid upon the strength of the British Empire and its world-wide dominions. The writer takes Dr. von Bethmann Hollweg to task for his frequent references to the war map in talking about the present situation of the belligerents. The map may show some things favourable to Germany, but it shows other things as well, which make an exceedingly gloomy impression. The Essen paper continues:

"England, which at the beginning of the war was so foolishly and dangerously underestimated, has, during this struggle, attained military and political strength which has almost reduced to silence those prattlers who ruled public opinion in the Summer of 1914. England, the falling Carthage, the land without conscription, has shown herself as a nation which still rules the world, and to drive back which, in order that we may live, still requires all our strength.

"In contemplation of the terrible battles in Europe, and in the eager examination of our European war map, we have forgotten the map of the world, and it is high time that we look at that. While England in our immediate neighborhood remains on the defensive, she is yet strong enough in other parts of the world to develop a remarkable offensive, a simple result of the policy of the last forty years."

CRITICISES PRINCE BUELOW

The article then goes on to review British imperial history, and in the review Prince Buelow, the former German Minister of Foreign Affairs, is severely handled for not having recognized at the time of the Jameson raid how serious the fall of the Boer Republics would be for German colonial hopes. The writer says:

"He neither tried at the proper time to organize a combination to prevent their fall, nor did he interfere when England overthrew them by force. Prince Buelow did not recognize that this destruction of the Boer Republics would bring us bitter fruit. One has only to ask one's self the question, What trend would this world war have taken had there still been independent Boer States which with about 80,000 men could have helped out German troops in Southwest and East Africa?"

The writer then traces the determined and sustained action whereby England throughout the years has marched toward the goal of African empire and an All-Red route across the African continent, and then proceeds to point out the great importance to Germany of Southwest Africa.

"We must not only,' he says, "demand Southwest Africa again but we must push our territory up to the once independent Boer States. All the colonizing strength of Germany in Africa comes from the Southwest Protectorate, and all plans in Central Africa cannot compensate us for lost Southwest Africa, a loss which has now in great part been suffered."

The writer condemns the idea of a great central African colony for Germany because it would lie between two vast sections of British possessions, and the British spirit of revenge would always work so that eventually Britain would swallow up that possession. The only hope of Germany lies in having a hold in Southern Africa, for "South Africa must be German or nothing German will remain. It is only by freeing the Boer States and by military and geographical connections with them that we can create an independent source of strength in Africa from which might and Kultur will flow."

GERMAN ENVY OF ENGLAND

Another article of the series deals with Great Britain's enormous empire around the Indian Ocean, and the writer, recognising how widely the English language is spoken there, sees it rapidly becoming the language of the world.

"In short," he says "we must admit that England in this war is taking greater leaps forward than she has ever done before—if at the last hour an iron fist does not intervene. The British plan is one of such splendor, pursued with such perseverance, and carried out with such keenness that no power in the world has ever before produced any effort like it. Indeed, we envy England those statesmen who are capable of handling anything so great."

No power, the writer says, will be able to resist the British with the exception of Germany, and he continues: "It is our task. On us the English weight specially presses and it is for us to see that unbearable land power will not be added to unbearable sea power. Beside England there is no place in the sun or on earth. To Germans it is obvious that outside this vast African-Indian-Australian empire there is no land or future for our race. America is claimed, the rest of Asia is ruled by Chinese and Russians. England will give us no rights, as we were born too late."

The article ends on the note that victory for England will mean that she will have such strength that even Germany will not be able to deal with her.

FEW WILL PASS U. S. TESTS.

Over a Quarter of Crack Geological Survey Field Force Rejected.

NEW YORK, July 31. — The Herald's Washington correspondent wires:

Preliminary and unofficial reports indicate that the number of men who will be rejected on physical grounds will be large. Originally the War Department officials figured that the number of rejections on physical grounds would be twenty-five per cent. Later the figure was increased to forty per cent. Now the talk is that it may be more. There may be a letting down of the physical requirement later. The War Department wants an army of men as nearly perfect as possible. There have been no real, general tests of men drawn which will show a fair percentage of those who will be rejected on physical grounds, but there are a few instances which have come to the attention of the officials.

One of them is the examination of the field force of the United States Geological Survey, which has been commissioned and placed in the Federal service to do mapping in France. That field force is composed of about eighty, chiefly men who have lived for years in the open in carrying on their field work in the United States. Of the eighty there were twenty-two, or more than twenty-five per cent., who failed to pass the army physical tests.

WHAT BELGIANS THINK OF A SEPARATE PEACE

Signs That Germany Has Tried in Vain to Win the Sympathy of the Flemish Population

By EGBERT HANS, Belgian Journalist

It is undeniable that peace means more to Belgium than to any other of the nations at war, for Belgium is still the chief sufferer in this European war. Yet it is just as true that Belgium less than all others can consider a separate peace.

The main reason is perhaps a psychological one, defined by a sentiment which made Belgians shrug their shoulders when they read of separate peace rumours, and which will make them do so again.

Of course, Belgium is simply fighting for neutrality and her independence, or rather that is why she began to fight, but it is quite probable that Belgian soldiers, grim and bitter as they must be after so much has been lost, would demand something more than the mere restitution of what was lost. To this we must add that there has been created between Belgium and her allies, especially England, a feeling of close intimacy, which would render a separate peace impossible.

And even from a strict Belgian point of view, isolated from any international interests, it would be most difficult to imagine what terms Germany would offer that would be accepted by King Albert. A complete independence without any restriction would be the main point of course, and how could Germany make such an offer as long as she is at war with England, even though the withdrawal of a great number of troops would be advantageous to her?

However one looks at this question it seems difficult to solve, and it seems to me that the answer lies in the fact that even to-day one can hardly speak of a "Belgian point of view" in international war matters, no more than one could all through history, when Belgium's role has always been a "passif" one, except when her bravery and fighting spirit were concerned. And this "passif" role of Belgium makes it all the more sublime that it did not prevent her from being the first active power to sacrifice herself for the sake of honor and justice.

Many things which happen currently in Belgium show us that most certainly Germany has a great desire to make peace with Belgium but in a different way than by a formal declaration of peace.

Where it is possible to make peace with King Albert and his soldiers, Germany endeavors to win the sympathy of those Belgians who are presently compelled to live under her domination. Even this would release a great number of men, far greater than one thinks, for it is surprising what troops Germany requires in Belgium, because of the fact that the Belgians refuse to do the work. Minister Paul Seghers of the Railways, Post and Telegraph Department, gave some very interesting figures in one of his recent circulars, praising the 50,000 men employed in his department who refused to work even at the huge salaries offered by the Germans, with the result that 50,000 German soldiers were required to drive engines, to send wires, and do everything but fighting, while Germany has use for them at different fronts.

I know in fact of supreme sacrifices made by railway employees and of cases where such refusal was punished by imprisonment in Germany, far away from wife and children, and even by death. And these men simply fulfilled the order given to them in the beginning of the war by their Chief Minister, Paul Seghers, who in a circular forbade them to work for the enemy.

The following stormy interview took place between the chief engineer of one of the big railway depots and the German Captain at the Kommandatur. He spoke bad French, but even if the chief engineer was not able to understand him he knew what was asked of him, for several letters had already told him:

"We want to recognize social life in Belgium and therefore desire your workmen and your staff to take up your work."

Then followed the tempting offers, for the Captain knew that the chief had a great influence over his men.

But the engineer was a true Belgian.

"I can only refer to the order given to us by our supreme chief, Minister Seghers, who has forbidden us to work for the enemy."

But the Captain lost patience. A fist came down on the desk, and he said in still worse French: "But we are your chiefs now and if you don't obey you will soon know what it will cost you."

But the engineer refused, saying that it was against all principles of humanity to oblige men to send wires which might cause the ruin of their brothers or compel others to drive German soldiers there where they would kill friends and relations.

The end, however, was that on the evening of the same day a special train sent workmen and engineers to a prison far away in Germany. But when the train left the station all along the railroad stood a crowd of women and children cheering their husbands and fathers, although many of them did not know what they would eat the day after, and the last words the departing men heard were —"Vive la Belgique!"

This happened in Luttre, one of the industrial centres of Belgium.

There is another thing which shows how anxious the Germans are to make peace with the Belgians. The University of Ghent has been made into a Flemish university. For years and years three million Flemings have asked, and later demanded, a Flemish university at Ghent. It had become the ideal of every Fleming, and two years ago the news that Ghent's university was Flemish would have been followed by an outburst of joy from the greater half of Belgium's population. And now every Fleming refuses to accept from the German invader a privilege which can only be granted to him by King Albert.

This is a net spread in vain by the Germans to win the sympathy of the Flemings while at the same time to encourage a feeling of division between Belgians who speak a different language, but who in this time of need are more united than ever.

Nothing is neglected by the Germans to show to the Belgians how advantageous it would be for them to become Germans. Belgium's territory was always small for the enterprising manufacturer, for export meant that his goods were charged with frontier taxes and the chances of his competition were reduced. German agents point out that if there was no frontier on the east there would be almost no limit to the extension of the Belgian manufacturer's business field.

Those are the temptations, but the Antwerp exporter looks up at the beautiful cathedral tower, his pride and joy, from where now the German flag flies instead of the Belgian. That is enough to make him resist all temptations, for this is not his cathedral, this is not his Antwerp, and would never be, for a bigger Belgium as proposed by Germany would never be Belgium again.

That is why Germany is so anxious for the Belgians to return and to take up their former work.

If, when the time for peace comes, Germany could show a contented although annexed Belgium, and say,—"They do not ask better than to remain under our rule," that would mean a great advantage for Germany. That is why the Belgians prefer to live the hard life of exile in the hope of a better future, rather than recognize a master who has no right to order.

TO PREPARE 10,000 MEALS DAILY IN GREAT KITCHEN

Plans have just been completed in New York for the greatest kitchen in the world, where 10,000 meals a day will be prepared.

It will be "the soul" of the huge new Commodore Hotel, in the words of its proprietor, John McE. Bowman. Vice-President George W. Sweeney, who will be the active manager of the wonderful hostlery on Grand Central Terminal, at Lexington Avenue and Forty-Second street, says it will not be a kitchen, but a "glorified laboratory, a long, glittering room or chain of rooms, floored with marble, walled with white tiles and divided into working compartments with counters of glass and white Carrara marble."

It will take 200 fowl a day to make the chicken consomme, salads, and sandwiches and 600 pounds of beef for consomme.

The baking department, with head baker and seven assistants, will make 40,000 rolls a day, 600 loaves of French bread, brown bread, English muffins and popovers. The pastry and ice cream chef will have more than twenty assistants. A small army will manufacture confectionery, for the Commodore will have its own candy, so that a guest can purchase a box of bon-bons for his wife, sister, mother or the kiddies.

The banquet kitchen will be 50 x 34 feet, the help's kitchen 64 x 34. The fry cook, fish cook, roast cook, sauce cook, and pastry cook each will have his quarters, his great section of range and assistants. A battery of brass pneumatic tubes will bring down orders from the various floors, and electric elevators will shoot back the dishes in response. The main kitchen will be 200 x 64, with more than a hundred cooks. Above it will be the preparatory kitchen, with five butchers for meat, six for chicken and game and htree for fish.

Dishes will get a most thorough and final hot water bath and rinse by machine. They will not be handled again until perfectly dry — a 100 per cent. sanitary perfect system. These machines have a capacity of 5,000 to 8,000 dishes each an hour.

DIED WITH HER SECRET.

Belgian Girl, After Seeing Parents Die, Refused to Divulge Accomplices and is Herself Shot.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A despatch received by the Wireless Press from Amsterdam, says: "The German authorities at Liege, Belgium, arrested, tried, and sentenced to death within three days an influential Liege merchant named Groneret, his wife, and their two daughters, aged 20 and 14 years, on the unproved charge of espionage.

"The father and mother were both shot to death in the presence of their daughters. The latter were offered their freedom if they revealed the names of their parents' accomplices. The girls refused, the eldest stating: 'If we speak we might cause fifty people to be killed. We would rather die alone.'

"She was immediately shot. The youngest girl then was tortured and shot."

Vacation Gives Opportunities For Learning

H. ADDINGTON BRUCE.

The summer vacation from school is now far advanced. Your children, it is to be hoped, have been free to romp and play and grow physically strong through exercise in the great outdoors.

But also it is to be hoped that you have not neglected to give their minds as well as their bodies some exercise during vacation.

If you have been neglecting this, begin to make amends at once. Otherwise you may be painfully surprised at the slowness of your children's progress when they return to school.

And in that case the fault will be yours, not theirs.

By letting them "run wild" and do nothing but run wild, you will have handicapped them mentally. You will have handicapped them both by getting them out of the habit of thinking to good purpose and by lessening their interest in the acquisition of knowledge.

Always remember that the mind, quite as much as the body, needs exercise to be kept in good condition.

I do not mean to say that, after being reminded of this, you should start in to make your children "study some lessons" every day.

That is not necessary. It may do more harm than good, especially if the children are already imbued with the idea that vacations are meant for play and nothing but play.

To force them to study will then be unwise, not least because it is likely to create an antagonistic, rebellious attitude. You must proceed tactfully, most tactfully.

What you ought to do is to employ what psychologists call "indirect suggestion" to induce the children to do some study of their own accord.

If you have taken them to the country to spend their vacation the means of employing indirect suggestion are numerous and readily available.

You have only to make it a practice when walking and talking with your children, of calling their attention to the many interesting natural objects about them.

Get them interested in the birds, the bees, the flowers, the trees, the clouds in the sky.

Call their attention to the hay, the roots, the corn, the wheat growing in the fields. Tell them the wonderful story of the processes by which the wheat is transformed from grain to food for man.

If possible let the children watch these processes for themselves, by showing them the reaping of the wheat, its harvesting and threshing, its conversion into flour at the mill and, finally, the kneading and baking into bread.

Seize the opportunity, too, when you are walking with your children, to tell them historical stories of the country roundabout.

Or, if you choose, you can keep up, perhaps create, an interest in geography by suggesting that the children help you to make maps of the neighboring woods, hills, ponds, streams and villages.

By means such as these you can teach your children in an interesting way much that they did not know before. More important, you will keep their minds healthily exercised and will sharpen their appetite for study.

Nor are your opportunities limited in this respect if the children are spending their vacation in the city.

Take them on outings to pleasure resorts, museums, zoological gardens, art galleries, concert halls, factories, stores, etc.

On all such outings, without their suspecting your purpose you can give them invaluable lessons in the principles of art, music, natural history, the mechanical sciences, business methods, etc.

In this way you will help them pass their time pleasurably and will be able to send them back to school mentally alert, vigorous, and knowledge-desiring.

German iron founders are trying to increase the use of furnace slag in place of gravel and crushed stone in concrete.

Checks and plaids, so decidedly in fashion this summer, bid fair to last well into the winter, and one of their winter guises will be in furs.

Danish Summer Resort Districts Object to Influx of Strangers.

COPENHAGEN, July 31.—Stirred to wrath by a plague of summer resorters, who have unduly added to mouths to be fed on scanty rations, and also bought stocks to smuggle home, two of the most prominent districts have decreed the expulsion of all strangers who have resided four weeks or more in a district. The cost of bread for guests has been doubled, and milk and butter rations have been cut to a third of that given the natives. Heavy rewards for the detection of food purchasers are promised.

EXPERT GETS $25,000 A YEAR

It Comes High to Get Assistance In Relieving Coal Situation.

Ottawa, July 31.—T. McCue, of Pittsburg, who has been appointed to assist the fuel controller of Canada, is to be paid $25,000 a year. The arrangement is for one year. Mr. McCue will look after the American end of the work designed to ensure for Canadians an adequate supply of coal, anthracite nd bituminous supply of coal, anthracite and bituminous there is a question about it on the order paper which may lead to discussion in the House. The situation however, called for an expert, and experts these days command big figures. The Government considers that assurances of a coal supply will compensate fully for any high salary paid in securing it. Mr. McCue knows the coal business.

ONE IN THIRTY WAR DEAD

Boston Statistician Says Majority of Wounds Are on the Head.

NEW YORK, July 31.—A Boston despatch to the World says: Roger Babson, the eminent statistician of Wellesley, has gathered the following figures from a close study of war casualties:

Fourteen men out of every fifteen so far have been safe.

Under present conditions, where man power is being saved, no more than one in thirty is killed.

Only one in 500 lose a limb—a chance no greater than in hazardous conditions at home.

Mr. Babson's conclusions are based on the mortality figures of the French army for the full three years of war. Attention is called to the fact that present fighting is not claiming anywhere near the number of dead recorded for the first two years.

He says: Most of the wounds sustained in the trenches are clean cut and of a nature that a few weeks in the hospital makes the subject as fit as ever. But 300,000 French soldiers have been discharged on account of wounds during the three years of the war.

Most of the wounds received in the trenches are on top of the head, simply scalp wounds. Practically speaking, a wound is either fatal or slight, with but few in between these two extremes."

Sarah Bernhardt Cool and Collected

Jewellery and other valuables were fashionable Nassau Hotel, Long Beach, N.J., and women in pyjamas, night-gowns or other scanty attire thrown from upper windows of the joined in a dash for the open when fire swept the lower part of the well known seaside hostlery just before the breakfast hour.

For a tie it appeared certain that the hotel was doomed, and the men, and women occupying suites there carried out their portable possessions, but the volunteer fire companies, directed by Edward F. Croker; formerly fire chief of New York, and now a resident of Long Beach, subdued the blaze after it had done damage to the lower floor, basement, and part of the board walk adjoining one corner of the building.

The fire was discovered shortly after 7 o'clock, when the greater number of the hundreds of women in the hotel still were sleeping or were dressing for breakfast. Fanned by the fresh winds sweeping in from the ocean, the fire gained rapid headway, and the corridors leading to the exits were crowded with women in scanty attire, fleeing to the open, carrying their jewel cases and such clothing as they could snatch up hastily with them.

Other women appeared at upper windows and threw their treasured valuables to friends on the boardwalk below. In the excited scramble for the doors a dozen women were bruised and in a few cases their flimsy dresses were torn. Several well-known actresses, members of the summer colony, appeared in unconventinal garb.

The fire originated in the kitchen. A chef ran into the dining-room shouting the alarm and followed by clouds of smoke rising from burning grease. The commuters, who were in the dining-rom, hastily left the building or ran to their rooms to arouse their families.

The hotel employees manned the hotel's fire-fighting appliances and attacked the flames, which were spreading swiftly through the basement, while the Long Beach fire alarm was sounded, bringing out the volunteers, led by Chief Croker.

The wine cellar of the hotel was in the path of the flames, and its inflammable contents gave the rapid impetus to the fire, the burning alcohol spreading in all directions.

Many guests who were late sleepers ran down to the main floor in their night clothes. Mme. Sarah Bernhardt did not. The actress remained at her window throughout the excitement, laughing at the predicament of the women who were clustered in airy attire on the walk.

HOW THE DISASTER OCCURRED

Ladies' Home Journal—A gentleman in Cincinnati employs two negroes to work on his rather extensive gardens, which he personally oversees. One morning Sam did not appear.

"Where is Sam, George?" he asked.

"In de hospital, sah."

"In the hospital? Why, how in the world did that happen?"

"Well, Sam he been a tellin' me ev'ry mornin' foh ten yeahs he gwine to lick his wife 'cause o' her naggin'."

"Well?"

"Well, yestiddy she done ovahheah him. Dat's all."

Traveller's Trip Had Real Thrills

After turning his automobile had cast a wheel and scrambled into the ditch where it overturned about two miles east of Keene, and was finally righted and repaired after an extended delay, Mr. James Morrison continued his journey toward Peterborough. He hadn't gone far before the tail latup caught fire and was spreading toward the top when a car behind him speeded up and called the driver's attention to the fire he was trailing. Mr. Morrison is a traveller for the National Manufacturing Company of Brockville, and in that little trip from Keene to Peterborough was more than replete with toil, trouble and thrills.

LAURIER DECLARES THAT HE IS IN THE WAR TO THE END

Answers Sir Clifford Sifton—Has Never Considered Legislation From Standpoint of One Province—Considers Canada as a Whole Without Regard to Race or Creed.

CLAIMS RIGHT TO LEAD

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 2. — Ninety-eight degrees in the shade outside, and 90 in the chambers was the temperature under which Legislators undertook the business of yesterday afternoon.

It is seldom that Sir Wilfrid Laurier ever rises to a question of privilege. Yesterday afternoon in the torrid heat he did so.

"Mr. Speaker,' he said. "The House knows how very seldom I ever rise in this House to call attention to any reference made to myself either inside or outside this House. I crave the consent of the House, however, to rise to-day and make some references to a report appearing in the Toronto Globe. I find in this paper a report of a speech delivered by Sirs Clifford Sifton at Winnipeg. At this speech Sir Clifford declared that no fault could be found with the stand and attitude taken by Laurier since the beginning of the war until recently. His attitude taken on conscription however, had changed matters. Through the attitude then taken, Laurier had abrogated his title to leadership.

"My attitude,' said Sir Wilfrid Laurier, "was attributed by Sir Clifford Sifton to a desire to play solidly to Quebec, Sir Clifford informed his audience that if Laurier were to win the coming election it would mean that Canada would forthwith go out of the war.

Canada as a Whole.

"Even I have to say," continued Sir Wilfrid, "the reference that from nothing which I have said either outside or inside this chamber at any time could Sir Clifford Sifton draw such an inference as he has drawn. At no time in my career have I ever considered legislation from the standpoint of one Province throughout all my public life. I have considered Canada as a whole and have always adhered to a Liberal national principle, without regard to race or creed, but for the general good of all. My attitude to-day, on the first of August, is the same as it was in August of 1914, when the war commenced. I am in the war to the end, not on a basis of compulsion, but on a basis of the voluntary system." (Loud applause from the Liberals side.)

White Speaks on Railways.

Sir Thomas then explained the recommendation of the commissioners as to disposition of dividends, financing, etc. They had considered that this Dominion Railway Company, which would embody all the companies with the exception of the Canadian Pacific Railway, should be able to finance through the flotation of securities on the unencumbered property of the Government roads.

"At this time, however," said Sir Thomas White, "the situation was not as critical as it is to-day. My opinion is that with conditions on the money markets as they are the flotation of securities would be by no means an easy task."

The Minister then dealt with the report of A. H. Smith, the minority commissioner, who had advocated the continuance of private ownership, with the Government bearing a share of the "bridge" lines round Lake Superior. The experts said Sir Thomas had differed, but in some things they were in agreement. They agreed that the C.P.R. was thoroughly sound and should not be interfered with. They also agreed as to the serious liabilities of the C. N .R. and G. T. R. They also agreed as to the serious liabilities of the C. N. R. and G. T. R. They agreed that no assistance was necessary for the C. P. R. They also agreed that the two other roads should be saved from liquidation. On the instruction recommendation they differed. What then was the solution the Government had to place before the House? The great desideratum was service to the country. If the railways were crippled by receivership and liquidation not only would the companies but the public would suffer. If there was ever a time when Canada needed sufficient railway service it was now.

Winnipeg cash prices on wheat were unchanged. The October option closed 2 3-4c lower than Tuesday's close. Rains in portions of the West have had a beneficial effect on the crops. States May Draft Aliens

Special to the Examiner.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The Senate yesterday adopted Senator McCumber's resolution, requesting the President to negotiate with the Allies for an agreement to allow drafting of alien nations in this country.

COMMON COMPLAINT.

Love blinds some men, and it makes lots of others too near-sighted for military service.

Only Ten Men In One Hundred Examined Do Not Ask Exemption

Officials Astonished by the Big Percentage of Claims Here —May Call 189,000 to Fill the Quota—Evidence of Plot to Drug Applicants For Physical Test is Uncovered.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATIONS LONG

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Officials estimated that of the first one hundred men in the city who have answered the call under the draft law fewer than ten men are ready to serve without claiming exemption. The big percentage of claims made in the first atests of the draft in New York has amazed the federal representatives. If they are to be taken as evidence of how the draft is to work in New York, officials believe that at least 189,000 men, or 1,000 for each of the 189 exemption districts, will have to be called to obtain the city's quota of 38,865.

With four local boards making physical examinations and receiving exemption claims almost as fast as the examinations were completed, the officials set to work to round up slackers and detect frauds, which it is almost certain are being practised.

Official examination will be started in District No. 142, First avenue and Eighty-fifth street. That is the district which first completed its lists. One-third of the district quota will answer the call. In other districts where examinations have been made, the registrants waived the five day clause.

Plot Evidence Uncovered.

Roscoe S. Conkling, Deputy Attorney General, obtained evidence that a German physician well known in his community and with a large practise has conspired to deceive Exemption Boards by giving artificial stimulants to registrants about to undergo physical examinations for the purpose of causing unnatural heart action, and thereby disqualifying the candidate. Mr. Conkling said he had information that two men have paid fees to the physician for treatment.

Mr. Conkling first consulted with the board physicians, who stated that little difficulty would be experienced in detecting any such fraud. The physicians said it would be easy to tell a drug heart from a normal heart, and that where artificial stimulants had been applied soon before the registrant underwent examinations that fact would be readily known. Mr. Conkling referred his evidence to the United States Attorney's office with a request that an investigation be promptly made to catch all persons involved in the plot.

Philip Kolman of No. 267 West 153d street, is the first man openly to defy the authority of the government to draft him. He is a Russian who has taken out his first papers, and he passed the physical examination before the board in district 145, in the College of the City of New York. He has almost a perfect physique, is twenty-two years of age and is without dependents.

Thought They Had a Patient.

Charles T. Tuttle, chairman of Board 145, and his associates discouraged by the demands for exemption they had heard from nearly every man who had passed before them, sat up and took notice when, in answer to the question, "Do you claim exemption?" Kolman answered in a loud voice: "I do not." But the hope that they had found a real patriot was dashed a moment later when Kolman added:

'But I won't fight. I am a conscientious objector. I do not intend to take an active part in the war. I am willing to work in some way to help indirectly, like in a munition factory or shipyard, but I won't fight."

Mr Tuttle telephoned to headquarters in the State Arsenal and was informed that the local board could do nothing and that the Adjutant General's office would handle the case. Kolman said he had no inteniton of running away.

"I will go to the shop in Newark where I worked and pack my belongings and resign, and then I will come back and get read to go to jail," he announced calmly.

Examinations were made yesterday in Districts No. 145, No. 168, with headquarters in Wadleigh High School; No. 141, with headquarters in the College of the City of New York, and No. 71, Bushwick avenue and Madison street, Brooklyn.

Physical Examinations Long.

Officials were surprised at the length of time required for the physical examinations. Working as fast as they could, six physicians in District No. 145 were able to examine only four men an hour. At that rate it will not be possible to complete the examinations in the three days allowed by the draft rules. Chairman of boards in all sections made inquiry what to do. They said they could not possibly make thorough examination of 400 men in three days and that they believed to slight the work would be little less than criminal. The boards were told to do the best they could, but in any event to be thorough. It is regarded as certain that extension of time will have to be given. In all probability examinations will last five or six days.

Those boards which have been establishing speed records found they had been making more work for themselves than they had expected. All men who have been examined so far have waived their five day privilege, allowed from the date of the posting of the lists. They have made exemption claims and in many instances have presented affidavits to support their claims. The rules provide that the Board is compelled to consider exemption claims within three days after proof is filed. The result will be that Board 145 and 71 will have to take up exemption cases for detailed consideration to-day and on Friday when in the midst of the hard work of making the physical examinations of the majority of those called in the three parts of the quota.

CHINA PAINTING
Mrs. Langley McCarthy
Teacher Bisculf's New and Beautiful Work in China Painting.

Parents, do you wish for your children to love and respect you? If you do, when your child comes to you for advice be sure to give good advice; don't say, "Oh, go away; don't bother me; go, ask your mother," or some such answer. Or if they come to their mother perhaps she says, "Go to your father, I am busy." The child will soon get afraid to ask advice for fear of being rebuked and it will be apt to seek advice somewhere else. If you take an interest in your children then they will take an interest in you.

Who does not feel more cheerful and contented for receiving a polite bow, a genial "good morning," a hearty shake of the hand? Who does not make himself the happier by these little expressions of fellow-feeling and good-will? Silence and a stiff, unbending reserve are especially selfish and essentially vulgar.

MUSIC IN THE HOME

MUSIC AND MONEY.

What is the use of studying music?" said a young man recently. "It will never bring me in a dollar." Perhaps the statement is correct, but the question is not a corollary of it. Surely it would be worth while doing in this short life something which would be wholly unrelated to dollars. We have much to do with money. Our professions have money in view. Sometimes our avocations have a money value. But the real hobby, the hobby men love most, is the one which costs something. Our educational experts are continually warning us that the schools are not co-related with life; in other words, that the knowledge we gain there does not help us to find a certain number of dollars at stated times. Therefore they urge Reform, Change, anything that will bring us money. Whether it brings us culture and wisdom, or not, seems a secondary matter. Yet the world remembers John Ruskin, who paid for the publication of his own books and had no debt to a publisher's kindness.

This does not mean to prove that money is unnecessary. No one would be fool enough to make that statement. It is vitally necessary, but the need for dollars always should be secondary to the need for brains and soul. If the young man who seems contemptuous of music because he can make no money from it should ever go courting—! But the hypothesis is difficult. Men of sense do not marry a young woman because she has money. They choose the girl for her personal, lovable qualities. She may have money, but observation leads one to the belief that she frequently is a stenographer.

Music is like a nice girl. It can bring comfort to a man's heart. It can make his home a place he longs to see. It can broaden his sympathies. It can prevent him from being a mean dog, hated by all the world. Best of all, it can make him spend money for spiritual pleasure.

THE OFFENSIVE THIRD FINGER

Counting our fingers after the European manner, which considers the thumb as No. 1, we discover that No. 3 is the longest of the whole group. Piano teachers have been much worried over the carelessness of Nature in this respect. Again and again in works on piano playing one comes across some passing comment which expresses irritation over a condition of affairs militating against a perfect technique. There are two possible ways of meeting the difficulty. The first is to accept the situation as gracefully as possible, allowing oneself occasional opportunities for criticism of Nature's incredible folly. That is the method which generally is adopted. The other way has not been tried so far, but one may mention it, though it is by no means recommended. Let the piano-teacher examine each pupil's hand, and decide how much of this long finger must be cut off in order to make the hand properly efficient. Then let the pupil go to the hospital and have the trimming done as carefully as possible. It may be said that there is precedent for something of the sort. Many young men desirous of joining the Army were discovered to possess hammer toes or other foot-troubles capable of adjustment by a skillful surgeon. Cheerfully they went into hospital, had the fault corrected and in due course were able to appear in khaki greatly to the satisfaction of themselves and their friends.

MLLE. GERMAINE MALEPART.

Mlle Germaine Malepart of Montreal has won the Prix d'Europe offered by the Provincial Government of Quebec for public competition among pianists of an advanced degree of instruction. In consequence Mle Malepart has the right to an extended musical course in Paris or elsewhere across the seas, at Provincial expense. It is hardly likely that she can take advantage of the opportunity in wartime. Paris just now is thinking of other things than music study. French pianists of military age are in the army, and most of the others are engaged in war-work, but the distinction Miss Malepart has won may serve her for the present.

It is not clear, however, that even after the war a music student in this country will necessarily require a term of training in Europe. Our Conservatories have a course of study modelled on the best experience of Paris, and other European capitals. In many cases the organization has become more definite and the curriculum broader. We know the requirements of Canadian pupils better than any overseas teacher. We have a better chance to guard them from exploitation or insult. There is no reason why a young person of talent born in Canada, living in Canada, should go outside of Canada for instruction.

There is an artistic advantage in travel. That is admitted. Travel gives breadth, knowledge and sanity to anyone of sensitive temperament, but it is not a scholastic necessity. Meantime, one may congratulate the Provincial Government of Quebec for taking a step in advance of all other public bodies of Canada. The recognition of the Fine Arts by governmental assistance has always been a fault of British administration, not only here, but everywhere else. The Ontario Government, probably would be ill-advised to offer travelling scholarships, but there are other ways in which the study of music and the advancement of pupils, whose gifts are greater than their resources in money, might be given encouragement.

PREFERENCE FOR SINGING IN ENGLISH.

A story is told of a man and his wife who went out for a Saturday afternoon in the country. In the midst of their enjoyment of nature, Mr. Farmer's goat spied the couple and went over to get an introduction The man hid behind a large boulder until Billy took after him. In his endeavour to keep ahead of his pursuer, the city visitor went round and round the boulder quite ignoring any speed limit. The wife, seated most composedly on the top of the rail fence nearby shouted, "Go the other way a bit Harry, or you'll get dizzy." Now that may have been good advice — it was at least thoughtful. But if she had been a vocal soloist and in a fit of absent-mindedness, had given that advice in French or Italian it is certain it wouldn't have been worth anything, for few Canadians know enough to any foreign language to take advice in it.

There are those who think that the local singing in other languages than our own is at times a bit overdone. A gentleman said to the writer a short time ago, "I do not object to anyone singing in a foreign tongue —if he wants to that is his business —and I do not object to others listening to songs in French or Italian if it gives them any pleasure; but any artist that requests my company at his concert must use the King's English or it means little or nothing to me." And that man was pretty musical too.

The artist's side of the question is, of course another matter. But at least one is on record as preferring to sing in English. This soloist says: "Personally, while I enjoy singing in four languages, preferring to sing a work in the tongue in which it is written, I am very partial to English. Italian is noted for its open vowels, although in English, vowels are quite as free. Yet, judging from the kind of English that some sing, I should say it must be a very difficult language indeed. It is a recognized fact that people in general sing a foreign language better than their own because they take more trouble with it. We have those whose diction is lovely, but there are others who give themselves little trouble to enunciate with tongue, teeth and lips. But this last I do not mean sticking out the lips and making foolish faces but using the lip muscles strengthened through practice so that completely under control they help form and carry every syllable enunciated to the farthest corner of the hall. The French language requires more study than any other; there is demanded in it a finesse that is almost affectation, it is not natural."

There are hosts of foreign compositions that are of the highest rank, and show off the voice remarkably well, but unless one understands the sentiment of them through the words, their best influence is not exerted.

THE MOUTH ORGAN.

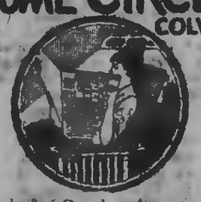
It is said by Dr. Edward Stubbs that the most popular instrument amongst the soldiers is the mouth-organ. He writes as follows concerning it: "The apotheosis of the mouth organ is certainly one of the war's great surprises. That the Teutonic instrument from which untutored boys extracted strident noises, should go down to posterity as the British soldier's most approved depression ameliorator is, in truth more than surprising. In moderately capable hands the mouth organ is not unmusical, and the secret of its universality is of course that it can be conveniently stowed away in any apology for a pocket. It is difficult to realise how ardently the mouth organ has been appreciated by our brave boys in remote corners of the earth. The humble instrument provides musical manna in the wilderness. Many detachments and small bodies of men move from point to point to harmonica music. Two Seaforth Highlanders at a critical moment during a German attack steadied their comrades by getting on the parapet of a trench, and playing in the midst of a heavy fire. For this they deservedly received the "Distinguished Conduct Medal." It seems extraordinary that the business of playing a mouth organ should ever be distinguished conduct. Still men have been decorated for playing the bagpipes. We remember the story of Dargai.

A NEW HYMN BOOK.

Those who have seen the new Methodist Hymn Book declare that a vast amount of unliterary verse and unmusical music formerly common to this church has been scrapped. There was a time when the members and clergy believed that all of Charles Wesley's hymns were so important that they constituted a sort of secondary revelation and must be used at any cost. People are not so exacting to-day. For that reason it is said that some 400 new hymns and tunes are to be found in the book of praise which will be on the market towards the end of the year. Experience has shown that out of the 900 odd hymns in the old book most clergymen had not more than twenty or thirty favorites which they used in service after service. The writer knows of one preacher who seldom allowed a Sunday to pass without calling for one of the most trivial hymns in the book. Choristers were known to leave because this hymn got on their nerves. Yet the practice had the advantage of producing congregational singing of the highest order; that is, in volume not necessarily in rhythmic exactitude. If this hymn is left out of the new collection that clergyman may be forced to superannuate.

There are some hymns which might be sung every Sunday with advantage and pleasure, masterpieces like Jesus, Lover of My Soul, or When I Survey. There are tunes like St. Ann's, Tallis, Rockingham, which are a part of the religious fabric of many good minds. It is said that many of these are highly popular in the trenches where they divide the honors with some gay English music hall melody. At Valcartier during the early days of the war the Y.M.C.A. men found that there was neither incongruity nor irreverence in throwing on the movie screen first Tipperary, and then O God our Help in Ages Past.

The HOME CIRCLE COLVMN



Paralysis Cured: A remarkable case of complete recovery in what appeared to be a hopeless case of Paralysis is reported by Dr. Jas. M. Yates, of New Mexico in Ellingwood's Therapeutist for June. I will give the description of the case and method of treatment in Dr. Yate's own words and I hope that many other distressing cases of a similar nature may likewise be relieved:

"A rather large, fleshy woman, four months pregnant, suffered an attack of paralysis, involving the whole left side. This included paralysis of the face, and of the masseter muscles, involving the movements of the mouth. It also prevented swallowing and speaking. The case had been in this condition a week before I saw it. The physicians attending had used hypodermics, but no benefit was apparent from any measure that had been adopted.

I will acknowledge that the peculiar condition appearing in the case, some what baffled me. The heart was very weak, and for this I gave her small doses of cactus, drop by drop. I then made a strong solution of epsom salts and wrung from this, as hot as she could stand it, without complaining a blanket. Removing her entire clothing we wrapped her in this hot blanket, and wrapped about this, dry blanket, enough to retain the heat. She was kept in this for near an hour, until she made signs of discomfort, when we removed it and wrapped her in dry hot blankets, but continued the influence of the cactus.

From this course of treatment, the patient quite rapidly regained the power of speech, and little by little, the power of motion. Where for a week previously there had been no improvement, the improvement was very marked now, in twenty-four hours. The benefits continued to full recovery, the pregnancy was uninterrupted, and labour completed at full term in a normal manner with the birth of a perfect child. Readers are at liberty to draw what conclusions from this they may. In my mind, the epsom salts hot pack, exercised the larger part of the curative influence. The general tonic influence of cactus may have been of benefit also."

CLUB NOTES.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Send full name and address with four cents in postage.

Some of the pleas of sick and suffering humanity and their demands upon the physician would really be laughable if they were not so serious. A man once came to the office in a very weak and greatly debilitated condition. He admitted that he had been steadily going down for over two years. From a vigorous and robust working man of 160 pounds he had dropped to 125 pounds and could hardly drag himself around. When told that his condition was such that it would take several months of thorough and careful treatment to restore him to health he was quite indignant and seemed to think that a couple of weeks or a month at the most with a few doses of medicine was all that would be required.

Now, as a matter of fact if the man had taken a couple of weeks' complete rest and proper treatment when he first began to go down, I have no doubt but he would have been fully restored to health and would have saved himself, not only from two years' suffering, but from the great expense which afterwards was necessary.

A woman wrote me that she had received a severe blow on her side about 7 years before and suffered from the bruise for about 3 years, then it broke into a running sore and appeared to be getting worse after four years and she thought something ought to be done for it. Now just think of letting anything like that run on for seven years from the time of the injury before going to a doctor. The delay in this case was almost fatal as symptoms of cancer were beginning and it was only by the most vigorous and thorough treatment that the disease was arrested and a restoration to health secured.

I would use column after column of space telling you of specific cases of long continued suffering that might easily have been relieved by a little timely treatment at the right time.

Warts.— I told you not long ago about how a trained nurse had accidently gotten the juice of milkweed upon a troublesome seed wart and was surprised and delighted to find it greatly benefitted, she applied it some more and the wart disappeared. This cure was used by me when a child and has been used by many people for many years. The report about the case of the nurse has brought forth many letters of approval and testimonials. I have seen the juice of milk of the milkweed used to heal up the scalds or blisters between the toes, for "toe itch," soft corns and even for raw, itching sores between the fingers.

Home Remedies: Now, I have no doubt but that you know of some very good and practical home remedy that would relieve some poor sufferer. Why don't you pass it along? Write me about it of about your heaviest meal at night; eat Health Club will do the rest, will help you to help others.

Dear Doctor: In one your recent articles you mentioned that exercise and a proper diet were necessary to overcome constipation. I want to know what a man who gets very little outdoor exercise should eat, and what would be good exercise for him.

(Answer)—Eat whole wheat breakfast cereals and any fruit you like. Have a light lunch at noon of whole wheat bread, milk and fruit. Eat youpr heaviest meal at night; eat mutton, beef, poultry, vegetables, fruit and whole wheat bread. By all means get out and take a brisk walk of a mile or two every day. Put up a cross bar in your doorway, and exercise on it night and morning. Punching the bag is good exercise. Learn a few twisting and bending exercises.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

The home, be it ever so humble, is the one sweet spot to which all eyes are longingly turned, and from which all happiness radiates.

The proud boast of the old English common law is that "a man's home is his castle." The four winds of heaven might blow through the chinks and crannies, but the king himself might not cross its threshhold unbidden. Only the law's stern necessity in pursuit of crime could authorise an unwelcome intrusion.

The sanctity of former times still scrupulously surrounds it, and the sacredness of its portal has been but enhanced by the advancement of civilisation. The modern home needs neither towers, battlements nor bastions to protect it from the assaults of the powerful. The humblest citizen to defend his lowly shack can invoke the protecting arm of the whole nation.

The governments of all the world foster the love of home. Liberal laws are enacted with this end in view. The public domain is generously bestowed upon bonafide settlers. The various states, without, we believe, a single exception, have exempted the homes from seizure for even a just debt. In short, the protection and sacredness of the home goes side by side with that of the person. It is the commendable desire of every worthy citizen to be the owner of his own home in fee simple, and to encourage this desire have all these beneficent laws been enacted.

Let us build our house on the hill-top of cheerfulness, so high that no shadows may rest upon it, and where the morning comes early, and the evening tarries late. She is to be pitied whose house is in some valley of grief, with the longest night and shortest day. God has put us here to make the world brighter and happier by our lives and everyone of us should study how to be a blessing to others. We must get the wrinkles out of our brow and we must have smiling faces. Let a man go home at night worn and wearied by the toils of the day and how soothing is a word dictated by a cheerful disposition. It is sunshine falling on his heart. He is happy and the cares of life are forgotten. Smiles, kind words and looks characterise the children, and peace and love have their dwellings there. Home should be the centre of joy.

A cheery "Good morning" often sends a ray of sunshine streaming through the innermost recesses of a household, resting there all the livelong day, and again follows hastening footsteps into the mart of business, lighting up and brightening "the way of the world" as it goes. A hearty "Good night" often soothes many a troubled mind to rest, and heals the wounds which have either come anew to a struggling soul, or been re-opened by the harsh words or deeds that are spoken or done in season or out of season, as the daily battle of our life progresses.

Probably nineteen-twentieths of the happiness you will ever have you will get at home. The independence that comes to a man when his work is over, and he feels that he has run out of the storm into the quiet harbor of home, where he can rest in peace with his family, is something real. It does not make much difference whether you own your house or have one little room in that house, you can make that little room a home to you.

Although housekeeping and homemaking are the most important of all things, yet they are sought after the very least. Girls get married who do not know how to make a loaf of bread or boil a potato, expecting somehow that these things will take care of themselves, as they can live happy with a man in his ignorance, knowing too that the heart and stomach of a man are so friendly that they cannot be separated. Ignorance cannot be made bliss in housekeeping, and there is no surer way to lose the respect of a husband than to spoil his dinner. He can not thrive long on purely a love diet.

No boy, no girl, can ever come to be utterly bad who remembers only love and tenderness and sweetness as associated with father and mother in the old time home. Give them manly and womanly example, give them training, give them the inspiration of devoted things. Do not care as much as to whether you are accumulating money, so that you can leave them a fortune. We really believe that the chances are against that being a blessing to a boy. But leave them an accumulated fortune of memories and inspirations and examples and hopes, so that they are rich in brain and heart and soul.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Choice Of Sides

The Cloud That Came Between the Lovers.

By ELINOR MARSH

Something more than half a century ago there occurred in America a great convulsion pertaining to human liberty.

Up to that time it was the most stupendous of its kind that ever had occurred. In that great clash father was set against son, brother against brother, friend against friend.

Northern men in the south and southern men in the north found themselves called upon to make decisions of vital importance.

No one, except aged persons, has seen the palmy antebellum days in the southern states, when the patriarchal system was in vogue, when the planter was considered a sort of sovereign, when his family were elevated to virtue and restrained from vice by a sense of noblesse oblige. All this has given place to what we call progress. But progress is liable to take a step backward in putting on new apparel, and the south today has new vigor in her veins.

Colonel Joseph Archibald was a typical southern planter. In 1850 he had lived half a century and had not kept pace with the times. He wore a ruffled shirt, brass buttons on his coat and a hat of real beaver—that is, in winter. In summer he wore an expensive panama straw. The colonel had no real right to his title. Any southern man of prominence in those days was likely to be dubbed general, colonel or major, to distinguish him from the commoner or the man who did not own many acres and many negroes.

Colonel Archibald's family consisted of his wife, his oldest child, a son—when this story begins a man of twenty-three—a daughter of twenty and four other children, boys and girls, all under sixteen years of age. Not one of these young persons but had been trained never to do anything unbecoming to his or her station. The planter of that period was misjudged because there were persons in the south who were too ready to talk about their honor and too hot in its defense. But the real southern gentleman of the mid-nineteenth century was an inheritance of these splendid men who brought about the birth of a nation.

Not far from the Archibald plantation dwelt another planter named Sheffield. He had married a northern woman, and her children were taught by her that the system of making slaves of human beings was totally wrong.

Her doctrine made no difference in the plantation over which she presided as mistress unless it tended to bring about a better treatment of the negroes. Be that as it may, those on the Sheffield plantation were happy and quite content with their lot, there being no runaways among them.

Harry Sheffield was the only son and heir to this estate. He was educated at a New England university, where his mother's prejudice against the labor system then in vogue in the south was stimulated. He was used to defend it to his fellow students on the ground that it had been planted in the south, not by the southern people; that they had inherited it and were not responsible for it. The only thing they could do in the premises was to make it as wholesome as possible.

Young Sheffield returned from college to his plantation home a couple of years before the outbreak of the war which was destined to effect so marked a change in the labor system of the southern states. He and Alma Archibald were of an age to mate, and it was not long before Harry went to Colonel Archibald and asked for his daughter's hand. Before the colonel would consent he told Harry that he had heard that his views upon the question that was agitating the country were singular and he would like to know what they were. Harry was too conscientious to win the girl he loved by a false statement and told the truth.

"I honor you, sir," said the colonel, "for your frankness in acknowledging what will make you unpopular among the people of the south, but in view of the importance of your opinions I do not think it best either for you or for my daughter that you should wed. We are on the eve of a great issue in the south, and a house divided against itself will surely fall. With your views acted upon conscientiously, your place is or soon will be in the north instead of the south."

While Harry Sheffield was obliged to admit the truth of the argument, he was not willing to subscribe to it, for true love subscribes to no argument that separates lovers. But he did not consider it honorable for him to take Alma surreptitiously under the circumstances. He was much troubled about the impending crisis and the part he should take when the storm broke, fearing greatly that if forced to take sides he could not conscientiously enter upon the defense of a system that he condemned. Under the circumstances he bade adieu to Alma, the lovers agreeing to wait for the approaching gale to blow itself out, after which perhaps her father might reconsider the matter.

One of the great strains of the war between the states at its opening was the decision of so many persons as to which side they would take. There were men in both armies, men who became the principal leaders, who had a hard struggle to decide on which side they would fight. The regular army was full of such cases. In one instance a young officer who felt that his duty lay in one direction, while his sympathies lay in the other, became temporarily insane.

The bulk of these persons who were in doubt were southern born men who had been educated at West Point or Annapolis. Cases like that of Harry Sheffield, a southern man with nothing that could be interpreted as an obligation either way, were more rare. But Harry had an additional reason for fighting against his own people, in his sweetheart. He felt that his duty called upon him to fight with the north, but he must not only fight against his own people, but his doing so would separate him from the southern girl he loved.

Harry Sheffield's state, Tennessee, was divided. East Tennessee was all for the Union, while middle and west Tennessee sympathized with the Confederacy. The Sheffield plantation was in middle Tennessee, not far from Nashville. When the struggle between the north and the south came Harry walked the floor all one night struggling with himself to do what he considered his duty. His heart was for the south, but he believed that his duty lay with the north. When morning came without submitting himself to endure a goodby with those he loved he started for east Tennessee and enlisted in a federal regiment organizing at Knoxville.

* * * * * * *

One morning in the spring of 1865 Major Sheffield, having been mustered out of the United States service, mounted his horse in Nashville and took a road leading southward. Reaching a rise in the ground, he shaded his eyes with his hand and peered down upon the place where he had been born and raised.

The homestead was there, but it was a sorry looking structure. The row of negro huts were still standing, and here and there a negro was moving about in the general ruins. By the proclamation of emancipation issued during the war they were all free, but evidently some of them clung to their old home. The owner had been killed commanding a regiment of Confederate troops during the war, and Harry Sheffield was now the owner of what was left of a fine estate. His mother had gone north to her people, taking with her the younger children.

"Thank heaven," muttered Sheffield, "my interests are in no better condition than those of my neighbors."

Riding on, he pulled up between two posts that had supported the gate to the plantation and surveyed the scene at closer view. An old negro came tottering toward him.

"Hello, Ben!" said Sheffield.

The man looked at him scrutinisingly, then exclaimed:

"Fo' de Lawd, it's Mars Harry!"

The major asked what had become of Colonel Archibald and was told that he had been one of the first to succumb to the storm that had swept over the south. His oldest son had died of camp fever. His wife and Alma and the children had gone south to Louisiana to her people, who lived there.

"I suppose, Ben," said Sheffield, "the Archibald plantation is in as bad shape as this, isn't it?"

"Wo'se, Mars Harry, wo'se. Yo' see, dere was fightin' over dar, and de plantation house war riddled."

Sheffield cast his eyes about him, taking in the forlorn appearance of his once happy home, then turned his horse's head and started toward the Archibald plantation.

When he reached it he saw a woman on the veranda giving instructions to some negroes who were carrying baggage into the house. It was Alma, who with her mother had returned to their ruined home. Harry rode up to the veranda, dismounted and stood face to face with the girl he had left without even a goodby four years before. She looked at him for some time without a word, then, influenced by what had occurred since their last meeting, put her hands to her face and wept.

Tears had checked reproaches. Sheffield moved toward her, put his arms about her, and her head sank upon his breast.

This scene was typical of thousands of others. The struggle was over, and the system that had caused it, a system that no person living had been responsible for, had died a violent death.

Sheffield resolved that his first task should be to bind up the wounds of this stricken family before he attended to his own affairs. A college chum wrote him offering pecuniary assistance, which he accepted for himself and used for the necessities of the Archibald family. As soon as he could get workmen he sent them to patch up the holes left by cannon balls in the homestead and rebuilt fences with his own hands. Not till he had got the property into fair shape did he begin work on his own premises.

Sheffield married Alma Archibald and took her to his plantation, the other property being left to Mrs. Archibald and those of her family who had survived the struggle. The major was one of the first to adapt himself to the new labor systems and in time got his property in working order. He was also one of the first men sent to the federal congress after the reign of carpet bag law had ceased. Though he had fought on the side of the north, he was one of the most trusted of southern men. Since then there is no questions asked as to which a man supported in that unfortunate struggle. When he died, there being no cemetery for Union soldiers in which to place his body, it was laid to rest beside Confederates.

Are You Tied Up Indoors?

If so, your whole system naturally gets tied up too.

THOUGHT CHILD WAS DYING

"Cholera Infantum"

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry

Cured Her

Mothers should look well after their children during the hot summer months, as this is the time of the year this trouble is most prevalent. It begins with a profuse diarrhoea, the stomach becomes irritated, vomiting and purging set in, and the child rapidly loses flesh, and becomes weak, prostrated and languid.

Mrs. B. A. Cirwell, Rossway, N.S., writes: "I can recommend, most highly, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. A friend of mine whose little daughter was ill with cholera infantum was given up by the doctors. The little one's mother asked me to come in and see the child. I told her I had a bottle of Dr. Fowler's" and asked her if she would try it. When the bottle was half used the child was well. This cure was a miraculous one, for I thought the child was dying at the time."

There is nothing can take the place of Dr. Fowler's.

There is nothing just as good.

Do not accept a substitute, and thus endanger your life.

STUBBORN MAN IS HE.

British Farmer is Conservative to the Core.

The British farmer, like the British oak, is difficult to bend. But agriculturists the world over are fashioned after this style—wary, tenacious, and independent; conservative, too, to their hearts' core.

This is often spoken of as if it were a causeless phenomenon, or merely foolish. But it is not so, and it is largely due to the very great ignorance in farming matters which prevails outside rural acres that any mutual suspicions which exist are current. Agriculture is an art which relies so much on and suffers so freely from the stern forces of nature that the husbandman is almost necessarily a solitary figure, strongly stamped with the temperament which his environment calls forth; but this makes the farmer individualistic and self-contained. The independence of his calling is inseparably associated with that quality which connection with the land alone can give, and this perhaps makes him unduly impatient of criticism and reform. Possibly, also, it is responsible for that hatred of change with which he is credited; but this characteristic, ingrained and inbred through the centuries, is more difficult to understand, and is in the nature of self-defence.

History shows it continually, and it is fair to the farmer to bear the causes in mind when we ask him to depart suddenly from the ways of his ancestors. These ways, moreover, are not mere adhesions to a past "hoary grey with eld," like those of his brother agriculturist in the changeless East, who farms as Cain farmed, but they are those which time has very slowly and deliberately sanctioned as being safe and sure, after prolonged experience of a few slowly introduced modifications of an older system.

The British farmer learned the laws of average long before the actuary did, and it is this that makes him long-headed and sceptical of the advantage of any help from Government if it is confined to one year; so we must not be surprised if compulsion is resented. But the husbandman cannot be altogether absolved on this score, and some of the recorded instances of his obstinate dislike of change are very amusing. The introduction of winnowing machines, well described in "Old Mortality," called forth much bucolic wrath. "A new-fangled machine impiously thwarting the will of Divine Providence by raising wind by human art," instead of patiently awaiting nature, or soliciting it by prayer. Sermons were preached against the vile innovation, and so naturally saturated by the elements is Agricola that his morals are confused as well as his judgment.

There was more ground for complaint, possibly, when the folding of sheep was cautiously introduced. The lambs would certainly break their legs. Yet the farmer's deep-rooted suspicion of change has much to justify itself, far more than is commonly believed. A mistake is made, say, in deep cultivation, and may be fatal in impoverished crops for many years.—London Times.

S. PAUL'S DUMMY DOME.

One Seen From Inside Not That of Outside.

The repair work now going on at St. Paul's Cathedral calls attention to the wonderful dummy dome of this building.

When you stand in the centre of this great building and glance upwards it is not the undercovering of the real dome that you see, but a separate structure altogether. Neither this false dome nor the lead-covered one above as seen from the roadside plays any part whatever in holding up the structure.

The graceful stone lantern, in addition to the ball, and cross that adorn its summit, is entirely held in place by an ingeniously-concealed cone. This cone is built of bricks, 18 inches thick, strengthened by iron bars which run through them and bind the mass together. The cone is carried on four piers, 40 feet square, that run down to the foundations.

The dummy domes also rest on these piers, but, as already explained, carry no weight. It is the cone, and the cone alone, that has to bear the weight of the lantern, ball, and cross above it, and heavy and massive exterior stonework. Indeed, the four piers have to sustain an estimated weight of nearly 45,000 tons.

Then, whereas the inner dome is of brick, the outer one is of wood and coated with lead. This dummy dome, famous for its majestic beauty and artistic conception, has a diameter of 145 feet and a circumference of 420 feet, the inner one being some 200 feet above the pavement of the cathedral.

The repair work now in hand, which is to generally strengthen the whole edifice, including the piers supporting the cone and domes, is expected to occupy ten years and cost over £70,000.—Tit-Bits.

Smoke Screens in Naval Warfare.

The smoke screen or smoke attack that is so effective in naval warfare originated in the United States navy, being first used in our destroyer fleet when it was under the command of Captain Eberle.

The writer well remembers being present at such an attack off Block Island several years ago, when five groups of destroyers, twenty in all, crossed the head of a column of battleships until they were in the windward position, and then, with the leading destroyers smoking heavily, swept down the line of the enemy at a distance of about 1,300 yards. The pall of dense smoke rolled down to leeward, enveloping the enemy and screening the destroyers from observation, but above the dense and low lying bank of smoke could be seen the successive pairs of fighting tops of the battleships, and had the maneuver been an actual battle some of the capital ships would have been heavily torpedoed.—Scientific American.

A Race for Honors.

During the war there has been an interesting contest between two noted regiments—the South Wales Borderers and the Rifle Brigade—in regard to the Victoria Cross. Before the war the Borderers had for some years held the record for winning the highest number of crosses—sixteen; the Riflemen following with fifteen. Then the latter won two more and held the lead for a time. But the Borderers again asserted themselves through the agency of Captain Buchanan and Private Flynn and now hold pride of place with eighteen crosses.

Their earliest V. C. was Assistant-Surgeon Douglas, who won the honor in the sixties for saving a ship's crew near the Andaman Islands. Two noted winners were Lieuts. Melville and Coghill, whose distinctions were awarded posthumously. They swam the Tugela, after the disaster at Isandhlwana, and saved the regimental colors at the cost of their lives. Lieut. Bromhead won his cross for gallantry at Rorke's Drift at the same period.

How Lloyd George Won Fame.

I dare say I should have remained many years a country solicitor if my name had not been brought into some public notice by what is known as the Llanfrothan burial case. It was one of those peculiarly harsh cases which excite passion and attract public attention. The circumstances were these. A quarryman, in dying, had asked to be buried by the side of a daughter whom he had greatly loved. The daughter was buried in the parish churchyard, and the quarryman was a Dissenter. The vicar at first was ready to comply with the prayer, but being served with a notice under the Burials Act passed by the late Mr. Osborne Morgan—a notice which compelled the vicar to give the body a place in the burial ground, he became angry. He replied that he would bury the body in the churchyard, but that he would bury it where he liked, and he chose as the spot for the poor quarryman, not the place he had asked beside his daughter's grave, but a spot bleak and sinistery in which were buried the bodies of the unknown drowned that were washed up from the sea in this region of shipwrecks, or of suicides, or of the few Jews that died in the district. The people came to me! I advised that the gates of the churchyard should be forced. They were forced. There were fines for trespass, and then long litigation. By the time the struggle had come to an end, my name was known all over the principality.—Lloyd George in Tit-Bits.

Hunting Ground of Hurons Now Favored Holiday Haunt

The regions pictured here are in the Highlands of Ontario, and were the hunting grounds of the Hurons before the ships of Spain turned to the westward from Palos. The Hurons selected in these Highlands of Ontario some of the loveliest districts in Canada. The scenic beauties, the health giving atmosphere and the excellent fishing are now attracting a steadily growing army of visitors. One day's journey from most of the large centres places the traveller in Muskoka, Lake of Bays or Algonquin Park, and the Grand Trunk lines thread the territory in such a manner that every point is made easy of access. From the train you may visit the outfitting stores and then launch out into the deep woods by canoe. Whole families now spend their vacations camping in Algonquin Park. Fleets of steamers give service over the Muskoka Lakes and the Lake of Bays. While these districts have lost none of their primitive loveliness every form of recreation has been provided, including golf links for the devotees of the royal and ancient game. There are modern hotels for the lover of social life and quiet spots for those who wish to be near the heart of nature, while in Algonquin Park log cabin camp hotels have been constructed back from the beaten paths of travel, which combine primitive surroundings with the comforts found in hotels in large cities.

Piles

PILES, or hemorrhoids, are the cause of keen distress to thousands who do not yet know Dr. Chase's Ointment.

There are three kinds of piles—itching, bleeding and protruding. The itching, burning sensations usually increase at night, and the misery which many people endure is beyond description. The bleeding is sometimes so profuse as to cause death. Protruding piles are most dreaded because it is commonly believed that a surgical operation is the only means of cure.

If you will read the letters quoted in the daily press there will be little chance for scepticism as to the certainty of Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for every form of piles. Or, better still, ask your friends about it, for Dr. Chase's Ointment is recognized among doctors and druggists as well as by the public generally as the only real cure for this wretched disease.

"How is So and So?" I inquired of a senior officer of a territorial regiment, mentioning a friend of mine who, at the age of 47, took his commission just before the war, and has been out from the first. "He is very well, and (no longer a young 'un) has 'made good' as a soldier with the best. Coolest man under fire I ever saw. Never winces or ducks, whether it's shell, shrapnel, or whizz bangs; and when the biggest thing of all, a 'Minnie' comes over, and nearly gets him, it might be a football, for the 'wind up' he shows. But he swore himself faint because a man who shares his dug-out snored."

BRUSILOFF RESIGNS FROM RUSSIAN COMMAND

BRITISH GAIN ALONG YPRES-ROULERS RAILWAY

British Troops Again Smash Back The German Defenses

Field Marshal Haig Reports Progress Made Near Ypres-Roulers Railway---Deep Mud Following Heavy Terrific Rains Has Halted Main Drive However---Russia's Shattered Armies in Galicia Have Been Reformed to Some Extent and Enemy Advance is Checked.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, August 2.—British troops again smashed back the German defenses and retook the position in the neighbourhood of the Ypres-Roulers railway where German troops had resisted the advance, Field Marshal Haig reported to-day.

"In the neighbourhood of the Ypres-Roulers railway, where the enemy yesterday succeeded at great cost in gaining a foothold in advanced positions, our counter-attack drove him back, re-establishing our former line," the British Commander-in-Chief reported.

PARIS, August 2.—Continued bad weather in Belgium with but scant fighting were reported in to-day's official statement. On other fronts, however, raiding and intense artillery duels were reported.

The War Office said: "At Allemant we carried out a successful raid taking prisoners. Southeast of Rheims the enemy twice was unsuccessful in attempted raids. In Avocourt wood, in the evening, the Germans renewed their attacks, without success. Raids in the wood and around Apremont were completely broken down."

LONDON, August 2.—The resumption of the allied drive in Flanders waited on hot sun to-day. The movement of the masses of men in bottomless mud was impossible. The transfer of artillery to places nearer the advanced line for future barrage fire could not be accomplished over the ooze. Until some of the mud from nearly thirty-six hours of solid rain dries up the drive is apparently halted. In the meantime, however, the allies have been withstanding fierce counter-attacks delivered by the Germans. Early this morning the enemy struck fiercely just to the north of St. Julien along the ridge. Fighting continued there for hours with neither side able to gain a complete mastery. The rain abated somewhat during last night, and the artillery preparation for further advance opened.

LONDON, August 2.—Russia appeared to-day to have reformed some of her shattered armies in Galicia. In at least three places the Austro-German advance has seemingly been stopped abruptly. At other points the Russian armies actually assumed the offensive. From a disorganized mob torn with sedition and treason through the work of German spies, Premier Keremsky has apparently drawn out the loyal elements and imbued them with new determination. The German drive to-day apparently centred on the frontier River of Zborow over a front of nearly forty miles. The crossing of the waterway has been effected at half a dozen places.

Around Trembowla "partial offensive" by the Russians gained them ground.

LONDON, August 2.—The sinking of the American schooner John Hays Hammond by the gunfire of a German submarine, was announced by the Admiralty to-day. The crew was saved.

The John Hays Hammond was a schooner of 132 tons, registered at Gloucester, Mass.

AMSTERDAM, August 2.—Presumably because of the great allied drive in Flanders, Kaiser Wilhelm to-day summoned a special meeting of Germany's War Council in Brussels. In addition to the German Emperor, Field Marshal Hindenburg, Quartermaster-General Ludendorf, the Crown Prince, and numerous other military leaders, will attend.

KORNILOFF IS NEW RUSSIAN COMMANDER

PETROGRAD, August 2.—General Brussiloff to-day resigned as commander-in-chief of the Russian armies. General Korniloff, who directed the recent Russian offensive below Lemberg was named his successor.

General Teherfaisof, now commander of the Eighth Army, was named to succeed Korniloff in immediate command of the southeast front.

Heavy Rains Impede Operations

(By Lowell Mellett, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

LONDON, August 2.—Forty-eight continuous hours of rain had all but stopped the Franco-British offensive to-day. Movement of the masses of men or of heavy guns was impossible in muck and mud. In a few places where paved highways afforded footing or where ridges above the morass gave relief, the armies were fiercely struggling. Field Marshal Haig reported the recapture of positions near the Ypres-Roulers railway, where the enemy, with staggering sacrifice of men, had yesterday ejected the British. Further down on the British line Haig reported a successful German raid around Haig's court. The enemy secured a number of prisoners. Front despatches indicated that if the infantry was temporarily mired, there was no dimunition in artillery fire. The British guns are keeping up a vigorous shell offensive everywhere.

PETROGRAD, August 2.—General Korniloff inaugurated iron-handed discipline to-day in assuming his place as commander-in-chief of the Russian armies.

He issued formal orders prohibiting meetings of soldiers in the war zone, and warning that disobedience would mean instant execution.

AN ATLANTIC PORT, August 2.—With a tale of having been attacked by a German submarine when two days out from a French port a French passenger liner arrived here to-day with 109 passengers. An aeroplane convoy, the passengers said, attacked the submarine, and is believed to have sunk it with a bomb.

LONDON, August 2.—Looking from the broadest aspect at the events of the past fortnight in Russia, said Major-General F. B. Maurice, Chief Director of Military Operations, in his weekly interview to-day, said: "It will necessarily mean a prolongation of the war. We cannot longer count on any great material assistance from Russia. The battle in Flanders was an entire success. General Sir Douglas Haig fixed a definite line of objectives, and speaking generally, he attained it successfully."

ACKNOWLEDGES GIFT OF SMOKES

That the soldiers at the front appreciate the tobacco sent by the Overseas club is evidenced by the cards that are being received. Here is one received from a Peterborough boy in France:

"Thanks very much for the tobacco and cigarettes. Rather strange that I should get them from my old place, where I used to work some years ago---the Peterborough Lumber Co.---and I think the sender was the paymaster. There are no fewer than four from the Peterborough Lumber Company here with me, and we are very pleased to receive the smokes. I hope if ever I return I shall be able to get a start with the same Company.

Yours truly,
R. E. SANDY.

FORMER PETERBORO' MAN SENTENCED AT OWEN SOUND

William John Lasure Convicted of Four Charges of Forgery Will Also Have to Face Trial For Bigamy

HIS LONG RECORD

OWEN SOUND, Aug. 1.—Four years on each of four charges of forgery was the sentence given William John Lasure, alias John Dalton, alias John Langton, alias John Bailey, by Police Magistrate Creasor this morning, while he was also sent up for trial on the charge of bigamy. Lasure, who has a criminal record, was born near Peterborough, and as John Dalton served a sentence in Kingston Penitentiary. On his release he married at the rectory of the Church of the Sacred Heart at Peterborough, in May, 1914. In 1915 he and his wife came to Sullivan Township, and he was employed as farm help under the name of John Langton, and his wife as housekeeper for a farmer named Telford. The second day after his engagement he disappeared, taking with him one of his employers horses. He was traced, and on his arrest was being taken to Walkerton for trial when he crawled through the lavatory window and jumped while the train was going at a high speed. He was again apprehended, and on his arrest was sent to the Ontario Reformatory for a year. He escaped when he had served ten months, and was lost sight of until eight weeks ago, when he came to Owen Sound and secured employment in a local fatcory. He was around town for some few weeks, making himself quite popular. He finally eloped with a young woman belonging to a reputable family. They went through the form of marriage at Meaford, and had reached London on an attempt to go over the border into the United States. His arrest followed the receipt of a letter from the young woman to her relatives here. In the meantime it was found that he had passed cheques on four local firms on which he had forged signatures, and charges were laid in each case as well as for jumping his board bill. It was then that the police began looking up his career during a remand for sentence on the forgery charges, to which he pleaded guilty. The evidence, consisting of a copy of the original marriage register at Peterborough, was secured, and Lasure faces the other charges in a higher court. To-day's sentence runs concurrently.

GERMANS OFFICIALLY ADMIT DEFEAT IN GREAT BATTLE OF FLANDERS

Some surprising admissions in connection with the great Anglo-French offensive in Flanders are made in the German official report last night, the full text of which appears elsewhere.

"Bixschoote could not be held by the Germans," is one admission. Another concession is: "The enemy penetrated with tremendous pressure into our defensive zone." The report says: "The great battle of Flanders has commenced. . . . It is one of the most tremendous of the third year of the war. . . . With masses such as never have been used at any period of this war, not even in the East by General Brussiloff, the English, and, in their wake, the French, attacked yesterday on a 25-kilometre front. . . . Their aim was a lofty one. It was intended to deliver an annihilating blow to the 'U-boat pest.'"

PETERBORO'S QUOTA OF RETURNED SOLDIERS IS AGAIN INCREASED

Pte. Jas. Jordan, David Babbs and F. Gray Arrived Home Last Night---War Veterans Are Arranging Details of Excursion Next Week---To-day's General Military News

Four Peterborough soldiers reached home from overseas yesterday. In addition to Pte. Horace Blake of the Canadian Mounted Rifles whose arrival was noted last night there were Pte. Jas. Jordan, of the 80th Battalion, who got in yesterday morning and Pte. David Babbs, London street, a member of the 93rd Battalion and Pte. F. Gray, London street, formerly of the 59th Battalion, both of whom reached here last night.

All members of the Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans who have not received their three months' extra pay are again reminded that they are asked to call at Club Headquarters, in the Barrie Building as soon as possible and sign the papers in regard to this matter. Only members of the War Veterans' Association are entitled to the efforts of the Dominion Executive on their behalf in securing this long promised money.

Will all returned soldiers in Peterborough who intend to attend the excursion to Rice Lake on Friday, August 10th please leave their names at the Headquarters of the Great War Veterans, Barrie Building as soon as possible, together with information as to how many people they intend to bring with them on the excursion. The outing will be entirely free of charge and will be open to returned soldiers and their families and the widows and children of Peterborough soldiers who have died overseas. The steamer Stoney Lake and Geneva will carry the excursionists to Rice

All returned soldiers, officers and men in Peterborough are asked to parade in uniform at the Barrie Building on Sunday night at 7.30 o'clock for the purpose of parading to Victoria Park to attend the mass meeting commemorative of the third anniversary of the war.

Secretary T. R. Cooper, of the Great War Veterans who has been seriously ill was so far recovered today as to be able to be out. The G.W.V.A. Secretary wishes to thank the members of the Association and other friends for their kindness during his Lake.

KINGSTON, August 2.—The hot weather is having its effect on the soldiers at Barriefield Camp in that those men who have to drill on the hot parade grounds are being given every consideration. What work can be done under more comfortable conditions is being done, but all military training requires some outdoor work and under those circumstances both instructors and men feel the heat very greatly.

GEN. HEMMING COMMENDED

A cable has been received from London stating that Brig.-Gen. T. D. R. Hemming, O.C., Military District No. 3, has been brought to the notice of the Secretary of War for distinguished service. General Hemming, in his official capacity, has been a strong factor in the success of the recruiting and administration of the Military District, and this new honour comes as a well-merited one.

It has now become necessary to make some relaxation in the age limit for cadets for the Imperial Royal Flying Corps, consequently cases will occur when candidates of ages above twenty-five (25) are sent to the medical boards for examination. As all candidates for cadets are finally interviewed and approved at these headquarters, the matter of the age of candidates need not concern medical boards at all. Medical boards, will, therefore, examine candidates sent to them for the cadet medical examination, irrespective of age.—District Orders.

LIEUT.-COL BROWN HONOURED

KINGSTON, Aug. 2.—(Special.)—Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown, who is retiring as staff officer at Barriefield Camp, was the recipient of two fine gifts from camp friends, a gold-mounted cane and a silver server. Brigadier-General Maunsell to-day assumed his duties as staff officer at Barriefield Camp.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2. — Sir Edward Kemp's statement that officers and privates who are prisoners are now on the same footing with regard to receiving parcels from friends has been misinterpreted to mean that privates can be sent parcels. On the contrary neither they nor officers can now be supplied privately. They must all go through the Red Cross.

ROUMANIANS' BIG VICTORY

Twelve Mile Breach in German Lines Made and 40,000 Prisoners, 70 Cannon and 100 Machine Guns Taken

ENEMY IN DISORDER

WASHINGTON, August 2. — The Roumanian troops have made a twelve-mile breach along the thirty-mile German front in Roumania, according to cables received to-day at the Russian Embassy. The Roumanians captured seventy cannon, 100 machine guns, and 40,000 German prisoners, after three days' hard fighting. The Germans are in complete disorder and are flying in panic," the cables stated.

Allied Forces Push Ahead In Flanders

Progress Made in Zillebeke and Yser Canal Sectors—Hard Fighting Reported Around Village of St. Julien.

RAIN CAUSES DELAY

LONDON, August 1.—A torrential rain and the resultant turning of the battlefield—already hard of negotiation at many points—into a veritable quagmire retarded, but failed to halt, during Wednesday the great allied offensive against the Germans in Flanders.

The most part of the day was spent by the British and French troops in consolidating positions won in Tuesday's spectacular drive or in putting down strong German counter-attacks, made in endeavours to wrest from their antagonists their former positions. At two points near Ypres the Germans, using great masses of men, were successful in their counter-attacks against the British, compelling the evacuation of Haig's troops of the village of St. Julien, but this advantage was offset in the Zillebeke and Yser Canal sectors, where, respectively, the British and French troops advanced their lines.

Meanwhile the guns of the belligerents are continuing to roar all along the entire front in reciprocal bombardments preparatory to the recommencement of the infantry battle now that the clouds have lifted and the rainfall ceased.

The losses of the Teutons in the fighting thus far have been extremely heavy, the ground at various points being covered with their dead—some of the killed mere schoolboys and seemingly unfitted physically for the arduous trials the soldier in the present war must undergo. In addition the British alone have taken more than 5,000 prisoners.

Counter-Attacks Hurled Back.

The section of the defences on the Warneton-Gapaard Road, which was taken by the British in the first rush, was the scene of heavy fighting during the night, and the Germans succeeded in retaking it. The British, however, delivered a strong counter-attack and again drove the enemy out after sanguinary fighting.

Just to the north of the Ypres-Comines Canal, the Germans also launched a counter-attack, but were hurled back by the defending troops.

German prisoners continue to arrive in large numbers, and while it has not yet been possible for the military to make a count, it is known that they run well into the thousands.

The reconquered territory about the Ypres salient has yielded its details of the awful effect of the British artillery fire. The German bodies lay thick in many places and in instances too numerous to escape comment fully accoutred soldiers were found turned away from the direction of the British attack, indicating that they were retiring when struck down. Large numbers of the dead were mere youths, who looked as though they might recently have come from the school-room, for they were slight of build and physically unfitted to bear the strain of war.

Most expressive was the comment on the bombardment made by a German officer, who was found badly wounded in a shell hole, where he had crawled for refuge. Addressing a British officer in excellent English, and with a quiet smile, he said: "Good morning; you see you have played the devil with our defences. Your guns have been doing some good shooting."

Killed Their Own Men.

Many German infantrymen fell victims to their own artillery at the outbreak of the Entente attack, for the observers had lost their view of the targets and in a confused, frenzied attempt to stem the onslaught, the German gunners unwittingly dropped shells among their own men. Again stories are heard of German batteries being withdrawn without the knowledge of the infantry, leav-

Vehicle On Right Has Right Of Way

TWO POLITICAL MACHINES MUST BE ABANDONED

"Have Proved Their Utter Worthlessness in This Emergency" Says J. M. Godfrey, Chairman of the Win-the-War Convention

MUST GET TOGETHER

TORONTO, Aug. 2.—"Our first job is to scrap the two political machines, which have proved their utter worthlessness in this emergency," said Mr. J. M. Godfrey, K.C., the chairman, in his address at the opening of the win-the-war convention here, to-day.

All preparations were completed at noon for the convention, which was opened this afternoon at 3 o'clock. At 11 o'clock the resolutions committee convened, under the Chairmanship of Mr. Godfrey, K.C., and after short addresses by Mr. Godfrey, and Mr. Benjamin A. Gould, a number of routine matters were rapidly disposed of.

At about 10.45 a registration booth for delegates was opened in the rotunda of the King Edward Hotel for the purpose of dispensing information, enrolling of delegates, and the giving out of badges. It was estimated at noon that over 500 had been registered, and that the opening hour would see this number considerably augmented. On nearly every hand commendation is heard of the general idea which those in charge of the initial convention have in mind. But among the feminine organizations there is understood to be a little dissatisfaction that women were not given a fuller representation in the activities of the work. However considerable new ground will have been broken, and a strong movement for a more practical patriotism with a practical objective, will have been gotten definitely under way.

"We are gathered together to face as true Canadians a national crisis," said Mr. Godfrey. In the midst of this world-wide conflict the demand has been made by a considerable body of our fellow citizens that we go no further in the fight, and that the one effective weapon with which we can fight be not used. They have insisted on their constitutional right to try this issue in a general election.

The challenge has been accepted, and you are here to enroll yourselves in the grand army which in this country will carry on the battle for human liberties and a free democracy. We will fight the good fight until the victory is ours; until we have swept aside those who would deny Canada's right to maintain her place in the struggle to save a world.

We must not minimize our undertaking. Against us are arrayed strong and well-organized forces — secret powers whose influence will only be known when the ballot box is opened. You realize all that, and you have come here to answer the cry, "What must we do to be saved?"

What must we do to be saved? To save Canada from dishonour. To keep her on the battle line. The one essential is unity. We must get together in a well-organized and well-disciplined fighting force. That is why we have come here to-day. Not only to become united but to demonstrate that there is unity between the patriotic forces of our country. If we cannot forget our petty differences and get together we will fail — we will fail utterly.

SWELTERING AND SWIMMING.

With the temperature hovering between ninety and one hundred degrees, a dip in the cool running river is a luxurious relief. But it is wonderful that with a broad, deep, cool river flowing past our doors, there is no provision made for decently enjoying its refreshing current. As it is, hundreds seek its refreshment and, driven by the heat, submit to or overcome the difficulties of access. Girls and women are especially handicapped. The genus boy is not particular in demanding discreet and decent disrobing facilities, careless whether or not chance eyes see or do not see their unclothed cuticle. But women and girls, though devotees of the abbreviated shirt, are somewhat sticklers for privacy and concealment in dressing operations. In the absence of any semblance of dressing rooms, they have to take whatever cover chance offers—the blind side of a boat, or the shelter of a stump, or any other thing that affords a half-decent screen from observation. And these devices are considerably neutralised and to great annoyance, by the "peeping Toms," represented by the omnipresent small boy, and not unoften, the large boy.

It is a matter of regret that the authorities have not provided some, at least, even temporary and makeship provision for giving the public a decent means of preparing for the comfort and refreshing luxury of a deep river at this broiling season, not only as a comfort but as a health-promoting device. The cost would be inconsiderable and the benefit great.

Aldermen who neglect to provide bathing facilities should not themselves expect to "be in the swim" next January.

SUPPRESSION SUSPICIOUS.

Government by the present government has been very largely government by commission, a circumstance in itself largely a confession of incompetence. The government has not even confidence in its own commissions. Investigations to investigate investigators, have been almost as frequent as the investigations themselves.

Recent events have also shown that the government is afraid of the truth in reference to the results of its own administration, and that this distrust of itself, amounts to defying parliament, which makes governments, and keeps them made, and the people who make parliaments.

The matter in question recalls General Hughes, who, when he was doing something as Minister of Militia, appointed one of the most eminent surgeons in Canada to investigate and report upon the Canadian medical service in England, evidently in not a very satisfactory condition. Dr. Bruce made his report, and recommended numerous reforms in connection with the care of wounded Canadians in England. By some "backstairs influence," Dr. Bruce's report was subjected to the criticism of Dr. Baptie, as head of a commission appointed by Sir George Perley in England to investigate Dr. Bruce's investigation—a man who, it has since come out, was the head of the medical service that so disastrously broke down in Mesopotamia. Dr. Bruce's reply to the Baptie criticism of his report was more than three months ago sent to the Dominion government, and in spite of frequent asking and urging, that report has not been presented to Parliament.

Dr. Bruce's original report was a strong indictment of the Canadian medical service in England, and it created great uneasiness in Canada amongst people who had relatives in service. Yet Sir George Perley acting for the Canadian government, appointed a discredited medical administrator to overhaul Dr. Bruce's report, even preventing Dr. Bruce from being present at the sittings. There is something sinister in the circumstances, and there is something sinister in the government refusing to lay before Parliament a report of Dr. Bruce in reply to the report of the discredited Dr. Baptie. Meanwhile, to "save somebody's face," the report of Dr. Bruce affecting the well-being of wounded Canadian soldiers is suppressed and the people kept in the dark. The conclusion is forced that the report is suppressed because it is an unanswerable condemnation of the administration of the government in the matter of the medical care of wounded Canadian soldiers.

Win-the-war conventions are of little value unless they lead up to a win-the-war government.

A SWEEPING CHANGE NEEDED.

The despatches tell us that Senator Sir James Lougheed demands immediate enforcement of conscription. His demand is consistent and logical. If the passing of a measure of compulsory service was necessary on the grounds of furnishing immediate reinforcements to the Canadians in France; if conscription was justified at all, its immediate application becomes a national duty. If it is not to be enforced now, when shall it, or how will it, become operative? Will it be made a party plaything in a general election, under the management of the present incapable government. If we are to place the successful prosecution of our part in the war above every consideration, we must not have the destructive influences and effect of a general election to intervene and obstruct, to divide, to demoralise national unity.

It is pleaded that the present parliament is constitutionally dead, that it has outlived its constitutional span of life by nearly a year. A similar condition exists in respect of the British parliament; yet there is no thought there of a general election.

In Great Britain, the problem was solved by doing what should be done here—selecting a win-the-war leader, and forming a win-the-war government that commands the confidence of parliament and the nation.

The most hide-bound partisan, if he has any regard for the interests of this country and its cause, and the allied cause in this war, will not for a moment contend, or even think, that the present Canadian government as led, or unled, or misled, and as constituted, for one moment deserves the confidence of the country. Sir Robert Borden, amiable and harmless as an individual, is as a leader weak and unstable as water, controlled by the sinister elements of his cabinet, and so much under their influence, that he even prostitutes the judicial machinery of the country to rehabilitate a colleague, with a malodorous record that, as in the case of Lady Macbeth, "all the perfumes of Araby," will not sweeten.

The present government, with a leader whose impossibility has been demonstrated, has little, but brittle timeber in it. The only two members of standard Cabinet capacity, are Sir Thomas White and Sir George Foster—the only two members of the Cabinet above the level of measurable mediocrity as either administrators or patriots. The former, however, is the bond slave of the "big interests," whose turn is served at the expense of the country with infinite oppression of, and injury to the interests, of the people; and Sir George Foster is a sympathetic second.

We are at the most acute political crisis of our history, not excepting even immediately antecedent Confederation days. The time is come when patriotism must replace partisanship. The patriotic public men of Canada, backed by an awakened people, must demand a change if we are to escape unimaginable evils more far-reaching and menacing than the failure of Canada to do her part in winning the war. Parliament should assert itself, and demand an extension of the life of parliament to synchronise with new leadership and the formation of a win-the-war government similar to that they have in Britain. We don't want a general election with its intense bitterness and its demoralising influences, but what seems to be the obviously wise demand is a new government with no politics but Canada, and no policy but helping Canada to do her part in winning the war. There is no room for a coalition government; that would mean the retention of the present leadership and the retention of the strongest elements of the present government, some of them the most evil elements. We want to make a new beginning with a strongly-led, strongly-constituted government, which will tend to repair the wounds of the deplorable misgovernment that has muddled the administrative interests of the country from the beginning of the war, leaving a wake of waste, of scandals, of wreckage, of inefficiency, and bringing a crisis, which involves menace to the highest interests of the country, if not menace to the very integrity of our present form of political existence.

Isn't it awful to think that one crowned megalomaniac could bring on a war in which ten million men have been killed and wounded, and countless millions of money wasted, and incalculable suffering inflicted?

SIX COMPANIES SHARING IN NEW TAX SYSTEM RELIEF

OTTAWA, July 31.—Here is a table showing the capital, profits, and taxes in three more companies from the list supplied Parliament by W. S. Middlebro, the capital, profit, and new income tax being deducted from his figures for the old and present taxation. All the taxes are reckoned on the one year's profits, which is 1916 in the case of the first two and the year ending July 31st, 1916, in the case of the third:

Company	Capital.	Profits.	P.C.	Old Tax	Present Tax.	New Tax.
Nova Scotia Steel and Coal	$7,687,387	$1,487,125	19.34	$237,252	$320,754	$50,385
Canada Foundries and Forgings	1,455,525	991,3 59	68.11	222,388	560,689	39,534
Toronto Chemical Co.	262,056	536,7 22	214.12	130,520	378,325	21,468

Readers will notice that the present tax on the Steel and Coal Co. is smaller than that on the Canada Foundries, while the new tax is larger. That is because the new tax takes no account of huge profits, but treats all earnings alike, while the old tax was on a graded scale, which increased with the precentage earned.

In the following cases, the profit was between 15 and 20 per cent. All three taxes are based on the profits on which taxes were collected in 1916, and the old tax given is that actually collected in that year. The capital is given in round figures, hence the profits and new tax are not accurate to the dollar, but are near enough for all practical purposes.

Company	Capital.	Profits.	P.C.	Old Tax	Present Tax.	New Tax.
Steel Co., Canada	$13,963,000	$2,210,3 43	15.83	$308,940	$337,055	$88,298
Imperial Oil	27,161,000	4,837,3 74	17.81	734,046	934,849	193,374
Fairbanks Morse	3,686,500	609,1 00	16.15	102,748	131,767	26,640

Thus from the three companies, the new income tax would collect only $308,307, instead of $1,303,671 under the present excess profits tax, or $1,145,-034 under the tax actually collected in 1916. In the Middlebro list is one company which would be taxed the same under the old and present excess profits tax, namely the Dominion Steel Corporation, which paid $103,721 in 1916. That means its profits were under 15 per cent., and were $414,884 in excess of 7 per cent.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—My husband, James Willshaw, who is in the trenches doing his bit, is in the midst of the greatest battle of the war now going on in France. As a soldier's wife, I have a grievance for which I want a remedy and would like to know to whom I shall apply for protection. I have two small children of tender years, the elder, a boy who is highly thought of by the neighbours and playmates with the exception of only one, and that is Mrs. Fralick of 176 Edinburgh street, while my residence is 686 Union street. Our rear premises nearly abut each other. While my boy was playing with other children in a lane between us, Mrs. Fralick made straight for him and punished him severely, without any cause, and then threw him over the fence in the presence of the other children without touching any of the others. I would not mind it so much if this was the only time, but it has been going on for a long time, and the neighbours who know the facts say it should be stopped.

I am kept in constant fear while the child is out of my sight. Surely the military authorities here must have some means of protecting soldiers' wives and their little children while they are fighting the country's battles.

If you will kindly give this publicity I know some means will be found for my protection.

Yours truly,
ROSE WILLSHAW.

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Why so much bluster and delay? The people are the only ones who have the right to say what shall be done with the people and the property of this country. These little committees and bodies that meet and say what the people ought to do are not very wise or they would know better. Let us have an election and adopt the policy of one leader or the other and not keep on concocting in the name of the people a lot of bluff. Much valuable time has been lost and if we do not hurry up the country will be lost and that part of the people who do not want anything done will have their own way through our own foolishness.

YOURS TO SAVE THE COUNTRY.

To the Editor of the Examiner,

Dear Sir,—I see the Review has a list of names of win-the-war delegates attending the convention in Toronto to-day.

Now, Sir, does Mr. A. H. Stratton, Mr. Aylmer, Mr. Wearing, Mr. Kerr, et al, think for one minute that the general public, or those who really have the winning of the war at heart will place confidence in them? I, Sir, have attended many patriotic and other meetings in connection with war work, and it certainly has pained me to listen to some remarks made by these self-styled win-the-war delegates. Politics was bulging out of every, or nearly every statement. Take, Sir, the statement of Mr. Wearing recently, in the Review when he laments he cannot follow his leader, and in a shining manner says he might have to support Borden.

Now, Sir, Borden, or no Borden, we must have men who are big enough to cast such whims to the winds and come out four square and support the party that are standing with the boys. What kind of a makeshift bunch are we going to have if we do not get behind the men whom we know are solid and have been tried out; men who by their very actions, command the support of the people, and who have the winning of this terrible struggle uppermost in their minds.

It is true mistakes have been made but why, because one political party wrecks itself because of disloyalty, why, I say, are we to sit idle and see the very men who have been trailing with the same party and are not big enough to pull themselves asunder, fly to Toronto as win-the-war delegates and still afraid to come out and state where they are at. Is it simply to wreck the other party and leave the boys in the trenches to work out their own salvation?

Editor Examiner:

Sir,—Kindly give me space in your valuable paper to ask the following questions, because I think it is in the interests of the public at large to know: Why have we to pay 40 and 50 cents a pound in Peterborough for blue-stone when the same can be bought for 25 cents a pound in Warsaw and in the Douro general stores? Why did the price of cheese drop 1c. a pound in July when the government has set the price for the season at 22c. and a fraction?

By printing this in your daily you will greatly oblige.

Yours truly,
A FARMER.

ing the latter to face attacks without the protection of their artillery.

At 5 o'clock this afternoon Reuter's correspondent telegraphed:—

"A period of quiet has succeeded yesterday's Anglo-French advance against long-prepared enemy positions. Even our tremendous bombardment still left in many places formidable obstacles. We retired a few men from some extreme points, thereby creating a wide No Man's Land. Meanwhile the consolidation of captured positions is proceeding despite the handicap of heavy rain. Prisoners agree that our prolonged bombardment inflicted tremendous casualties, also that our battery work was wonderfully effective, knocking out many guns, which is probably the reason for the alleged inadequate artillery support. The activity of our artillery has not relaxed despite the bad visibility.

"The latest news from the battlefield is: 'Situation unchanged.'"

Last evening there was an outburst of intense shelling from a portion of the line further north. In the growing dusk the enemy was seen massing for an attack. Our batteries opened up on them and the field of grey melted away. The wind and heavy atmosphere being suitable, we loosed large instalments of gas near Flourmain with good results

HOLDS BELGIAN CHILDREN.

Germany Forbids Those More Than 12 Years Old to Go to Holland.

the Hetvolk, the Belgian committee the Hetvolk ,the Belgian committee at The Hague, which provides a short holiday in Holland for poor children of Belgium, has been informed by the German authorities that children more than 12 years old will not be permitted to leave Belgium.

The Telegraaf says batches of German children are arriving in Holland almost daily. Two hundred arrived Saturday, and 800 are expected shortly.

In our darker moments the world seems a narrow place in which to avoid an enemy, but wide and vast when one is looking for a friend.

MAY SHOW PEOPLE REAL WARFARE.

An interesting suggestion is made that exhibitions of food prepared so as to meet the demands of war economy shall be given a prominent place at the various fall fairs held throughout the country this year. In this way, it is held, thousands of Canadian women might receive suggestions as to the best way to do effective war service in their particular sphere.

The farmer's wife seldom gets the credit due her for her war service, yet in official circles where estimates are made from time to time as to the reserve strength of the country, great confidence is placed on her efforts. The women of the rural districts are none the less helpful because they do their part without ostentation, far removed from the spotlight of the press.

A demonstration of how food containing satisfying and strengthening substances can be prepared tastefully and cheaply would fill a great need of the times, and it is felt that many thousands of the people could be reached and influenced at the fall fairs where the crowds are usually in a receptive mood. One woman's club is seriously considering the establishment of a lunchroom at the local fair in order to offer regular meals of "war food." To many in Canada no doubt, it would be a novel experience to eat what is the regular fare in more than one European country. B-28.

e Of Sea Fight Told By The Wireless Record

m Boats," by Alfred Noyes, the uished poet who lectured in o recently, is a terrible indict- by way of facts of the cruelty commanders of the German in putting seamen and pas- into "open boats" and leav- em to their fate.

quivering little book of only ages is sufficient justification most terrible punishment of guilty of these deeds and evidence for the historian of uture to pass terrible judgment the German nation which has guilty of them.

tales are nauseating in their ed cruelty. Men and women been left in open boats long from land in all sorts of er. Many have died. All suffered great hardships. U- have even taken sailors on and then submerged, leaving en to struggle in the sea. They even taken boats in tow, only bmerge without warning to in the open boats. All Mr. facts are verified by official nents and are related without attempt to arouse hatred. But acts are sufficient.

Surpassing Sea Romances.

s second incident concerned Anglo-Californian, and of this ent Mr. Noyes uses those proud amply justified by the facts he ly by exploring incidental mat- hat are not included in the pub- d reports does one begin to real- hat there are sea romances in world around us surpassing any- that Hakluyt or Richard Eden knew. The tale of the unarmed o-Californian, for instance, was inated for me by the exploration record of her wireless messages. se in themselves tell a tale n in the days before the war we d have dismissed as beyond the st dreams of melodrama."

Noyes then gives the amazing ersation carried on between the ess operator of the British ship r fire from the German U-boat the operator on an invisible man- r coming to her rescue. Says Noyes:

shall not attempt to paint that ure —the smoke, the confusion, changes of command, the con- ions, the neighings of the horses, pounding of the engines. But, all that as a background, and single statement that the wire- operator was in an exposed tion just abaft the bridge, and re- hed at his post throughout, let reader study for himself the ing melodrama of this wireless versation between the Anglo- fornian and the invisible man-of- rushing up beyond the skyline.

The Invisible Man of War.

S.O.S., S.O.S., being chased by sub- ine, S.O.S. Position latitude so so N., longitude so and so W., ering so and so."

Are you the Cryptic? He is rapid- overtaking us."

Yes, steer so and so, and keep me rmed."

That is impossible. We are being d on."

Endeavour to carry out instruc- s. Important."

"Can't. He is now on top of us, and I can hear his shot hitting us,"

"On your port?"

"Submarine on top of us and hit- ting us. Captain says steering so and so. If he alters course will en- danger ship."

"Can see your smoke. Hold on. Funnel red and blue bands with yel- low star. We are making your smoke."

"According to your position I am nine miles off you."

"We are the Anglo-Californian."

"Have you many passengers?"

"No. But we have 150 men on board. Crew."

"Let me have your position fre- quently."

"Now firing our rockets. Sub- marine signals, "Abandon vessel as soon as possible."

Suggests Ramming U-Boat.

"As a last resource, can you ram? She will then give in. Can you see my smoke N.E. of you?"

"No. No. She is too close. We are stopped and blowing off."

It was the encouragement of the wireless rather than a faint wisp of smoke on the skyline that persuaded the captain to continue the struggle.

"Can see you distinctly," called the Cryptic. "Am about S.W. from you. Hold on."

"Yes, yes. He is running away."

"In what direction?"

"He is on the port side, we are be- tween you and him. Hurry, hurry, hurry, he is getting abeam to tor- pedo us."

"We are keeping him astern now."

"O.K. Endeavour to keep his atten- tion. You will be quitesafe when ——"

"Your signals are weak."

"How are you steering?"

"I can't find out how we are steer- ing. It is zigzag."

"Tell captain to steer straight." (The zigzag course was wrong, as the submarine was astern.) "How many masts have you?"

"For God's sake hurry up. Firing like blazes."

And again another ship anxiously repeats the question — "Cryptic wants to know if you can see his smoke?"

"Yes, yes, a long way off. Can see your smoke outside.

"Stick It, Old Man!"

"What bearing? What has happen- ed to you?"

"They can't tell what bearing. Now sinking."

"Are you torpedoed?"

"Not yet, but shots in plenty hit- ting. Broken glass all round me."

"Stick it, old man."

"Yes, you bet. Say, the place stinks of gun powder. Am lying on the floor."

"Nothing better, old man. Keep your pecker up, old man."

"Sure thing. Is there anything else coming to us, please?"

"Yes, I am Cryptic. Coming full speed, 33 knots."

"We are coming. We are coming. Have you launched all boats?"

"Yes. Two ships coming, one abeam and one on port quarter. Don't worry. He has gone. Destroyers now alongside."

Those are only a few snatches of this wonderful conversation by wire- less. Mr. Noyes is right when he says that "few of us at home realise the intensity of this ocean drama in which our merchant seamen night and day are risking their lives to keep our sea-roads open."

ETAIN TAKES TO GARDENING

hes Vegetables at the Headquar- ters of French General Staff.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—The Commander Chief of the French Army is be- nning the first gardener of France. is raising, under his own super- ion, enough vegetabes to supply e entire General Staff.

When General Petain arrived at e simple villa now serving as gen- al headquarters, he found spacious wns and flower gardens. He obtain- permission from the proprietor to them up. Roses and other climb- g plants have been replaced by ans, peas, cabbage, tomatoes, and otatoes.

The General is out at daylight ev- y morning inspecting his crops, nd directing the work of soldiers, ho occupy their leisure off-duty eeding and cultivating the garden. These men were all picked for their egetable gardening experience, but General Petain is often able to ive them good hints as to how to row vegetables.

SHOT BY THEIR COMRADES

Russian Naval "Battalion of Death" Shamed Soldiers.

PETROGRAD, July 31. — Premier and Minister of War Kerensky has re- turned from the front.

A "battalion of death," consisting of 800 Reval sailors, forced four lines of enemy trenches on the western front instead of two, as had been ordered. They then asked for reinforcements in order to consolidate the captured positions. Instead of reinforcing them, however, the soldiers fired on the sailors, who, between two fires, began to retire. Only fifteen of the men escaped unwounded. The com- mander of the force died as the result of thirteen wounds, and a sub-lieuten- ant and two midshipmen shot them- selves rather than retreat.

The Maximalist leaders at Helsing- fors, Finland, have been arrested. Their official newspaper has been confiscated.

Trouble and gray mules should al- ways be approached from the front.

BELGIANS IN CITY CALLED TO COLOURS

All Belgians now in Canada who were born between June 30, 1873 and January 1, 1898, have been called upon to register for military service before August 15. All born between June 30, 1898, and Jan 1, 1899 are called to serve. The only exemption is for those who have enlisted or who enlist before August 15 in the C.E.F.

An order to this effect was received yesterday by the acting Belgian Consul in Toronto, Charles Rochereau de la Sabliere, from A. Goor, the Belgian Consul-General at Ottawa. Mr. Goor's instructions as received from his Government follows:

"To the Belgians: It is hereby re- called that all Belgians born between the 30th of June, 1876, and the 1st of January, 1898, must register for mili- tary service, by virtue of proclama- tion of the 1st of May, 1917. Moreover all Belgians born between the 30th of June, 1898, and the 1st of January, 1899, are called upon to serve. Such Belgians must register before the 15th of August, 1917, with the nearby Belgian consul who will furnish them with the proper registration form on application. Those who enlist in the Canadian Expeditionary Force before the 15th of August, 1917, are exempt from registration."

LOSSES FROM SUBMARINES AGAIN SHOW FALLING OFF

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Some falling off in the loss of British merchant- men by submarines is noted in the official summary issued last even- ing. Eighteen British vessels of more than 1,600 tons were sunk by subma- rines or mines last week. Three ves- sels under 1,600 tons were sunk, while no fishing vessels were lost.

Hon. Dr. Beland Sent To German Capital

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Hon. Dr. Be- land, former Postmaster-General of Canada, has lately been removed to Berlin. His health is good. Hopes are expressed he may return under the new repatriation scheme.

British Drive The Enemy From East Africa Positions

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The War Office reports: "East Africa.—After sharp fighting the enemy has been driven with loss from his positions on the Lugungu River and at Ntuliras. In the Kilwa area a heavy rainfall checked our advance for ome days after the successful action at Naron- gombe, but our forward movements have now been resumed."

Standard Wage Knotty Problem In Australia

SYDNEY, N.S.W.—The problem of the basic wage, of interest to all the civilized world, is vastly important to Australia and New Zealand, be- cause of the extent to which those do- minions have adopted the system of fixing wages arbitrarily.

Every intelligent critic who has come to the Antipodes to study our industrial conditions lays his finger at once on the weak spot; that while the wages of all trades and many professions are regulated by law, there is absolutely no standard fixed, beyond the ever-fluctuating "living wage" of which every arbitration court and wages board seems to take a different view. The trouble is ag- gravated in Australia by the number of wage-fixing institutions, every variation in opinion as to what is the basic wage tends to make the "vic- ious circle more pronounced.

INTERSTATE BOARD.

The Association Chambers of Man- ufacturers of Australia has been in conference in Sydney and has given this matter much attention, and it finally recommended "that an ex- pert interstate board by appointed to investigate and fix each year the basic wage, leaving the constituted authorities in each state to add to the value for skill or special condi- tions in the several classes of each occupation."

The principal supporter of the mo- tion pointed out that no fundamen- tal standard of living has so far been laid down and accepted by the com- munity as the basis upon which wage computations should be as- sessed. The consequence is that we experience the opinions of judges courts and boards expressed in awards of basic wages varying 2? per cent and more for work in every respect similar as to skill, exertion continuity, surroundings and condi- tions, operating at the same time in the same district and upon the same coat for commodities. In these cir- cumstances, it is not surprising that continual industrial unrest exists.

It is suggested that the expert board should deal with these three main factors: 1. The standard of living to be provided and the num- ber to be provided for. 2. The cost of providing same. 3. The occupa- tions to be selected as determining the lowest paid vocations.

All to five pounds prepared rhu- barb three pounds of raspberries; add six pounds of sugar. Cook in a hot oven until thick and rich, put in glass jars under brandy paper, cool and paste paper over the tops. This makes a delicious preserve.

$3,000 DAMAGES TO R. R. HALL COVERING INJURY FROM AUTO

Judgment of Mr. Justice Kelly In- cluded Costs—Mr. Hall Brought Action on Ground of Careless Driving

INJURED IN TORONTO

The Hon. Mr. Justice Kelly yester- day, at Osgoode Hall, handed down judgment in the action brought by Mr. R. R. Hall against Mr. D. A. Mc- Donald, wherein Mr. Hall claimed $3,000 damages for injuries suffered by him by reason of Mr. McDonald's car running him down on Wellington street east, Toronto, on the 5th of August, 1915.

Judgment was given in Mr. Hall's favour for the full amount of his claim together with full costs of the action.

This action is not only of a great deal of local interest to motorists and to pedestrians, but will also be of great interest to motorists throughout the Province of Ontario and particularly to those motorists who frequently for- get that pedestrians have some rights on the street.

On the 5th of August, 1915, about nine o'clock in the evening, Mr. Hall was crossing from the north side of Wellington street east with the inten- tion of entering the Ontario Club. While he was crossing the street he observed a motor car just crossing Yonge street about 110 yards away. He naturally assumed that he had ample time to cross the street. The motor- ist, however, increased his speed to a high rate and struck Mr. Hall just before he reached the sidewalk, and at the same time Mr. McDonald's car collided with a stationey motor car on the north side of the curb.

Mr. Hall complained that the de- fendant was negligently and carelessly operating and driving his motor car at an excessive and unlawful rate of speed and that he failed to sound his motor horn in time to give the plain- tiff warning of his approaching car. The defendant had two other passen- gers with him in the front seat and no passengers in the rear seat of the car and the plaintiff claimed that this circumstance interfered with the de- fendant's operation and control of his dangerous and swift running machine, and that he was unable to stop his car or exercise any reasonable con- trol over it.

Mr. H. H. Dewart, K.C., and Mr. R. T. Harding appeared for the plain- tiff and Mr. M. K. Cowan, K.C., and Mr. J. Callahan appeared for the de- fendant.

FIFTEEN WOUNDS MADE BY STILETTO

TORONTO, Aug. 2.—The testimony given at the inquest with regard to the death of Tony Leapello, which was resumed last night in Orange Hall, Mimico, failed to give any clue as to the slayer or the manner of the man's death, further than was shown by Dr. Forbes Godfrey, who performed the autopsy. Dr. Godfrey found fifteen stab wounds in the body, all of them pointing down- ward, as if delivered with an over- hand thrust, and all from behind. The doctor gave the opinion that the weapon used was a stilletto, as some of the wounds were not direct, show- ing that the blade must have been pliable. He further remarked that the person who inflicted the wounds must have known how to use his weapon to advantage.

Mrs. Margaret Leapello was ques- tioned concerning her marriage and subsequent divorce from her deceas- ed husband. Dr. Mulveney, the fath- er of Mrs. Leapello, testified to the general kindly disposition of his son-in-law, and said that he was sat- isfied to have him remain in that relationship, even though Leapello sometimes showed evidence of an uncontrollable temper.

George Brush, a market gardener of Humber Bay; Wm. Elford, Lewis Turner, James Dadson and Constable Wilkins were the others who were examined by Coroner Rickett and County Crown Attorney Greer. They testified regarding the finding of the body. The inquest was again ad- journed until Wednesday next.

MORE PAY FOR OFFICERS

They Are Hard Hit by the Increased Cost of Living.

LONDON, August 1.—It is under- stood there is some likelihood of an increase in pay for Canadian officers overseas. Many officers are com- plaining that the rise in prices is working a hardship, but state that privates, who are free of many ex- penses incumbent on officers, are not affected to anything like the same degree.

PAPER SHOES FOR GERMANS.

Professor Advises Going Barefoot to Promote "Health and Beauty."

THE HAGUE, Aug. 1.—Judging from frequent reports in the German press, it would appear that Germany is having the greatest difficulty in shoeing her people, owing to a lack of leather.

Factories for paper shoes have lately been started in order to put cheap shoes on the market. The Tag- liche Rundschau says that although these shoes are worthless for hard usage they are good enough for ev- eryday wear and tear. Students at many universities and schools con- tinue to set an example of economy in this respect by going barefoot. A professor, writing in the Vossische Zeitung, advocates this custom as healthgiving, saying that it is the best means of hardening and taking care of the feet. He concludes: "So economy is rewarded by health and beauty."

C. N. R. IS TO BE NATIONALIZED $7,500,000 LOAN TO G. T. P.

Sir Thomas White Submits Railway Aid Proposals to Parliament—Nationalization Is Impossible For Both

OTTAWA, Aug. 1.—Sir Thomas White, on the motion to go into supply in the House to-day, presented his statement of certain financial arrangements which the Government proposes to make with regard to the C.N.R. and G.T.P.

He said the financial position of these companies was such as to imperatively demand further assistance from the Government if these systems were to continue to serve the people as solvent going concerns.

The Minister briefly reviewed the findings of the Acworth-Drayton-Smithers commission, declaring that the majority and minority reports absolutely sustained the position taken by the Government in aiding the railways and preventing receiverships, with the inevitable liquidation that would ensue. Both reports agreed that the C.P.R. should not be interfered with. They agreed as to the serious financial situation of the C.N.R. and G.T.R. and proposed various remedies.

DESIRE TO SERVE PUBLIC.

Now as to the Government position, the great desire was service to the public. If the railway companies were plunged into liquidation, the public would suffer as well as the companies, and this at a time when efficient railway service was needed as never before.

The Government had given the matter its most earnest consideration, taking into account the financial and other conditions of the time. A continuance from year to year of large finanial assistance to the railways was against public policy, while the ownership of the system remained in private hands.

PUBLIC SHOULD REAP REWARD

If the public did the financing the public should reap the ultimate reward. At the same time, it was essential that the public credit be considered The taking over of all the railways was out of the question from a financial point of view. Notwithstanding this, the Government believed the time was opportune for making a courageous step forward on the path of public ownership.

The revenues of the C. N. R. were such that after paying fixed charges it had a surplus. It required aid because it needed to make expenditures continually on capital and purchase of rolling stock.

The result was the company was short of cash for the payment of underlying interest charges. It was not possible for the company in war time to float securities for betterments and rolling stock. In addition, the company had had to do a great deal of short term financing, and it was impossible to issue long term securities to find this liability.

POSITION ON G. T. P.

The position of the G. T. P. was that if they were to continue as a solvent concern they must have a sufficient advance to meet deficits on operating account and underlying interest charges. This was about $7,500,000 for the coming year.

The Government did not think it should grant further aid to the C. N. R. while it was privately owned and controlled.

The Government had already forty million dollars of C.N.R. stock. The other sixty millions would be acquired for the people of Canada. Thus the people would be the absolute owners of the road. This would include all subsidiary companies

As for the Grand Trunk Pacific, it was not possible to adopt the same policy, as negotiations were necessary first with the Grand Trunk before that corporation was relieved of any of its liabilities under its contract with the Government. The plan was to make to the G.T.P. a demand loan of $7,500,000, repayable at six per cent, and secured by mortgage.

The mortgage could cover all the undertakings of the G.T.P. including the stock of the branch lines. It would be the same kind of mortgage as was taken last year in connection with the G.T.P. The mortgage would rank next to all existing securities.

Canada's Modest Bites Become Just Nibbles At War Profits

In One Case Company Gets $990,000 Excess Profits—Govt. Takes $40,000—214 Per Cent. For Chemical Concern

OTTAWA, Aug. 1.—According to calculation from the Middlebro schedule of company taxes, the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Co., made nearly a million and a half profits in 1915. The present excess profits tax would take between one-quarter and one-fifth of these profits for win-the-war purposes. The new income tax would take just under one-twenty-fifth.

Put in another way, the new income tax would take from this million and a half profits less than $60,000. The excess profits tax which the Government is abandoning would take over $320,000. Put the exact figures side by side and look at them this way.

Taxes being abandoned—$320,754.
Taxes being imposed—$59,365.
Lost for war purposes—$261,389.

COMPANY WOULDN'T SUFFER

Remember that this company made 19.34 per cent., and would still have much over a million dollars of profits left after paying the large tax. It wouldn't suffer, would it? But the Government will impose that tax for the last time on this year's profits. Next year's will pay only four per cent. Let the profiteers go to it. The Government, like Barkiss, is "Wilin."

A NIBBLE AT HUGE PROFITS

As war profits go, however, the Nova Scotia company's performance was not remarkable. There are far more startling examples. Consider for instance Canada Foundries and Forgings, which apparently made over 68 per cent. profit in 1915. Now, the beauty of the present tax is this, that the huger the percentage of profit made, the bigger is the bite which the Government takes out. Thus, while the C. F. and F. Co., made slightly under a million dollars, the Government would take under the existing excess profits tax nearly six hundred thousand. That amount may seem large, but it must be remembered that the company would be left with more than four hundred thousand dollars profits, or over 27 per cent. on its capital. That would appear reasonable enough.

The ordinary citizen who manages to accumulate a few dollars after paying the present prices of provisions would take as fit if he earned 27 per cent. He would almost feel himself able to afford potatoes. So the Government could not be considered harsh with a company if it left it 27 per cent. profits. Also the $690,000 taken in taxes would surely come in handy to help pay Canada's war expenses.

27 PER CENT. NOT ENOUGH

Such would be the Government's procedure under the present law, but that law is being dropped. It "discourages capital," forsooth, by leaving a company only 27 per cent. of a profit. So Sir Thomas White abandons it and announces a company income tax. And how much do you suppose this new income tax would leave the company in question? Remember that the present tax would leave it with about $400,000 of its $990,000 profits, or 27 per cent., instead of 68 per cent. on capital employed.

TAKE $40,000, LEAVE $990,000.

Now guess. You never would not in a dog's age, so here are the facts: The new tax would take less than $40,000 from this company, would leave it with over $950,000 of its $990,000 profits, and would decrease its profits only to sixty-four and a fraction per cent. The Government talks about economy for the masses and leaves a company with all but four per cent. of its 68 per cent. earnings, and that is the way Canada wins the war.

214 PER CENT. IN CHEMICALS

But hush; there is money in drugs. Everybody knows about the great advances caused by the shutting off of the German supply and by the demands of the war, if the Middlebro tax is accurate, the Toronto Chemical Company made over 214 per cent. on its capital during the year ending July 31 1916. The aggregate profits just under $540,000, are not large as compared with those of some bigger concerns, but they represent a huge percentage on the $250.000 capital employed and so the Government under the present excess profits tax would take a big slice nearly $380,000.

ONLY $21,000 OUT OF $540,000

That looks like good business. The State gets over two-thirds of this concern's earnings, yet the company is left with 64 per cent. profit on the capital it employs. Reasonable enough, don't you think? You do, but the Government does not agree with you. Instead of taking $380.000 from such a concern by an excess profits tax, the Government will now take only $21,468. The amount is so small that it would be a shame to express it in round figures.

By this time the reader is probably asking how the two taxes work in order to create such an unbelievable discrepancy. Their operation is very simple. The excess profit tax does not touch the first 7 per cent. profit. it takes a quarter of the profit from 7 to 15 per cent., a half from 15 to 20 and three-quarters of all profit over 20 per cent. That is the tax the Government is abandoning. The new one takes only four per cent. of all profits except $3,000 that is one-twentieth of all but $3.000 under 7 per cent., one twenty-fifth from 7 to 15 per cent. one twenty-fifth from 15 to 20 per cent., and one twenty-fifth over 20 per cent., always one-twenty-fifth.

Here is the way the two taxes work out in the case of the Toronto Chemical Co.:

Profits	Present tax	Income tax
7 per cent	Nothing	$ 586
7 to 15 per cent	$ 5,401	806
15 to 20 per cent.	6,301	504
Over 20 per cent	366,983	19,572
Nil	378,325	21,468

LESS YOU MAKE, MORE TAX YOU PAY.

So there you are. You will observe that there is one class of profits the new tax does hit harder than the present one. Why, of course, the reasonable profits, namely those under 7 per cent. But when a concern makes over twenty per cent. shall Canada continue to step in and take 75 per cent. of the excess or $366,983? Ah, nay, Canada will take just the same share as she does from a concern making only 3 per cent. to wit, one-twenty-fifth of the excess, which amounts in the above case to $19,572. What a nice obliging country Canada is to the big fellow.

SITUATION IN TURKEY IS SERIOUS

Prompt Action is Necessary if the Remnant of the Armenian People Is Not To Perish

Below is the latest word regarding the situation in Turkey. It comes in a letter to the Chairman of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief. The writer is speaking of only one relatively small section of the field of need. His suggested $150,000 must be multiplied many times to enable the Committee to reach all parts. The demand is indescribably great.

"We cannot impress upon you too strongly the need of prompt action if the remnant of the Armenian people is not to perish. It seems a horrible thing to sustain them thus far and then let them die through neglect. It is possible that your committee thinks there are not means of distributing relief since the Ambassador came away, but I want to assure you that it is not so. There are members of the American Embassy force still in Constantinople, and are working with and through the Swedish Legation, which now has charge of American interests in Turkey. They may be relied on to see to the wise and careful distribution of all funds. The banks here have correspondents in Constantinople so that funds sent here can be transferred by wire and become immediately available.

We do not think our missionaries remaining will suffer bodily harm, but living conditions are growing steadily worse and they must have large increase in funds to make up for the high prices of food. They can all do relief work if they have the money and we can get money to them but not unless your committee responds to urgent appeals of our Committee. In each station which our people have left they have arranged with responsible people to look after relief, so that funds will not be mis-applied, and there are yet thousands of Armenans who have no place to look for help, but to the American Missionaries or their representatives. If they are sustained they will form the nucleus for a strong and helpful element in the country when the time of reconstruction arrives, as their recuperative powers have proved wonderful after every previous massacre.

We want to make it as clear as words can do it that at least $150,000 per month is still needed for relief work; that the Constantinople Committee will be able to forward it to the field, and will see that none of it is mis-applied; that the customary distributing centres in the interior are, with unimportant exceptions, still supplied with a sufficient force for making the distribution as usual".

ANOTHER BIG FIRE AT PONTYPOOL

Coulter House and Garage Destroyed—Loss Will Be Heavy

MILLBROOK,—Aug. 2.—On Tuesday evening word came to Millbrook Fire Company, asking assistance, as a great fire had started, which, if not checked, would destroy the business section of Pontypool. The Coulter House and garage were ablaze at 9:30 p.m., with small chance of saving either of them.

The loss will reach many thousands of dollars' worth, and the inconvenience that this thriving little town will be put to without a hostelry will be greatly felt.

A number of Millbrook citizens went over to Pontypool by automobiles to assist in checking the fire.

Oil Shells New Weapon Of The British Infantry

LONDON, Aug. 2.—"The oil shells referred to by correspondents at the front are the latest new weapon," says an ordnance man in the Evening Standard. "They are the necessary reprisal forced by the diabolical inventions of the German oil drums or canisters. They are constructed in the form of shells, the casings of which are so thin that they burst easily after explosion, the small charges within scattering the flaming contents. They are fired from trench mortars. They are an effective reply to the flamenwerfer of the Germans, which are merely tanks carried on soldiers' backs and worked by a hand pump with fire nozzle attachment."

The newest tanks have heavier guns, says the Standard, and the recoil often tosses the huge machines literally about. The crews are now trained to avoid tank sickness, and it is necessary to get "tank legs."

Mr. Bently was in the car at the time, and he shut the power off, and thus prevented what might other wise have proved a serious accident. As it was the fence only required slight repairs.

Government Will Control Two Railways

Entire Canadian Northern System to Be Taken Over—Financial Situation Is Bad

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—The Government announced in the Commons that it will take over the entire Canadian Northern Railway System, by buying sixty millions of stock and will take full control of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and loan it seven and one half millions.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2. — Sir Thomas White in the Commons yesterday afternoon announced the Government's proposal to acquire the whole $60,000,000 of stock of the Canadian Northern Railway, now in the hands of private owners and pledges.

The Government already has the $40,000 taken over in connection with the bond issue of 1914 The Government. Sir Thomas explained, would thus become the absolute owners of the C. N. R., and money expended would inure to the benefit of the people of Canada. The system would be carried on as a corporation entity, and control of all subsidiaries would be in the hands of the Government.

Financial Situation Bad.

Sir Thomas White, in rising to make his announcement concerning the railway situation, promised to employ all possible brevity on account of what he called "prevailing atmospheric conditions" but which is Parliamentary language for a beastly hot afternoon. He found it necessary, however, to review the whole Smith-Drayton-Ackworth report, which embodies the conclusions of the commissions which he promised to appoint when the loan of fifteen and eight million dollars, respectively, was made to the C. N. R. and G.T.P. last year.

City's Financial Progress Shown In Bank Clearings

Same week last year—$590,828.
Same week 2 years ago—$459,924.

The clearings for the month of July are nearly doubled from the same month two years ago:

Clearings for the month of July, 1917—$2,913,964.
Last year—$2,277,538.
2 years ago—$1,674,968.

Mr. La Follette Is Silenced For Day By The Government

PITTSBURG, Aug. 1.—A mass meeting of socialists was to have been held at the Lyceum Theatre Sunday afternoon to protest against the draft at which Senator Lafollette was billed to speak. However, the Department of Justice at Washington sent word to Mr. Dillon, representing the department here, that the meeting must not be allowed and Mr. Dillon immediately notified the local police authorities, who had granted the permit to hold the meeting, and also notified the proprietors of the Lyceum Theatre.

The permit was revoked and the contract with the theatre also was cancelled. The socialists evidently got word to Senator Lafollette in time, for he did not appear here, although the meeting was held at Summerhill Grove, outside of the city limits.

The Rev. W. A. Fraser, pastor of the United People's Church who was to have presided at the La Follette meeting, said the Department of Justice gave no reason for preventing the meeting. At his church service on Sunday night he brought up the same resolutions that were to have been passed at the afternoon meeting and they were approved by the congregation. The main feature of the resolutions called for the repeal of the selective draft.

URGES LIFE TERM FOR FLAG DESECRATION

Justice Cropsey Upholds Thirty Day Sentence with Regret that It was Not Longer.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Justice Jas. C. Cropsey, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, advocated life imprisonment for those who desecrate the flag.

Samuel Schneid, who a week ago cursed the National Guard and consign the flag and country to a place hotter than New York at two o'clock yesterday afternoon, was sent to the Workhouse for thirty days by Magistrate Dodd, in the Fifth Avenue Police Court He sought his liberty on a writ of habeas corpus and his attorney told Justice Cropsey the utterances did not constitute disorderly conduct.

In dismissing the writ Justice Cropsey remarked:

"My one regret is that the punishment imposed in this case was not more severe. To my mind a thirty-day sentence in a case like this is not enough by many, many years. Such men as these should be imprisoned for the rest of their lives."

"DOPE" TO ESCAPE DRAFT.

U.S. Eligibles Said to be Assisted by Pro-German Doctors.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.— A Chicago special to the Times says: A plot of widespread dimensions whereby pro-German physicians for a consideration are willing to "dope" young men drafted when they appear for medical examination in such a manner as to cause their rejection is said to be in existence. Agents of the Department of Justice are now working on the case. The movement had its origin in Chicago, with branches in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and other large cities. A Chicago physician is said to be under surveillance, and arrests are probable in the course of a few days.

The results of the Middle School examination for entrance into the Normal schools are given below. The certificates of the successful candidates and the statements of marks of those who failed will be mailed to the principals or inspectors in the course of a few days.

The appeal examiners have already re-read the papers of each candidate whose marks would appear to justify an appeal. Where such a candidate has still failed the statement of marks will be stamped as re-read and no further ppeal will be allowed. In all other cases of failure appeals will not be refused if made before September 1st, and accompanied by the fee of $2. If made after Steptember 1st the fee is $5. No appeal received after September 10 will be entertained.

Successful candidates who desire to attend the coming session of the Normal Schools are notified that their application for admission must be made to the Deputy Minister of Education not later than Monday, August 20. They are advised to make early application. If applicants will state clearly in their applications when and where they passed the Normal entrance examinations they need not delay such applications on account of not having received their certificates.

The Normal School will open Tuesday, September 18, at 9 a.m., at which time all candidates must present themselves. Applicants are required to be eighteen years of age before October 1. Further information regarding the conditions of admission may be obtained from the syllabus and the application forms, copies of which may be obtained on application to the Deputy Minister of Education. No candidate will be admitted who does not comply fully with the conditions prescribed therein.

NORTH MONAGHAN BOY RECEIVES HIS WATCH

A large gathering assembled last night at May's school house for the presentation of the Burnham watch to Robert Allen winner for North Monaghan in this year's Entrance exams.

Reeve Rye in Chair.

Reeve Rye, who was in the chair, made some appreciative remarks of the Allan family who, he said, were always ready to sacrifice themselves for the good of others and had several heroic acts in rescuing from drownings to their credit.

Mr. Burnham, M.P., then presented the watch with a few appropriate remarks.

Judge Huycke.

Judge Huycke, who accompanied Mr. Burnham for the presentation, spoke at length upon the duty of parents to educate their children and to the little children on the necessity to study whilst they have the opportunity.

Musical Programme.

A pleasing musical programme was given in conclusion, which included several selections on the gramaphone, violin selections by Schwartz, and recitations by several of the children.

Mr. J. J. Johns brought down the house by several splendid recitations for which he is justly famous.

Mr. Webber.

Mr. Webber, chairman of the school board, then acknowledged the kind words spoken of the school, and also referred appreciatively of the work of Miss Fair, the teacher whose pupil had won the watch. The meeting then closed with the National Anthem.

Welcome Drop In Temperature

82 Degrees the Highest Mark To-day

Ten degrees drop in temperature frequently means the difference between discomfort and comfort. After broiling for some days in temperatures of over 90 degrees, a welcome change has occurred. Highest temperature to-day was 82, early this forenoon. A further drop of 4 or 5 degrees has since taken place. Lowest point last night 69 degrees. Several persons have drawn attention to the fact that higher figures than given in these weather notes have been recorded on instruments in the business section. For instance, the official figures for Monday were 95 degrees. Many thermometers on George, Charlotte and other downtown streets, went up to 100 and over. The large one in front of Trebilcock Bros' bookstore was over 100 on Monday afternoon. But it must be remembered that it stands where the sun beats on it all forenoon, and the heat from the block pavement is reflected on to it. It does not receive the full benefit of any breeze that may be blowing, either, and therefore does not stand in a place to give a fair test. And, besides, it reads several degrees too high. Notwithstanding this, it is a reliable instrument, and is more accurate than the vast majority that their owners swear by—or at. In many of the larger cities in the United States the Weather Bureau is stationed on the roof; the tallest skyscraper, and the readings are usually from 8 to 10 degrees lower than on the street surface below. There is also a difference in temperature in different sections, even within the city limits. The south part of the city is almost invariably several degrees colder, on a zero day in winter, than the northern end, and in the fall the early frosts nip gardens in the south, when those at the north are untouched. In hot weather the rule is reversed, and the south-ender perspires in a temperature several degrees higher than the northener does.—W.P.

Sub. Station Was Damaged

Yesterday's storm did very little damage about the town outside of striking the sub-station on Simcoe street, and damaging the switchboard, burning out some of the electrical apparatus. Two trees were destroyed in the storm, one in Central Park and one at St. Peter's Cathedral. Other trees in other parts of the city were damaged.

Three hundred years ago, any man absent from church on a Sunday was fined a shilling. What a war revenue that would produce now!

Misery loves company, and she usually has plenty of it.

Too much of the noise in this world tries to pass itself off as music.

It's better to be wrong at the right time than right at the wrong time.

Lightning Struck Peterboro' Club

Broke a Window and Put a Light Out of Commission

During the storm which swept over the city yesterday afternoon, lightning struck a window on the east side of the Peterborough Club building at the corner of Water and Simcoe streets. One window was broken and an electric light put out of commission. An automobile belonging to Dr. McCullough, which was standing nearby, was struck but no damage done.

Broken Pole.

A section of a telephone pole, including the cross arm, was carried to the ground on the north side of Sherbrooke street, near the boundary road. A couple of trees on the property of Mr. B. Morrow met a similar fate. One tree formed an arch over the road. It was removed early this morning.

Broken limbs interfered with the electric service of the Utilities Commission on King street, near Aylmer street.

Lieutenant Geale Gets Promotion

Mr. Norman Geale, the first Peterborough boy to join the aviation corps, mentioned in a recent letter to Mr. E. A. Peck that he had been promoted from flight sub-lieutenant to flight lieutenant with the Royal Naval Air Service. He has just completed two years in service, during part of which time he was compelled to relinquish his place in the service owing to a temporary disability. Lieutenant Geale was one of the first six Canadian young men who were graduated from the Long Branch aviation school. Most of his companions of those days have been either killed or wounded. He himself has headquarters at Eastbourne.

YOUNG SCOUT KILLED BY FALLING TREE

It Was Struck By Lightning—Three Others Injured at Same Time.

KITCHENER, Aug. 1.—Alfred Mercer, Signalling Instructor of the Kitchener Boy Scouts, was instantly killed this afternoon in a tent at the Boy Scout camp at Kolb's Flats, on the Grand River, during a terrific storm. Lightning struck a tree near the tent, which fell over the tent, crushing out the life of the young fourteen-year-old Scout. Scoutmaster R. Appleby had his right leg broken above the knee, and F. C. Anderson, manager of the local Bank of Montreal, and his son were injured about the head and body. About a dozen Scouts were in an adjoining tent, which escaped the falling tree. Telephone connection with the city was difficult to get for a time owing to the electrical storm, but as soon as the news reached Kitchener a large number of automobiles went to the scene and brought the campers to their homes. Young Mercer was the son of Pte. Mercer, who is in France with a North Waterloo unit. He is also survived by his mother and sister.

Presentation To Mrs. Jas. Frowde

Mr. and Mrs. Frowde Left This Morning For Sidney, Nova Scotia, Where They Will Make Their Future Home

This morning, Mr. and Mrs. James Frowde, 409 Walton street, left on the C.P.R. train for Sidney, Nova Scotia, where they intend making their future home with their son. Mr. and Mrs. Frowde have resided in Peterborough for upwards of forty years, and during that time have won for themselves a host of friends who will regret their departure. Both were active members of the old Charlotte Street Methodist Church, (now Trinity Church). A number of the ladies connected with the two departments of the Church met last evening at the home of Mrs. Frowde, and presented her with the following address together with a beautiful, gold-mounted umbrella and thermos bottle.

The Presentation.

The address was read by Mrs. Morley W. Lyle, President of the Ladies' Aid Society, and Mrs. M. B. Lyle, Treasurer of the Society, made the presentation. The address reads as follows:

Dear Mrs. Frowde,—It is with sincere regret that your friends in the Trinity Church Missionary Society and Ladies' Aid learn of your departure from Peterborough.

For many years you have graced the meetings of both societies with your presence, and you have always proved to be a helpful and sympathetic member, ready with sound, wholesome advice, and also ready when practical assistance was necessary. You had a place, you had talents, and you used those talents and made good.

When your voice was lifted in prayer God's choicest benediction fell upon the hearers.

Quiet, dignified, motherly, Mrs. Frowde will be missed, and that she may not forget the Womens Missionary Society and Ladies' Aid, we ask her to accept this umbrella and thermos bottle.

When the salt breezes of the old Atlantic fan your brow on a summer evening we hope fond memory will carry to you cheerful recollections of the less pretentious, but always beautiful river, Otonabee, in Peterborough—

"Of all the beautiful pictures
That hang on memory's wall"
Is one of dear old Peterborough,
"That seemeth best of all."

And may your prayer and ours be: "May the Lord watch between thee and me while we are absent one from the other."

(Signed) Mrs. Morley W. Lyle,
President Ladies' Aid Society,
Trinity Methodist Church.
Mrs. A. F. Bookhout,
President Auxiliary of Women's Missionary Society, Trinity Methodist Church.

GETS BOOZE CIRCULAR.

Temperance Man Received Communication From Montreal Firm.

"If you are in a position to hand out a few price lists we have something to say to you." This is a significant postscript to a circular letter received by a citizen from a Montreal company of liquor importers and distributors. There is a tinge of irony about this communication in the fact that the recipient is an active temperance worker. The letter included a price list of whiskies but in form of solicitation for prospective new business the local citizen questions the use of the mails for this purpose. It is his opinion that if this practice is permitted by law, the law is at variance with the wishes of temperance advocates and should be amended.

40,000 GREEKS ARE STARVED TO DEATH

BULGARIANS TRY TO EXTERMINATE THEM IN E. MACEDONIA.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Forty thousand Greeks have been starved to death in Eastern Macedonia since the Bulgarian occupation began, according to authentic reports received by the Greek Government, says a Havas despatch from Athens under Tuesday's date.

"The Bulgarians," adds the correspondent, "have carried on a systematic persecution of the Greek element in the population looking to its extermination. They have inflicted all sorts of privations upon the Greeks, burdening them with military work and deporting them to Bulgarian localities.

9,813 NATIVES OF U. S. ENLISTED IN CANADA

Ottawa, Aug. 2.—In all 9,813 men, who gave the United States as the country of their birth, were enlisted in Canada since the beginning of the war. The number is given in a return presented in the House of Commons to-day in response to a motion by Hermenegilde Boulay of Rimouski. The return also showed that 152,001 natives of the British Isles had been enlisted in Canada.

"It's confidence that does it."

Honour For Son Of A Former Peterboro' Man

Rev. A. J. H. Strike of Granby, Quebec, a former principal of the East City School, has received official word of the honours conferred upon his son, W. Ross Strike, who has been in France for over sixteen months, and has been mentioned for honours in six different engagements. A newspaper clipping referring to the incident in question, contains the following:

"His hosts of relatives and acquaintances will be glad to hear that W. Ross Strike, who has distinguished himself on six different occasions, and in connection with the very hardest battles fought during the past sixteen months. His diploma and medal are on the way home. The ribbons he wears on his uniform, of course. Lance-Corporal Strike is a "son of the Methodist Parsonage' and has celebrated two birthdays on the firing line. He has studied law with Mr. J. Hilliard, K.C., M.P.P., for two years. When Ross enlisted he was President of the Epworth League at Morrisburg. He was an excellent student and a very fine, clean, manly sport. He has made friends everywhere he has lived, and they know he can be relied upon to 'quit himself like a man" at all times. Mrs. Anna Elford of Bowmanville is Ross' grandmother. His younger brother Glenn is in training at Petawawa with the heavy battery. Rev. and Mrs. A. J. H. Strike deserve great credit for giving their two sons for the service of their King and Country. Following is a copy of the official copy sent to Rev. Strike:

Lance-Corporal Strike, William Ross, is awarded the Medaille Militaire (France) — "For conspicuous bravery and conscientious performance of duty in the presence of danger, notably at the Ypres Salient, June 2nd.—June 6th, 1916, at the Somme, September 13th.—October 6th 1916, and at Vimy Ridge (Bois de Bonval) April 10th,—16th, 1917." MAKING BUTTER IN THE FARM DAIRY

Training and Experience are Needed, Also Good Equipment.

It is a great pity, but the fact remains that "dairy" butter has come to be known to very many consumers as inferior butter. Nearly every person who prides himself on his butter taste is willing to acknowledge that diary butter can be, and often is, better than any other kind, "but," he will say, "what's the use of getting five or six good pounds of butter at from 5 to 6 cents a pound less than the price for the creamery product, when the sixth or seventh pound has to be thrown out because it is useless as food.

"Dairy butter; as defined by The Dairy Industry Act, 1914, is butter made from the milk of less than 50 cows," says J. A. Ruddick, Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner, in his introduction to Bulletin No. 53, "Buttermaking on the Farm" by Geo. H. Barr," and he adds "The total quantity of 'dairy' butter manufactured in Canada is estimated to be greater in quantity and value than the product of the creameries."

Since not more than 50 cows' milk can be made up into butter to be sold as "dairy" butter, it follows, as a rule, that dairy butter is that which is made at the farm from the milk of the farm herd, and such butter should, with reasonable care and skill in making, be of the best possible quality."

There is a certain attraction in the home-made food preparations of most kinds that induces the consumer to pay a premium for them, but unfortunately this has ceased almost entirely to apply to butter. An outstanding reason for this state of affairs is the labour supply trouble and the fact that to save labour on the farm, any means rather than home butter making, has been adopted for disposing of the farm milk, with the result that the art of butter making has been lost by the farm housewife. Want of proper equipment for home butter making is another reason for want of success.

Much of the dairy butter that finds its way to market during the Summer months, is there by reason of an accident, i.e., the souring of cream or milk, intended for the city trade which has been returned to the farmer in such a state that the making of good butter from it is impossible, with the average home equipment, even if with any. This returned whole milk or cream must either be made up into butter, or fed to stock, and the latter practice would be too extravagant in view of the possibility of obtaining even a low butter price for the article produced by churning.

Her success in production of dairy butter it is necessary that this business be made the chief end of the person engaged in it, and feeding of the herd, equipment of the home dairy and training of the buttermaker must all be attended to with this end in view.

Without going into detail it may be pointed out, first, that absolute cleanliness in all operations, from milking to the shipment of the butter, is essential to success in buttermaking, and it is here that the "diary" maker has a chance to compete successfully with the creamery man, because in the case of the former every operation comes under his or her eye, while the latter has to depend on the many patrons of his factory for a good article of cream with which to make his butter.

The creamery butter-maker succeeds in producing a good article in spite of the difficulties he encounters in obtaining a satisfactory supply of raw material, by reason of his exact knowledge of his business. The equipment of his factory is a help, but this is largely in the line of handing large quantities of material, and similar equipment on a small scale might be installed by the dairy butter-maker. To be on an equal footing with the creamery man, however, the home dairy man must acquire an equal knowledge of the buttermaking process, and must work with the one end in view of turning out a perfect finished product.

Dairy butter of good quality, if produced without fail week after week, and sold to discerning customers, will bring bigger prices to the producer than any creamrey butter, and with the saving of skim milk and buttermilk that is possible with butter-making on the farm this home practice should be most attractive to farmers situated beyond close touch with a creamery.

City Hall Closed This Afternoon

The Thursday half holiday has extended to the City Hall with the result that the various offices were closed to-day at noon. Mr. William Henry, assessor, was the only man on the job. When asked why he did not join the holiday crowd, Mr. Henry replied that he was "too busy." This is the busiest season of the year for the assessor's office and a half holiday is something that must of necessity be reserved for the winter months so far as Assessor Henry and his staff are concerned.

Open windows don't make half as many colds as closed ones do.

Why is it a man can't walk slow enough for a street car to catch him or fast enough to catch a street car?

Silos In Smith Fell Before Force Of Severe Storm

Located at the bottom of a huge natural bowl, Peterborough escaped the full force of the severe wind storm that swept overhead yesterday afternoon, leaping from lip to lip of the valley of the Otonabee with only a swirl stirring in the city beneath its course. And the path of the storm was altogether north of the city, which was barely in its southern fringe. Three silos were blown down in Smith township, the casualty list including Sidney Blewett, Fred Scott and Chas. E. Moore. One of them at least was rooted from its foundation and thrown across the driveway to the barn, while the other two were at least partially wrecked. An Emily farmer reported that the iron reinforcing in a pig pen he had built was practically torn from the cement bed and the upper section separated from the foundation.

In some sections of Smith, especially those nearer town, the crops were not seriously affected, but more northerly the damage may be considerable. In those places the grain was blown flat and may be harvested with difficulty. In some places the rain made a massed attack, which it sustained or an hour or more. On the other hand, Otonabee escaped, and the farmers continued their harvesting without interruption. There was a slight shower a mile south of Peterborough, but that was the extreme margin of the storm's path.

North and south of the city and even in Peterborough itself many trees were blown down. Warden Brown, who was at Bobcaygeon on county business yesterday stated that the storm was one of the worst he had ever experienced.

Doctor Haiselden Refuses To Operate

Declaring that death would be a blessing, Dr. H. J. Haiselden, of the German-American Hospital, Chicago, has again refused to perform an operation that would save the life of a malformed infant. More than a year ago he aroused worldwide discussion by allowing Baby Hollinger to die under similar circumstances.

The new baby is the daughter of William and Eva Meter. They took it to Dr. Haiselden and said they would abide by his verdict.

He found that its upper skull cap was missing, and that a diminutive brain was covered only by a thin membrane. The tiny head was attached direct to the shoulders without any sign of a neck. Both ears were misshapen and the eyes bulged from their sockets. The feet were deformed, the legs bowed, the arms were without muscles or tendons, and were incapable of functioning.

Dr. Haiselden attributed the infant's condition directly to "marking." Six months before the child was born a man plunged from the Edison Building in Chicago to his death on the sidewalk directly in front of Mrs. Meter. His skull was crushed.

"The baby could be saved," said the doctor, "by cutting a patch of skin from the back and grafting it over the exposed brain. But I will not do this. No surgeon is justified in prolonging an absolutely worthless life. If I saved this infant I should preserve it to a life of wretchedness. It would be a burden to itself and to others. Perhaps it would become a menace to society. Death will be a blessing to it. Nature will rectify its own mistake. I will feed it as long as life survives, but I will not operate."

The Baby Bollinger case was reported in November, 1915. The child was taken to Dr. Haiselden four days after its birth. The mother gave the doctor permission to do as he wished. He found the infant defective mentally and physically, and said it would be better dead. The mother agreed with him and no operation was performed. The child lived several days.

In the meantime the whole country took up the case. There were many prominent men and women both for and against the doctor's theory. After the child's death many persons and societies took up the matter, and the coroner made it a cause for inquest. But no action ever was taken against Dr. Haiseldon, who at the time announced.

"I am answerable to my own conscience. I am doing what the little boy's parents have given me the option of doing. I'm allowing nature to take her course. We are feeding him some. There is no brain development to register suffering, and soon nature will make blank her mistake. Many say arbitrarily that life is life and should be preserved no matter at what cost, but I can't see the argument. Should I allow the child to live, I would consider myself guilty against the race. As it is, I consider it a favour to the race."

He said the same thing was being frequently but quietly done in the profession. Later a jury of leading physicians and surgeons who investigated the case returned the verdict:

"Morally and ethically, a surgeon is fully within his rights in refusing to perform an operation which his conscience will not sanction."

TWO POLITICAL MACHINES

NOT MERE DEMONSTRATION.

This is not a mere demonstration of general patriotism. This is a political fight with all which that involves. At the outset we must understand the issue. Let me say to you that it is not conscription alone—the issue is vastly bigger than that. In a few days the military service bill will be the law of the land. From now on it will be only a side issue—an important part of the whole question; going to its very root yet not the main issue itself.

The issue in this election is clear: Shall the government of Canada be a war government or an anti-war government?

We must not be self-delusionists. We must look at facts squarely in the face. The naked truth is the only thing with which we must concern ourselves, and as I see it, and as you must see it, the issue in this election is: Are we for the war, or shall we forget the war? Shall we win the war or quit the war? Shall Canada go on to a glorious victory or get out dishonoured? The time has come when all who are for the war have to get on one side and all who are against the war have to get on the other side. The politician who attempts to wander in No Man's Land must be ruthlessly destroyed.

We must get together on our side of the line in the true comradeship of soldiers fighting for a great cause. To succeed there must be that spirit of unity from the commander-in-chief to the humblest private whose only influence will be expressed in the marking of a ballot.

It is obvious that our first duty is to forget the artificial and petty differences of partisan politics which in the past have kept us apart. Until we know one another better, until we have learned to trust each other we must be tender of each other's prejudices, but I have faith that in the increasing growth of the patriotic impulse which is in all of you, with continuous co-operation, suspicion will appear.

MUST BE STRAPPED.

Our first job is to scalp the two political machines which have proved their utter worthlessness in this emergency. The past three years have been a great testing time. The man or the machine that has proved its inefficiency has been cold-bloodedly cast aside. This is the time of political, social and material revolution. There has been less of it in Canada than in any other belligerent country. But Canada cannot, must not escape; it would demonstrate that we had no national life. That we are dead to those influences which to-day pervade the whole world—the dead does not change, only the living. But Canada is not dead. Our national life beats with a strong pulse. We can do things in this country and we will do them. So change we must have. In Britain the old political factions have disappeared in face of the common peril. In all the other allied countries changes of government have been frequent. In all the dominions excepting Canada only the most divergent elements have joined together to maintain war governments. The Romanoffs have been dethroned. Constantine is somewhere in Switzerland. Amid all these revolutions must the only sacred things which the hand of change cannot touch be the Tory and Grit machines? Will the world sink into utter chaos if these dear old organizations are smashed; we have to take the chance, for go they must.

But while the old machines must disappear, it is necessary to create a new one—strong, vigorous and well-organised—with which to fight the evils of reaction. A new machine with a higher notive than power and patronage or the gratification of personal vanity. The new machines must throb with the impulse of national patriotism.

And this new mechine must be the effective fighting force to win the battle which will keep Canada on the firing line.

G.N.W. LINEMEN ARE IN IT.

Will Make Same Demands to Company as Telegraphers Are Doing.

TORONTO, Aug. 1.—Further developments in the demands of the G.N.W. telegraphers for a better wage and time schedule have taken place when at a meeting held in the Prince George Hotel the G.N.W. linemen decided to go in with the telegraphers in their demands, asking practically a 20 per cent. increase, with the same hour arrangements. Fifteen linemen were present, representing the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

West of Port Arthur the linemen are in the Order of Railway Telegraphers, and east of Port Arthur are under the Commercial Telegraphers Union. They will immediately appoint their own representative for the Board of Conciliation, and on Sunday another meeting will be called to look into further details.

Westerners Are Curious as to Terms of C.N.R. Acquisition.

WINNIPEG, August 2.—The published terms look much to the west as if the financial connections of the C.N.R. have put one over on the Government. Certainly, if the stock is to be paid for with Government money, on the basis that every dollar it is supposed to represent was actually expended in the construction of the lines, it will never be endorsed by the west.

Especially does the west and the grain growers want to know what disposition is made of the vast land holdings of the C.N.R.

Ten Thousand Men Needed To Harvest The Crop In Ontario

Largest Crop on Record May Go to Waste if Help is Not Given—Food Controller Urges Employers to Release Men For Work on Farms.

TORONTO, Aug. 2.—"Ten thousand men are needed to harvest the crop in Ontario," was the statement made by Hon. Finlay Macdiarmid to the employers of labour, who had been called together from all parts of the Province and addressed by Hon. W. J. Hanna, the Dominion Food Controller, at the Board of Trade this afternoon. "The harvest of Ontario must be got off without going to waste and that means that it must be got off in time," declared Mr. Hanna in the course of an address in which he urged the employers to release their men for farm labour.

The meeting was called by the Organization of Resources Committee of the Province, and represented every class of labour. Even police chiefs were in ted, and Staff-Inspector Archibald was on hand to represent the Toronto force.

LARGEST CROP YET.

"It would appear that one of the biggest harvests that this Province has ever seen is now on the ground" said Mr. Hanna. "This crop will either be harvested in order or go to waste in part, according as the action is taken or help given. The question of harvesting came up in the spring, and the Resources Committee gave the farmers the assurance that this would go taken care of. But many of the men who, in April, promised to go on the farm, backed down in July, when the time came for them to fulfill their promises.

"More than 100,000 men from the Province of Ontario are at the front, and the proposition is a serious one. It would be a crime if the crop were permitted to go to waste as it is absolutely necessary, if our present situation at the front is to be maintained.

"Many of the employers of labour have recognised that they can spare some of their men. The Ford Motor Company agreed to close down for eight weeks if they, in any way, could help us out. (Applause.) But they claimed, and we agreed with them that persons engaged in similar work should do likewise, and that the Government should prohibit the importation of automobiles while the Ford people are closed down. I took the matter up with the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Customs, and they said they were willing to meet any proposition of that kind, if it assisted in lifting the harvest."

MAKE UP DIFFERENCE.

Mr. Hanna pointed out that the question of wages presented a serious problem. Whether the manufacturers should help make up some of the difference in wages might be left to a committee to be appointed by the employers. He maintained that every small town had men serving behind counters in the stores who would be better employed on the farms.

"The boys from our High schools have done splendid work," he declared. Mr. Hanna intimated that the Department of Education might see its way clear to allow the boys to stay on the farms three weeks longer, as the season was three weeks late. He suggested that the Ontario Government might see its way clear to pay the return fare of the men to the farms instead of paying the one way as heretofore.

GOVERNMENT TO PAY FARES

Hon. Finlay Macdiarmid said the transportation companies had agreed to give a half fare rate to those working on the farms, and in view of this fact the Government was willing to pay transportation both ways.

The meeting was then thrown open for general discussion. Mr. Hodson, of the Hamilton steel works, said that about 85 per cent. of the common labour was foreign and the farmers objected to the foreigners coming into their houses. He suggested that the Government should assist in the erection of special buildings on the farms to house the foreigners.

COMPEL MEN TO GO ON FARMS.

"It is all very well to talk about manufacturers releasing men, but not more than 10 per cent. of our men are English speaking," declared E. G. Henderson, of Windsor. He was in favour of a law being passed making it compulsory for men to serve on the farms.

G. C. Martin, president of Hamilton, objected strenuously to the idea of compulsion. He thought the men could be gotton voluntarily.

AID AGRICULTURE IN STRICKEN LANDS

Fund Started in Canada to Help Devastated Regions.

OTTAWA, July 30.—A national appeal is being made for the co-operation of Canadian organizations in the effort to raise funds for restoring agriculture in the devastated regions of France, Belgium, Serbia, Russia and Roumania.

At the head of the newly-formed Canadian organization are the Duke of Devonshire honorary patron; Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier vice-presidents, and the Lieutenant-Governor of each province as patron of provincial committees.

Provincial committees will seek the co-operation of farmers' institutes, women's institutes, clubs, grain-growers, and similar bodies to disseminate information and receive contributions. The primary appeal to Canadian farmers will be made on two separate occasions.

On the anniversary of the battle of the Marne, Sept. 6th to 10th, the organized cheese factories will be asked to donate one day's milk. Contributions from other farmers will be invited in November, December or January.

The local committees will arange to receive contributions of grain, live stock or farm produce, to be sold for the purposes of the fund.

WHY RHODES LIKED M'COY

In an article about the most wonderful man he ever met, John Hays Hammond tells in the July Aerican Magazine about Cecil Rhodes. He says:

"One basic reason for the success of Mr. Rhodes was his practice of drawing into his service from all corners of the earth the ablest men in each particular industry. Sometimes he would reach out to Germany, sometimes to South America, often to the United States. No salary was too big if he could get the man he wanted.

"He was always keenly anxious to find out from men who had done extraordinary things just how they managed to do them. I recall that 'Kid McCoy,' the pugilist, then in his prime, was giving an exhibition of boxing and Rhodes expressed the most ardent desire to meet him.

"I want to find out from this fellow how he has learned to clik every other man in the world,' Rhodes exclaimed to me."

Crop Prospects More Favourable

Crop Situation is Reflected in the Grain Markets—The Cattle Market

Manitoba cash wheat in store at Fort William is 2c. higher than Wednesday. Manitoba oats are lower. Trading in options is practically stagnant, pending expected action. At present millers and grain producers are in a quandry. Crop prospects are working more favourable than ever as result of beneficient and timely rains. The demand, however, for immediate delivery is urgent and offerings are small. September wheat at Chicago jumped to $2.31 immediately before the close as against $2.18 Wednesday's close.

MAKING RELINERS

Old Tires Are Good Material to Use For This Purpose

Reliners, with which to support portions of automobile or other tires worn considerably, may be readily made out of old tire casings. The tool necessary for the trimming of the casing into a reliner, with a feather-edge all around, as shown in the sketch, may be made from a table knife. Nick the surface of the knife blade with a cold chisel on a diagonal as at AB. Grind the edge along this line smooth, after breaking the blade by striking it a sharp blow as the point end of the blade is held fast in a vise or clamp. The jaws of the vise or clamp should be even with the line AB. Now grind a V-shaped nick into the back edge of the blade as shown at C. Grind the edge BD as sharp as possible and smooth off the other adjoining edges.

The material for the reliners is obtained as follows: Cut out the better portions of an old casing, in such a way that the cut edges would be in direct line with the spoke nearest them, if the tire were on a wheel. Then cut off the tire beads by which it was held in the rim. Rip off the more badly worn outer layers from the casing.

Lay the section of the casing flat on a bench, the inner side down. With a pencil, or a piece of crayon, mark off the "steps" in the several layers of the casing by the cutting of which the feather-edge is to be produced, gradually thinning out. Insert the point B of the knife into the top layer and trim along the chalk line, cutting the smallest of the oblongs shown. Repeat this process, tearing away the outer portions of each layer, around the oblong for that layer. The reliners may be made of various lengths and breadths to meet the requirements of tires of various sizes and worn portions of similar range.—From Popular Mechanics.

BARB-WIRE WOUNDS

After a barb-wire accident, do not apply axle grease or any rancid ointment to the wound. Wash the wound thoroughly with warm water. Then clip the hair as closely as possible around it and wash again to remove any hair or other foreign substance. When sand or hair has lodged in the depths of a deep cut, never use a wet sponge to clean it out. Use a piece of absorbent cotton or cotton batting. There will be much less risk of infection. It will be useless to put any stitches in a wound that is very deep or ragged, or that is located in a place not in perfect rest when the animal is making natural movements. Dry dusting powder has a healing effect on barb-wire wounds and other large, moist cuts and abrasions. Such a powder may be prepared cheaply by mixing together equal parts of slaked lime, sulphur, and charcoal. Prevent lock-jaw dangers in all nail wounds of the hoof by opening them up freely, which provides drainage for serum and pus. Saturate with a solution of corrosive sublimate and water in the proportion of 1 to 500. Cover with dusting powder, absorbent cotton, and a bandage. This treatment should be repeated daily until the wound is healed.

COMFORT ON THE FARM

Statistics Suggest Why Children Go To Cities

At a meeting of the Commission of Conservation a report of a survey conducted by 400 farmers was considered. Keeping the young people on the farm is one of Canada's national problems. Many cities have been suggested for the yearning for the city. The conveniences of the city home constitute one of the chief attractions. Notwithstanding this, however, very few farmers have introduced these conveniences into their homes.

Of the 400 farmers visited, 53 per cent. have young people in their families. With this large percentage of young people it is a regrettable fact that only two farmers out of every hundred have bathrooms in their homes. Only 0.2 per cent. had water closets, only 2.5 per cent. had complete service, and only 2.2 per cent. had electric light. In these 400 homes, only 16.5 per cent. had the water piped to the house, and but 17.5 per cent. had furnaces in the home. These conditions are entirely [illegible] control [illegible] farms, 86.7 per cent. of whom are the owners of farms averaging 126.5 acres.

In contrast with the foregoing, the conveniences which have been supplied by the government and public utility companies and of which the farmer has availed himself stand out prominently. The Post Office Department had carried to 76 per cent. of these 400 farmers rural free mail delivery, allowing 77 per cent. of them to be supplied with daily newspapers, while 58.2 per cent. had the convenience of a telephone. Only 2.5 per cent. had complete sanitary service in their homes, while 5 per cent. had automobiles, and 31.5 per cent. had either automobile or horse and buggy for the young people.

Much has been said and written to interest the farmer in the automobile, but little is heard of such household conveniences as the bath tub, kitchen sink, sanitary closet, etc. The automobile may carry the rural housewife away from her drudgery for a few hours a week, and to that extent proves a blessing, but the price of an automobile would provide a water supply and other conveniences that go with it, and render the home a home both to the housewife and the young people.

MARKETING HOGS

1. Don't beat your hogs, bruises mean immense losses to farmers, drovers and packers.
2. Farmers should bed wagons well and not overload when bringing hogs to town.
3. Don't stuff or overfeed your hogs when shipping. It is a dangerous practice and often results in suffocation, especially in warm weather.
4. Bed cars during warm weather with sand; straw and sawdust will heat.
5. Partition off all weak, crippled and vicious animals.
6. Do so market thin unfinished hogs. A thin growing pig will produce dollars to the farmer, and is worth little to the packer. Most desirable weights, 175 to 225 pounds.

ALFALFA EATS NITROGEN

How Soil Can Be Fertilized—Secret of Clovers

Up till 1866, scientists only knew, that where legumes grew, the land was the richer in nitrogen for that growth, but in that year Hellriegel discovered that the nodules on the roots of legumes were filled with minute organisms that in some way take up the free nitrogen of the air, and pass it on in soluble form into the plant. Plants grow in a great ocean of nitrogen, but who could have guessed that the little nodules on the roots of clover and alfalfa were the micro-organic agents to effect the conquest of the air of mankind? You will understand what a wonderful advantage it is to a young, progressive, thinking farmer, to know that clovers and alfalfa, when inoculated with the bacteria, have the key to unlocking the riches of the air. Clover does not need to have four leaves to bring good luck. The land that flowed with milk and honey, was a land that grew clover or some other legume—probably alfalfa. Alfalfa and riches go hand in hand in agriculture.

CANADA'S FUR-FARMERS

Legal Protection For Industry Needed In Every Province

Although considerable capital is invested in fur-farming in Ontario, the industry lacks the encouragement and legal security which it enjoys in Eastern Canada, especially Prince Edward Island. A case before the Middlesex County Court, occasioned by the killing of a valuable fox which had escaped from captivity, illustrates the difficulties that will constantly arise until fur-farmers secure the necessary legislation to place their industry upon a recognized legal basis. In the case referred to, substantial damages were awarded to the owner of the animal but such litigation should be avoided by laws specifically limiting the application of the ordinary provisions of the Game Act to fur-bearers raised in captivity as a definite branch of husbandry.

Prince Edward Island has been foremost in fostering the fur-farming industry. Fur-farmers are adequately protected with respect to the ownership of animals and to freedom of ranch property from trespass, while the Act incorporating the Prince Edward Island Silver Black Fox Breeders' Association should go far toward establishing reliable pedigree records and providing protection for both vendors and purchasers of breeding stock. Legislation for the same purpose must be provided by other provinces which desire to encourage the development of a successful fur-farming industry.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL NEEDS NEW FORESTS

Timber Waste Limits Usefulness of Ancient Project—Aimless Delays in Building

The Canadian Forestry Journal says: Over fourteen million dollars have been spent by the people of Canada on the Trent Canal, and yet the foundation of future revenues from local freight has been almost wholly demolished by the refusal of Dominion and Provincial Governments to place the remnant of unwasted timber under some system of protection. Into the Trent Canal project fresh millions are directed annually. Yet the only basis for justification of these heavy expenditures is an abundant and controllable flow of water. "This factor," remarked Dr. B. E. Fernow in his report on the Trent Watershed question, "is of paramount importance to the canal. Engineers have sometimes thought that dams along may effect the satisfactory regulation of the overflow but the wiser ones have recognized that for the best service, dams need to be supplemented by a forest cover such as a watershed furnishes."

The report continues: "The Trent Canal project has been a subject of public criticism and often of ridicule, ever since it was conceived in 1833. The criticism and ridicule are not, however, deserved by the original project but only by the irrational, slow manner in which it was executed. The canal project, in fact, has been subjected to precisely the same kind of management as the territory through which it passes. The chief value of a canal lies in connecting markets and resources, and, therefore, depends mainly on its outlets. The first outlet of the canal, the one into Lake Ontario, is now, after nearly a century of dilatory work, being completed; the other, which affords access to Georgian Bay, still hangs fire. So long as the outlets to larger markets or for through-traffic were lacking, only a very limited local traffic could develop.

"Since the principal resource of the region it serves was timber—a staple which needs more than local markets for a profitable and rational development—the value of the incomplete canal was limited indeed. Since this outlet was unavailable, the timber, owing to the expense of transportation to market, was cut in a more or less wasteful manner. As a result, the government derived scarcely any profit from this industry, and the returns to the lumbermen were also relatively small.

"If the cheap transportation which a canal furnishes had been in existence earlier, much more conservative logging operations could have been carried on; much closer utilization of material could have been made by mills situated along the route; much more profit could have been secured from this resource by both operators and the people; and, moreover, the source could have been managed for perpetuity, as a basis for manufacturing industries.

Timber Now Gone

"As it is, the principal local freight, that from the timber lands, is almost exhausted, and a large part of the usefulness of the canal has gone, at least in so far as local development is concerned. Outside of the water-power which it supplies, through traffic, which may follow upon the completion of the two outlets, can alone justify its existence for the present; unless by careful planning and management a revival of the industries depending on the forests can be managed."

BUTTER TRADE LAGS

Canada's Exports Much Bigger Years Ago—Women's Opportunity

In butter Canada is not doing as well as in cheese. There has been a significant decline in quantity for export. There are various reasons for this, the principal of which is the nearness of indefatigable Denmark and other producing European countries. Butter being a more perishable article than cheese, and the use of ice and the refrigerator being far less common in Britain than with us, the closer proximity of the source of supply of course the better. Then again there are rivals in the consumption of butter that there are not as regards its relative in component parts. Consequently Canada's butter export trade has not kept pace in development with that of cheese, although it has of late years shown some improvement.

There is good reason to fear that a long time will elapse before it will reach the high-water mark of production of 1902, when 24,128,944 pounds, at a value of $6,954,618, were exported, or the high-water mark in values of 1903, when 24,081,525 pounds sent out of the country commanded $7,075,528. The products of the years 1903 and 1904 afford marks good enough at present to aim at in the making of butter, but the goal opening for cheese of the highest Canadian standard is so wide that it has virtually no limitation. And it is women, who by their labor can pre-eminently fill the conditions called for.

Too Rich Cream Not Wanted

There are no advantages in producing a cream testing higher than 45 per cent. Too rich cream is undesirable because it tends to clog the separator; it increases the loss in handling due to sticking to the receptacles; it makes difficult accurate sampling, and thereby tends to yield incorrect tests. It is desirable to produce somewhat richer cream in summer than in winter to prevent excessive souring in summer and difficult handling in winter.

Nice Motoring Coats

Bolivia cloth is used in motoring coat of old rose color. The cloth resembles the waterfall material, but is more durable. The coat is lined throughout with black satin and has a deep, ruffled, shawl collar, trimmed with black satin. Black satin cuffs, very deep, are used on the sleeves, while wide black satin bands trim the bottom of the garment.

Some men are engaged once too seldom and some once too often.

Women are naturally credulous when their portraits flatter them.

START ON PRELIMINARIES

No Time to be lost in Enfranchising Conscription Law.

Ottawa, July 31.—The conscription bill, likely to be law by the end of the week, will be put into operation without delay. This does not mean necessarily that men will be hurriedly conscripted, but a start will be made with the essential preliminaries, and this will constitute partial enforcement. When tthese preliminaries are completed the conscription of the country's man power will begin.

In the first place, the act will be "proclaimed" to give it operative effect. Then boards of selection will select the exemptions tribunals. The provincial and central appeal bodies will be constituted. After this is done, the hearing of appeals for exemptions in the three class primarily called, will take considerable time.

The military service bill will come up for second reading and discussion in the Senate this afternoon. A vote is expected by to-morrow night, and the bill doubtless will carry. The Liberal leader, Senator Bostock, is likely to endorse the principle of conscription, but find fault with the present bill on the grounds of its alleged unworkability.

ITALY YIELDED TO ALLIES

Decided to Leave Greece to the Greeks.

Athens, Aug. 1.—Withdrawal of the allied forces from Old Greece, Thessaly and Epirus in accordance with the decision of the Balkan conference at Paris, is being rapidly carried out. The last Franco-British troops left Piraeus Monday. The Italians are similarly preparing to leave, retaining only a small triangle near Avlona in Albania. The Italian aspiration desired a wider field, but yielded in the interest of the united action to leave Greece to the Greeks.

Preparations are under way to call out the classes of 1916 and 1917, aggregating 60,000 men.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Civil War Romance

Story For Memorial Day

By F. A. MITCHEL

We used to think the war between the states was the biggest fight the world had ever seen, and until the pan-European fight came, involving the whole civilised world, it was. The war of '61 is now so far behind us that it ranks in period with the war with Mexico, and comparatively few living took any part in it.

Then, too, the southern and northern people have been mingling for the fifty or sixty years since the war. Some northerners have gone south, and a great many southerners have come north. I ran across a story of the great contention the other day, bearing it on northern territory. The hero and the heroine were septuagenarians, but they showed me photographs of themselves that took me back to the days of their youth as effectively as if I saw them when they first met. This is the story:

In the spring of 1862 a division of the Federal army advanced through Bowling Green, Ky., to Nashville and thence to Murfreesboro. At the latter point the army waited while the railroad that had been broken up by the Confederates was being repaired. During the execution of this work the army, with the exception of those engaged in the work, was idle, and, since there was no enemy near, the soldiers were allowed a good deal of freedom.

One day Johnny Warfield, a youngster who had enlisted in the Federal army on the day he was eighteen years old, concluded that he would go out foraging for delicacies, the paymaster having been around. The spring was coming on, and Johnny enjoyed tramping independently with no file closer to tread on his heels and no officer to yell orders at him. The air was balmy, and the sun shone bright. Johnny bent his steps southward partly from curiosity and partly because there were no Confederate forces in the vicinity, and he was as safe in one direction as another, though he was safe nowhere beyond the Federal lines from those independent mounted troops called partisans or from the guerrillas, who robbed friend and foe alike.

Johnny stopped at several farmhouses for the purpose of purchasing eggs, butter, milk and other delicacies, but the women to whom he applied preferred to keep their supplies, when they had them, to themselves and refused to sell. So Johnny went on southward, rejoicing in the warm April sunshine, listening to the singing birds and the hum of insects, till he arrived at one of those double houses so common in the south, with an opening, a porch, between them. Looking over a rail fence that separated the house from the road, he saw a girl working a churn on the porch. She looked to be about fifteen years old, wore her dress not far below the knees, and her hair, held back by a semicircular comb, was cut square around her neck.

"May I have a drink of buttermilk?" asked Johnny.

The girl made no reply, but, taking a tin dipper hanging to a nail, lifted the cover of the churn, filled the dipper with buttermilk and handed it to him. He drank it off and, taking from his pocket some paper war currency issued by the United States government in lieu of silver, offered it to the girl. But she said a drink of buttermilk was not worth paying for and declined to receive the shinplaster.

Liking the looks of the girl, Johnny climbed the fence and went with her to the house. Seating himself in a rocking chair on the porch, he took out his pipe, filled it and sat smoking contentedly. He soon learned from her that he had struck a Union family, and the Unionists of the south were very bitter against their Confederate neighbors. Johnny was given whatever of food there was in the house and was not permitted to pay for anything.

"See hyar, my boy," said the mother of the girl, "ain't yo' takin' a risk comin' down hyar alone? Morgan passed along the road airly this mornin'." (John Morgan was the celebrated Confederate partisan leader.)

Johnny said he hadn't thought much about the risk. He had scarcely spoken the words when a distant tread of horses' hoofs was heard coming up the road. The girl looked at Johnny and turned pale. Her mother beckoned him, and he ran into the house and was secreted in the cellar. Morgan and his men passed the house without stopping and rode on to make one of those dashes against the Union pickets which were a common practice with them.

John did not risk a return to camp for several days, during which he was sheltered and fed by his hosts, the Torbert family, and when he did venture out on the road he was thinking more of Emily Torbert, with whom he had been companionable, than of his safety. When he got back to his command he found it had been supposed he had been captured by the men who had made the raid.

A year passed, during which Johnny Warfield marched with his command into northern Alabama. Then the Union army was driven back into Kentucky, and after the battle of Perryville it started south again. In the summer of 1863 Johnny Warfield found himself again in Murfreesboro. The railroad had again been destroyed by the Confederates, and the army, now a very large one, was again waiting while the road was being repaired. When this was done and the corn was ripe so that forage could be procured for the animals, the Federals moved on southward. A small battle occurred a short distance south of Murfreesboro, in which Johnny was wounded and carried into a house near by.

When he gathered his faculties what was his astonishment to see Mrs. Torbert standing beside his bed. He stared at her, momentarily thinking that he had never left the house. Then he realised that he was in the room in which he had slept when there before. To crown his surprise a girl came into the room whom he recognised as Emily. Her dress reached to the floor, and her hair had been permitted to grow and was done up in a knot on the back of her head. She was a year older than when John had left her, and in that year she had grown to be a woman.

Several other wounded men had been lodged at the house, but they all soon recovered and rejoined the army, which had marched on southward. John was badly wounded and was to have been sent back to a hospital at Murfreesboro. But at the time for his removal he was very low, and he was left where he was. He remained there some time, nursed by Mrs. Torbert and her daughter, before he recovered his strength.

There had been a change, so far as Emily was concerned, in the family affairs. A neighbor who was a soldier in a Tennessee regiment of Confederates had been at the house, had seen Emily and wanted her for his wife. He was thirty years old and heir to one of the best plantations in that region. Mrs. Torbert, realising that he would be a good match for her daughter, had persuaded Emily to consent to marry him. At that time the Confederates were marching northward, but before Emily would assent to an immediate wedding the Federal troops had occupied Murfreesboro, and the Confederates had retreated to Tullahoma, leaving the space where the Torberts lived again debatable ground.

Shortly before John regained strength enough to rejoin his command a letter was received from Walter Bristow, Emily's betrothed, stating that he had received leave of absence to go to the Torbert plantation and claim his bride. He would be permitted to be absent but a day or two, after which he must rejoin his command, which had moved on south, followed by the northern army to Chattanooga. He would be obliged to pass around the Federal lines in order to reach the home of his bride.

John's reunion with the little southern girl had revived the feelings he had cherished when he had met her the first time. And, as for Emily, she had been captivated by the young soldier at the moment she saw him. When Johnny had left her after that first meeting she had never expected to see him again. But he had slipped into her heart and there lay, if not hopefully.

When the letter came from Bristow announcing that on a certain day he would come to claim his bride Emily collapsed. Her mother, ignorant of the fact that a love affair had grown up where she had arranged for an advantageous marriage, made no secret of the fact of the Confederate's coming and at once began to prepare apparel suitable for a bride. Johnny may have looked love to Emily, but he had never spoken it. The fact that a day was appointed for her to be given to another appalled him.

"Oh, Emily," he exclaimed, "don't do it!"

"I've promised!" she gasped.

Thus were the two suddenly plunged into a sea of difficulty.

"Maybe he won't come. He may not be able to get here," suggested Emily.

"If he is not here on time will you marry me?" pleaded John.

To this there was neither assent nor dissent. The lovers did not know what to do. A union between a soldier boy from a northern state to a portionless girl of Tennessee was not an especially practical act in itself, but when a man of means who, if killed in the war would leave her his property, was coming to marry her the situation was doubly complicated. John had not the assurance to ask the mother to give him her daughter under such circumstances, and Emily had no faith in her mother's permitting what would seem to be so ill timed a proceeding.

What they did was to hope the groom would not come. Indeed, he must take a great risk to do so. When the day came that he was to arrive the bride was arrayed in her wedding dress, and a country parson was engaged to perform the ceremony, for Bristow had written that he might dare to remain but a short time for fear of capture by the Federal troops. At 10 o'clock in the morning he was not there; at noon he had not arrived; at dark nothing had been heard of him.

Mrs. Torbert was angry.

"Come, Emily," said John.

"Where?"

"To the parson."

Emily yielded passively. The two slipped out, went to the parson and were married. Emily returned. John was not seen there again till the end of the war, which was two years later. He found his wife waiting for him and took her to his home beyond the Ohio river.

Bristow on his way to claim his bride had been captured by Federal troops.

He was taken to a Federal prison north of the Ohio river, where he was confined till the end of the war and never could communicate with her.

Bright Over Nothing.

A recent amusing sketch depicted a stout British matron, during a midnight zeppelin raid, panting her dutiful way up to the attic bedroom of the new maid to invite her to join the family downstairs — of course, for greater safety. But the girl, kneeling in the window seat, merely turned an excited countenance over her shoulder long enough to reply politely:

"O, thank you, ma'am, but it isn't necessary. I've got a beautiful view up here!"

The artist may have invented the scene, but probably he did not, declares an American woman who recently visited London; for in the household of the friends with whom she was staying a parallel incident occurred. In this case it was not the mistress who went up, but the maid who came down hastily but decorously kimonoed, to offer to any of the family who wished to see what was going on the hospitality of her tiny, top-storey chamber, which commanded a wide view over roofs and chimney pots to the horizon. She was surprised and disappointed that no one accepted, and only a downright command deterred her from returning to her post of observation.

The housekeeper of another American, married to an Englishman, was very deaf, but something of the commotion going on outside penetrated her consciousness and roused her from her slumbers. Half-dressed, she ran from her room, and gasped as she encountered the other members of the household, excited and very much in negligee.

"Great 'eving, ma'am, whatever's 'as 'appened?"

"Zeppelins," someone shouted in her ear. She dropped limply into a chair.

"Hand I thought it was an "urricane, and bricks tumbling down the chimbley!" she cried. "My 'eart, my 'eart, what a fright, and all for nothing!"—Punch.

The Awakening of Peru.

A considerable increase in industrial activity is to be noticed in Peru. On the whole the textile industries have been the most successful, since cotton and wool are produced locally in quantities and qualities sufficient to ensure profitable results. The only other industries that have attained much importance include the manufacture of cotton-seed oil, soap, and cocaine. The cotton mills in Peru manufacture principally sail-cloth, filter-press cloth, towels, and some other heavy goods. The total number of looms in operation is one thousand and fifteen, and the annual production is about fifteen million yards. The development of this industry will create a fairly good opening for cotton mill machinery. The woollen industry is also expected to expand.

ADULT FLY SUPREME; MUST COMBAT LARVAE

How Shall World Fight This Dirtiest of Insects?—Many Practical Methods of Warfare

The house fly is the dirtiest of all vermin. It visits the filthiest places imaginable and then distributes the filth over our food. It carries the germs of typhoid, infantile diarrhœa, and other intestinal diseases, and, probably, assists in the spread of tuberculosis. Hence, it is not merely very dirty but exceedingly dangerous as well. Means of protection against flies are common; doors and windows may be screened, fly papers, traps, "swatters," and poison may be employed to kill those that do enter the house. But these purely defensive measures are not enough. The war must be carried into the enemy's country; the fly must be exterminated.

To wage war with the adult fly is to go into a ceaseless battle that can never be decisive in man's favor. The flies form such a numerous host that it is impossible to kill them all in a single season and a very few survivors are sufficient to propagate an equally numerous host the season following.

Clean Up Always

The only way to exterminate the fly is to attack it in the larval or maggot form. Flies lay their eggs in manure or garbage; ten days from the time of hatching the maggots emerge as winged insects, fully equipped for distributing disease-breeding bacteria. But a city with clean backyards and clean stable premises would be a flyless city, for it would have abolished the flies' breeding grounds. The plan of campaign against these annoying and dangerous pests is thus plain: we must clean up, not once or twice a year, but all the time.

City by-laws should require all owners of stables to keep manure in a fly-tight, covered box and to have it removed at least twice a week. A similar law should apply to the disposal of garbage. Persons with dirty back yards should be prosecuted. Privies should be abolished wherever possible and, where allowed, should be kept continually disinfected and be cleaned twice weekly. The piling of refuse in disgusting and unsightly "dumps" should never be permitted. If the town cannot afford an incinerator, the refuse should be buried.

Borax Treatment

Experiments have shown that the fly larvæ in manure and other refuse may be killed by treatment with borax, one pound of borax being sufficient to treat 16 cubic feet or veary nearly 13 bushels of manure. If used in larger quantities, the borax may prove injurious to plants. The borax should be sifted over the manure, particularly near the edges of the pile, which should then be sprinkled with four gallons of water. This treatment will kill 98 to 99 per cent of all the larvæ in the manure. At 11 cents per pound for borax, it is estimated that the cost would be 2 cents per horse per day. This cost could be very greatly reduced by employing calcined colemanite instead of borax, if the former were imported in large quantities. One pound of colemanite will treat 11 bushels of manure and its larvicidal action is as effective as that of borax.

WHY SPRAY TWICE?

Experiments Show Conclusively the Value of This Method

Prof. Blair of Nova Scotia writes: In order to gather information as to the value of the early sprays as compared with the later ones a series of tests in which plots were sprayed before, and twice after the blossoms in 1915, were compared with those sprayed once before the blossoms and twice after. In one series of experiments the one spray before the blossoms was put on about midway between the first spray, which was put on just after the leaf buds were nicely opened May 17th, and the second spray put on just before the first petals opened May 21st, or just before or about the time the blossom clusters were showing pink. This we have called a midway spray. In the other test the one spray before blossoms was put on just before the petals of the flower clusters opened.

There was a difference of from two to three per cent. only in favor of two sprays before the blossoms. The two most important sprays were the ones just before and just after blossoming. From results obtained it would seem that should the period between the opening of the leaf buds and the opening of the petals of the flower clusters be short owing to weather conditions, one spray may be sufficient to give practically clean fruit, but should this period be extended two sprays should be given.

A study of results from soluble sulphur plots sprayed at different dates indicates that the early spray was quite an important one, and that the two applications before the blossoms were advisable. On the day following the application of the midway spray at Berwick there was a sharp rainfall of about quarter of an inch, as was the case with the spray after blossoming, which showed that soluble sulphur is not an adhesive spray, and that a heavy, quick rainfall may reduce its fungicidal value and bring about increased burning, as was the case with these sprays. It would seem, therefore, that it is wise to make two applications before blossoms; first after the leaf buds open, and second just before the blossoms open, which dates correspond with those advised for the best control of insects.

SELLING ONTARIO FRUIT

Importance of Honest Packing and Careful Shipping to West

P. J. Carey of the Dominion Fruit Division talks to Ontario fruit men as follows: Much has been said of commission men, transportation companies and faulty marketing, but the strongest link in the chain of marketing fruit is forged at the orchard or packing house when the grower puts up properly matured fruit honestly packed in strong packages, and starts it on its journey under the best conditions possible. The man who instead has no thought but to get the best of the deal by placing attractive fruit on top covering culls below, or the slovenly packer who may be honest enough but packs his fruit in a careless and unattractive manner have broken a link in the marketing chain that cannot be repaired. If a stronger feeling of responsibility, more public spirit and an aim at higher ideals was worked up among the growers it would be productive of much good. Successful growers will tell you that the effort is not a difficult one, and if one were to ask them what was the greatest pleasure they felt in their season's work, the answer would be in the knowledge of the fact that they had pleased the consumer.

Another substantial way to please the consumer is by lengthening the period of the life of the fruit. Too large a percentage of the basket fruit reaches the consumer in a wasted condition, caused by heating in transit. Peaches with discolored spots are not desirable either from the hand or to be used for canning. In many cases fruit otherwise of good quality has to be cut half away before it is fit for use. Some method of pre-cooling or at least of using refrigerator cars would meet the requirement and go a long way in helping the sale of more fruit. Freshly picked fruit put into box cars where the temperature is often eighty to ninety degrees, perhaps to remain in the cars over night, is sure to give poor satisfaction and often is in the first or second stage of decay before it reaches the consumer. It would be argued by some that these precautions mean additional expense, but the sooner the growers wake up to the fact that without the consuming public they would have to shut up shop, the better for the success of their labors. It pays to satisfy the consumer.

Fair to good success has attended the shipping of small fruits from Niagara to the northwest markets with the exception of peaches and strawberries. I am afraid our peaches are too tender for long distance markets except under special treatment. For export market Ontario's peach shipments are likely to remain in the experimental stage for some time. The same can be said of the northwest markets as far as shipping in a general way is concerned.

WEEDS ON CITY LOTS

Drastic Action Demanded to Eliminate This Menace to Agriculture

At a meeting of the Commission of Conservation stress was laid upon the increasing prevalence of weeds. Earnest pleas were made for action to overcome this detriment to agriculture. While farming interests are exerting themselves to eliminate this serious handicap, they have just cause to complain of the prevalence of weeds on city lots and subdivided land upon the outskirts of cities and towns. This land, once forming some of the best farms, offers ideal conditions for the growth of weeds, and they flourish in great luxuriance. The owners in many cases are non-residents, and, consequently, do not appreciate the condition of their property.

Municipal officers and road-masters should be given the authority, and be compelled, to have weeds cut upon vacant property, the cost of doing the work to become a legal charge against the land. The majority of owners would be willing to pay the cost of weed cutting, and would appreciate the service. It is hoped that action will be taken, so that vacant urban property may no longer be regarded as a dangerous weed menace.

RUSH GRAIN THROUGH

Speedy, Efficient Methods Used in Giant Elevators

Grain out of condition has three degrees of classification as to its condition, they being tough, damp, and wet. The shrinkage which all these out-of-condition cars suffer on being dried is ascertained at Port Arthur or Fort William by a test machine, in which a weighed sample of the car to be dried is boiled in oil, and the steam from the moisurte in the grain is passed through a cooling chamber and condensed, and by its quantity telling exactly the amount of moisture steam from the moisture in the grain and which amount, in weight, is deducted from the weight of the car being dried. When the car has been unloaded, word is given to the weighmen, both elevator and government, the latter one keeping constant watch on the scales, of which there are ten in each unit, while they are in use.

On word being received that the grain from the car, the number and grade of which they have already received, is all unloaded, the weighing takes place and the weight stamped automatically on a strip of thick paper on which is inscribed the car number, scale unloaded on, and name of weighman in charge, and these, after the weight has been recorded in the daily reports, are filed away for future reference. All the weigh tickets are numbered consecutively, which adds to the absolute correctness of the weighing outward on vessels—telling without fail the exact number of drafts placed on any vessel. The exact identity of the grain is now lost and only its equivalent in grade and weight is guaranteed for delivery.

NOT A SECOND TOO SOON

Here is an experience of the Cheshires at Messines Ridge: About this time a fighting colonel saw a number of the enemy making off from a farm on the right of the front. To see Germans escape was more than he could endure, so he rushed with his men forward, took the farm, and fired with good effect into the retreating enemy. Then he looked at his watch—the synchronising of all watches was one of the greatest little triumphs of organizatin throughout the whole army—and he saw with horror that our next barrage was due to fall on this exact spot within a few seconds. The space gave him just time enough to gallop his men into cover, which was happily at hand. As the last men went to ground our barrage, true to the second, as the colonel noted on his watch, descended straight as a perteullis on the devoted place. The Cheshires had a terrible few minutes to endure, but escaped with two casualties.

SMASH STRONG SHELTER

Vulnerable Part of Dug-Outs is Entrance where small Shells Penetrate

The most elaborate refuge trenches give an impression of the methods necessary to withstand the tremendous bombardments which are a feature of the present war. The overhead protection is frequently most elaborate. In certain cases the shelter chambers have been found roofed in with several layers of large baulks or logs of wood, alternating with layers of sandbags. In some of the most carefully finished the place of the logs is taken by iron joists, or masonry, or concrete. This is said to afford excellent protection against heavy shell fire.

Absolute security is not possible, unless protected in the most extraordinary manner, for it can be destroyed by bombardment if direct hits can be obtained.

The entries have been, perhaps, the most vulnerable points of these shelters. Even the small shells of the field guns can create immense damage and havoc in this way. The expedients to guard against this danger are incomplete, consisting chiefly of multiplying the number of exits and also adding air shafts. It is possible for imprisoned men to crawl out through these.

In attacking these refuges the trouble to get the precise range. Bombardments are usually carried on by zones, that is, a certain number of guns are assigned a certain area on the map which they are to smother with a hail of bursting shells. The results are usually severe enough. Barbed wire and advance defences are torn up and razed, trenches levelled, shelters destroyed, guns disabled or blown up. And yet it is a fact that many parts of the trench tangles during some of the greatest battles of the war were uninjured, generally because they had not been marked down. Consequently, as the infantry advanced they were frequently held up by these undamaged sectors, which constituted centres of obstinate and sometimes successful resistance and had to be isolated and slowly reduced one by one.

INFLATION OF TIRES

Over-Inflation Is Much Better Than Under-Inflation

In a contribution to the records of the Society of Automobile Engineers, an expert and one of the foremost authorities on tire matters gives some very valuable advice to the car user as to how best to meet the problems of tire care. He says very positively that under-inflation is the thing to watch out for and guard against—not over-inflation. If it is found necessary for comfort and protection to carry a lower pressure than that recommended, it should be done by all means, he explains, but it should at the same time be plainly understood that one always takes a chance with tires by so doing, and the practice never can be excused by considerations of temperature of any other minor causes tending to increase the pressure. If for any reason the pressure must be lowered, it can be done and durability maintained only by the use of larger tires.

In fact, this authority says that it is practically impossible to hurt tires by over-inflation, providing they have not previously been damaged by overloading and under-inflation. They are built with a very high factor of safety, and in tests they have been inflated to as high as 300 pounds per square inch pressure without anything harmful happening to the tire, the rim finally giving away. This a once nails a belief that is quite general that high pressure in a tire renders it a dangerous thing. The bursting pressure is seven times the pressure which is recommended.

Of course, there are limits to which the inflation should be carried for comfortable riding, and obviously a too highly inflated tire defeats the purpose for which it is used. The tire makers have set down pressures which are the best compromise between the lack of resilience on the one hand and under-inflation on the other.

Saved Whole Detachment

Following is the citation of Sgt. William Gosling, R.F.A., for the Victoria Cross: Owing to a faulty cartridge a bomb, after discharge, fell 10 yards from a trench mortar of which he was in charge. He sprang out, lifted the nose of the bomb, which had sunk into the ground, unscrewed the fuse and threw it on the ground, where it immediately exploded. This saved the lives of the detachment.

ENCOURAGING BIRDS

Nesting Boxes and Other Inducements For All the Year

Birds about the home add a touch nature that can only be appreciated by those who have succeeded in attracting them. They may be gathered about in all seasons of the year with ease and certainly merely by offering what they desire. In summer they do not require to be fed, but they do appreciate fresh water for bathing and drinking. A shallow pool of varying depth, if only a foot across, becomes on hot days a centre of attraction. A pan, with stones in it, set in the ground and kept filled with water, will provide this attraction for the birds.

Birds are desirable not only on account of their beauty and song, but because of their economic worth. They are especially useful as insect destroyers during the breeding period, when they have to work early and late to obtain sufficient food for their nestlings, and their movements at this season are particularly interesting. For this reason it is especially desirable to provide them with nesting facilities. They will make use of bits of wool or twine, or feathers, in making their nests. Nesting boxes also furnish an inducement for the birds to visit us. Many species of birds now accept the hospitality of these boxes for the safe rearing of their young, and will occupy them year after year.

Gardens For Canadians

The growing of even a few vegetables by twice as many people as have vegetable gardens at present would enormously simplify some of our economic problems, and give to so many more thousands of families fresher and more healthful vegetable food. Considered in relation to a few families, this may seem of small interest, but the cumulative result throughout the Dominion would be of great national importance.

The Influence of Environment

The appearance of his surroundings is usually an index to a man's character. The planting and care of a garden has also an influence for good, as well as a sentimental effect in the home, which cannot be measured by material results.

Russians Evacuate Strong Strategic Points In Galicia

Further Retirement of Kerensky's Men is Reported From Petrograd While Amsterdam Hears That Czernowitz Has Been Captured by Enemy--Continuation of Heavy Rain Checks Alllies' Drive in Flanders---French Repulse a Heavy German Attack.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, August 3. — Kimpolung, one of the strong strategic points of Bukowina toward the southermost end of the Russian line has been evacuated by the Russians, it was announced to-day. The War Office announced a retirement under pressure of the Austro-German forces.

Kimpolung lies near the mountain chain which devides Bukowina from Roumania—about fifty-five miles south of Czernovitz.

Further retirements of Russian forces across the frontier River Zbrucz eastward into Russia from Galicia, was likewise made public. Between the Dneister and Pruth rivers and the Carpathians, the official admitted the enemy occupation of Falkei.

LONDON, August 3.—The continuation of rain still held up the Franco-British drive in Flanders to-day. Field Marshal Haig's late afternoon report of the fighting in this section dealt with the repulse of various enemy counter attacks northwest of Warneton.

AMSTERDAM, August 3.—The capture of Czernovitz by the Austro-Germans to-day was announced in Vienna despatches received here.

Czernovitz is an importan tcity in Bukowina, one of the southern pivots of the Russian line.

Czernovitz is an important city in Bukowina, one of the southern pitimes. It was first captured by the Russians from the Austro-Hungarians on September 4, 1914, only to be evacuated a few weeks later. Before the war it had a population of about 70,000.

LONDON, August 3.—A state of siege has been declared in the whole Greek Department of Atica including Athens and Piraeus, according to a despatch from Athens to the Exchange Telegraph Co.

PARIS, August 3.—This afternoon's official statement follows: "East and south of Cerny after a bombardment of extreme violence, German forces delivered on a front of about 1,500 yards, violent attacks, but they all were repulsed by our fire. In the course of the fighting we inflicted heavy losses on the enemy.

COPENHAGEN, August 3.—Expressing his boundless thanks "Kaiser Wilhelm telegraphed Field Marshal Hindenburg conferring on him the Cross and Star of the Royal Order of the House of Hohenzollern.

WASHINGTON, August 3.—Prospects of a big Balkan drive, America's extension on her embargo, and better feeling in Italian diplomatic quarters over the Austrian situation, marked to-day's war developments. Some diplomats said the United States may declare war on Austria soon. Extension of the American embargo to cover steel products may force Japan to place some of her shipping in the Atlantic as the Allies and the United States desire. Meantime the neutrals have been asked to present their food needs to the United States for vise. These needs must be kept at a minimum, for this Government has determined that none of its products shall reach Germany through re-export. Peace talk will break in the Senate soon, as Senator Stone proposes to speak of the American Union against militarism.

LONDON, August 3.—A German drive against Infantry Hill, east of Monchy Le Preux, was successful in part last night, Field Marshal Haig reported to-day. The enemy temporarily held portions of the British front line. "Early at night the enemy renewed his attempt to drive us from Infantry Hill," the statement said. "On a half-mile front he succeeded temporarily in possessing himself of portions of our front line. At two points out counter attacks regained part of the lost ground."

LONDON, August 3.—Col. Repington, commenting in the Times on the battle of Flanders, writes: "Hindenburg had accumulated in front of us great masses of troops and an unusually important quantity of guns. . . . Against modern arms the objectives must be limited by the distance which attacking troops can be aided by the guns. . . . Hindenburg and Ludendorff are the easterners, and do not know much about the west, or they would not write such childish nonsense about 'crater positions' of the Germans east of Ypres. It might be well for us to publish a trench map of the German positions. It would be seen that the whole front was a maze of wire trenches, cross trenches and redoubts, strongly fortified woods, villages and posts, forming a deep fortified zone of immense strength. Although the Russian offensive had alarmed the German staff and caused them to detach a few divisions for Galicia, there were still 150 German divisions in the west on July 31, and the enemy was in great strength from Lys northward. In the particular sectors attacked by the British troops there were 16 German divisions in line and support ready for action. Instead of the vast masses of troops attributed to us in Ludendorff's nervous imagination, the attacking divisions were not more in number than those defending the lines. Both sides have many more divisions than this north of the Lys. Our divisions are stronger than the Germans, but Lndendorff's implication that the life of the crater was held by weak German troops against overpowering masses is a figment of the imagination.

"The objectives assigned to our troops did not include main artillery positions of the enemy. A large capture of guns consequently was not anticipated."

Campaign To Secure Men For Farm Labour

TORONTO, Aug. 3.— For over two hours to-day the special committee appointed by Hon. W. J. Hanna Food Controller at the conference with manufacturers yesterday, met with Premier Hearst, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson and officials of the Provincial government, to shape plans for the campaign to secure 10,000 men from industries and mercantile firms to assist in harvesting the Ontario grain crop. Hon. Mr. Hanna, Food Controller, was also present. It is understood the Government will find transportation for city men going out to help on Ontario farms, but will not make up difference in pay. Measures will be taken to urge farmers to offer large pay and the Government will advertise heavily.

UNITED STATES TO TAKE OVER ALL OCEAN SHIPS

WASHINGTON, August 2.—Plans for taking over for operation all American ocean-going merchant ships soon will be announced by the Shipping Board. Charters will be requisitioned under a recent act of Congress, authorizing the President to commandeer tonnage for Government uses.

RULES IN REGARD TO MOTOR BOATS ARE DISREGARDED

Custom Officials Intimate That There Will Have To Be a Change For the Better on the Otonabee

HERE ARE REGULATIONS.

The regulations in regard to motor boats are being regularly broken by boat owners on the Otonabee, and the local customs officials are determined that there must be a change for the better in the near future. Messrs. Hall and Laing have observed the conditions for themselves, and wish to warn offenders that prosecutions are likely to follow.

Here are the rules concerning motor boats:

In the following rules the words "motor boat" shall include every vessel propelled by machinery and not more than 65 feet in length except tug-boats and tow-boats propelled by steam. The length shall be measured from end to end over the deck excluding sheer.

Rule 41. That motor boats subject to the provisions of these rules shall be divided into classes as follows:

Class one. Less than 26 feet in length;

Class two. Twenty six feet or over and less than 40 feet in length;

Class three. Forty feet or over, and not more than 65 feet in length.

Rule 42. That every motor boat in all weathers from sunset to sunrise, shall carry the following lights, and during such time no other lights that which may be mistaken for those prescribed shall be exhibited.

(a) Every motor boat of class one shall carry the following lights:

First. A white light aft to show all around the horizon.

Second. A combined lantern in the forepart of the vessel and lower than the white light aft showing green to starboard and red to port, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on their respective sides.

(b) Every motor boat of classes two and three shall carry the following lights:

First. A bright white light in the fore part of the vessel as near the stem as practicable, so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 20 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light ten points on each side of the vessel, namely from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on either side. The glass or lens shall be of not less than the following dimensions:

Class two: Nineteen square inches.

Class three: Thirty-one square inches.

Second. A white light aft to show all around the horizon.

Third. On the starboard side a green light so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of ten points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the

A PRESSING NEED TO BE MET

One feature of the filling up of the city is that many of the families of the men on service find that rents are rising beyond their means and that there is a very noticeable scarcity of houses. No less than five women have appealed to the Patriotic Fund Office for help in this matter.

Now is the time, when moving can be done with least inconvenience to have this want attended to. The appeal cannot be suffered to pass unnoticed. It will not do to be indifferent. These people must be housed, before the fall weather sets in.

So will those who have houses of moderate rentals to offer, or who can spare part of a house, 'phone or in any other way advise the Patriotic Fund Office. It will be a share of public service so to do. To any who will place houses at disposal the Committee will, in cases, guarantee the rent so long as the head of the house is on service. For a roof must be over the heads of the family.

Kindly make your offers. Five cases are waiting now.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' OUTING PROMISES TO BE A GREAT SUCCESS

Big Programme of Athletic Events Will Be Included in the Day's Doings--Great War Veterans Who Have Not Signed Lists Are Asked to Do So at Once--To-day's General Military News.

The picnic for the returned soldiers of Peterborough to be held on Friday next promises to be one of the biggest excursions in the city's history. The accommodation of the two steamers, Stoney Lake and Geneva will undoubtedly be taxed to the utmost, and it is important that all returned soldiers in Peterborough, and the widows of Peterborough's soldiers, who have died overseas, should leave their names at the Great War Veterans' Headquarters, Barrie Building, as soon as possible. There will be all kinds of athletic sports, and the business men of the city will be given an opportunity to donate prizes for the events. Altogether it promises to be a great day.

Once more all members of the Great War Veterans are reminded that if they have not yet received any portion of he promised three months extra pay they should call at club headquarters and sign the sheets which will be found there. The rooms are open at any time. These lists will be closed to-morrow night, so that quick action is needed.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—Sir Robert Borden, in the House of Commons this afternoon, submitted a statement from General Potter regarding the suppression of "The Fiddler," which he read. The phamplet, said General Potter, affected Canada only insofar as the Canadian troops were held up as horrible examples of the neglect and carelessness in regard to liquor restrictions and venereal trouble. The book reflected very strongly on the Canadian troops. Harm had already been done through similar, irresponsible and exaggerated statements and publications, alarm and anxiety were created in Canada because of them. The representations made in the book both as to alcoholism and venerealism were grossly exaggerated. The picture drawn was entirely contrary to the facts. After two years direct contact with the Canadian troops both in England and in France, General Potter could say that it was a gross libel on the men.

"It is a gross libel on the men," said General Potter, "and a great unkindness to those relatives at home to set forth islolated examples without stating percentages and numbers of troops involved." General Potter then quoted positive evidence to the contrary from reports made by Major-General John Hughes, Major-General S. B. Steele, and Col. C. A. Smart, all of these reports showed a remarkably small percentage of cases of drunkeness or venereal diseases.

Rum Ration Necessary.

Reference was made in the books to the rum ration. "It is true," said General Potter, 'that with the best control unfortunate incidents will occasionally occur due to pilfering from the battalion issues of rum before it reaches the men in the trenches. This, from my experience, is a very rare occurrence. It is my conviction that during the six months of bad weather at least it is necessary for the efficiency of the men that rum be available for issue on occasions considered by the commanding officer to justify it.

Of the twenty-one who left Renfrew with the first contingent only one, Private Munroe, remains at the front. He was seventeen when he went. The council is trying to get a holiday for the youth. Of the others four were killed, seven missing and nine wounded.

Camp Borden, Aug. 2.—In a short time the Canadian Defence Force will have ceased to exist. A new unit is to be organized to be known as the First Depot Battalion, Central Ontario Regiment, into which all the overseas men of the C.D.F. service battalions will be transferred. Those who have not enlisted for overseas will be given the option of doing so or taking their discharge.

The new unit will be a large one, having a total establishment of 2,044 of all ranks. It will be modelled on the reserve battalions now in England, and will send drafts overseas from time to time as the men show the necessary proficiency in training.

Fifty-two officers are called for in the establishment, including a lieutenant-colonel, a major, an adjutant, a quartermaster, eight captains and 40 lieutenants. As there are at present somewhat over 70 Canadian officers great interest will be taken by them in the next week or so, in the selection, which has yet to be made. Such officers as are not chosen for the new battalion will be permitted to revert or to retire to civil life, or possibly some other provision may be made for them. An opening seems to be indicated by the statement that two additional officers fit for light duty are to be allowed for each 100 men classified by the medical board as (A. 3) serving with the battalion.

The battalion will consist of headquarter with signallers, pioneers and stretcher-bearers, band, and eight companies. In the establishment of company officers will be included an assistant-adjutant and musketry, bombing, physical and bayonet training and signalling officers. The drummers and buglers are all to be soldiers classified as (A.4) or (C.), that is either under 19 years of age or unfit for overseas, and drummers under 19 when they reach that age will come on the establishment as privates. There will be the usual proportion of N.C.O.'s.

This change will necessarily mean also the absorption of the Infantry Training Depot here into the new organization. This depot has been since

THE GERMAN LOSSES IN FLANDERS ARE ENORMOUS

VIVID DESCRIPTION OF THE BATTLEFIELD ON FLANDERS FRONT

"Birds-eye View of Hell" is American Aviator's Term as He Tells of the Terrible Conditions in the Present Battle

TITANIC EXPLOSIONS

(By W. S. Forest U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

PARIS, Aug. 3.—"I birdseye view of Hell." This is how the Flanders battlefield looked to an American aviator who flew over it at the height of the great allied offensive.

"I flew at an altitude of about 2,000 feet," he wrote the United Press from "Somewhere at the Front" to-day "The land was pockmarked by yawning craters and holes welling with water and wounded men, struggling through the mud. The tanks wallowed through like swamp monsters. The only enemy first and second lines could be traced with difficulty. German wire entanglements were buried. Down below I could see tiny figures of men, French and British infantry frantically "digging in" everywhere far in advance of their objectives Stretcher bearers could be picked out crawling back with bandaged wounded. A German albatross (biplane could be seen half buried in muck. Further back, moving from shell hole to shell hole the grey of German infantry could be discerned. The enemy fought desperately but ineffectively, yielding steadily. Hundreds of spans bridged the stagnant trickle called the Yser canal and over these bridges scurried men and supplies. I could see artillery hurrying to advanced positions. Pack mules, carrying machine guns, more infantry, vans of munitions struggled forward.

"Over all this dark scene of carnage lowered the black skies pouring an uncessing torrent of rain. The roaring of guns was indescribable. Titanic explosions punctuated the continuous fury of sound. The storm increased in fury with the intensity of the combat below."

5 Counter Attacks By Enemy At Ypres Have Been Stopped

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 3. — Fighting as much against an engulfing sea of mud as against the enemy, British troops were still consolidating their gains by local attacks to-day. The weather was slightly improved, but massed infantry actions were practically out of the question. The artillery therefore was invoked to continue the pounding of the German line. Early to-day further counter attacks by German picked forces, were thrown back at several points along the line, where high ground permitted some freedom from the unending mud of the Flanders fields. With last night's attacks in the Ypres-Roulers sector the Germans have launched at least five assaults to attempt recapture of this ground.

Men Who Wish To Work On Farms May Go To-morrow

Two young men employed in the city arranged with Mr. G. A. Gillespie to commence work in the country on Monday. The harvest season has reached its height and to the number of applications for help there will likely be others received to-morrow. Hence, citizens who feel the urge to spend several weeks, or a month or more on the farm should move now when the need of help is most acute Mr. Gillespie is in close touch with the farmers, and will direct those who wish to help in gathering this year's harvest.

Foe's Counter Attacks Against Newly Won British and French Positions Cost Him Very Heavily

RETREAT ANTICIPATED

LONDON, Aug 2.—While the rain and the morass have served to hold the allied forces in leash, preventing a resumption of the great offensive of Tuesday, they have not been effective in keeping the Germans from throwing counter attacks with large forces of men against several newly-won sectors of the front held by the British and French troops nor in bringing about a cessation of the violent artillery duel along the entire line.

The army of Crown Prince Rupprecht evidently considers the British gain north-east of Ypres the most important made in Tuesday's battle, for upon this territory he has concentrated the strongest of his counter-offensive operations in an attempt to regain the lost ground. His efforts, however, have gone for naught, the British artillery and infantry fire raking the advancing forces mercilessly putting an end to the attacks and adding materially to the already heavy casualties the Germans have suffered. The battlefield is said to be literally strewn with German dead.

There is no indication in either the British or French official communications just when their combined push again will be started, but it is possible that at least a day of warm sunshine will be necessary to dissipate the quagmire so that the big allied guns may be realigned and to permit the airmen to relocate the positions the foe is holding.

Reports coming from Holland declare that the Germans are moving their headquarters further east, which bears out earlier stories that the Kaiser's generals feared their lines might be broken and the forces in Belgium isolated.

That the Battle of Flanders will last several weeks at least is well understood here. The allies are using men and material on a scale hitherto unknown. It is generally conceded that on the result of this offensive will depend the question whether it is feasible or not to drive the Germans by force of arms from the occupied territory and also the wider question of the value of a frontal offensive as a general strategic principle.

GERMAN LOSSES ENORMOUS.

Telegraphing from British headquarters in Belgium Reuter's correspondent writes:

"Despite the weather there has been much hard fighting during the past twenty-four hours. The Germans were manifestly perturbed at our gaining so much ground along the Pilkem Ridge, and they launched several desperate counter-attacks, although these were repeatedly checked by our artillery. Yet, in places, they reached the stage of hand-to-hand fighting of a ferocious character.

"The Germans are throwing in their best troops to retrieve the situation, and their losses must be colossal. Our preponderance of gun powder enables our artillery to maintain a steady barrage upon the rear of the new German line, so that reliefs have to be brought through this before they can organise for attack.

"The enemy artillery has been concentrating heavily upon certain sectors, and the weather prevents our airmen directing counter-battery work to any extent.

"The Germans, late yesterday, delivered two counter-attacks just north of Frezenberg and in the second one achieved their objective. The first enemy attack was made at 3 p.m. and this was repulsed. Three hours later the Germans put up a heavy smoke barrage, and under cover of this again assaulted the section of the line in question and

WE DON'T DO OUR BIT.

In the matter of doing our best to help the cause of democracy by helping win this war, no individual element of the national strength can reproach another if failure becomes the voice of reproach. It is a practice of many to concentrate reproach upon Quebec, but Quebec is by no means a sinner above all. All of us—everybody, every element—have come short.

Beginning with what should be the most important agency in war work, the government, we have had ineffective management of the most of the administrative interests committed to its charge. We have had lack of leadership and slavish following of such leadership as we had. Parliament, instead of being a corrective of the government became a simple registration board of unconsidered, delayed and perfunctory impulses to action or propulsion of necessity. Money has been provided liberally and spent lavishly and in ways that not only brought inadequate value, but contributed to immense waste. In the midst of trumpet calls to services that he interests of the war demanded, the machinery of administration and the energies of ministers have been too largely consecrated to the promotion of party advantage.

Nor have the people realized the seriousness of the situation or the call to sacrifice and service that would come from a recognition of conditions and of the duty they demanded. The capital demand of the war situation is food and still more food. It does not seem that we have done what we might have done to reach the maximum of our productive capacity. In another place on this page is found an article from the Financial Post, indicating that Canada has not done what might have been done and what must yet be done in order to discharge her full responsibility. In Great Britain, where the crop area is one to ten thousand as compared with this country, work was began last January to increase the area of cultivation by three million acres. The Post points out that in England they have a capable executive as minister of agriculture, and that, on the contrary in Canada, the Post insists, we have a "failure" as Minister of Agriculture."

> "He is the victim of a system that fills cabinet positions, with successful politicians instead of with successful executives. . . . We want, and we can get five million more acres under cultivation from the 1918 crop. A new Minister of Agriculture must be got at once."

To get a new Minister of Agriculture that would be an improvement we must have a new government; we must have a new war policy; we must displace partisanship that plays the devil with effective administration, by the patriotism that will work first, last and all the time for putting the entire resources of the country at work, freed from the enlargement of party politics and party patronage; that will furnish leadership and stimulus to the people and bring about a popular realization of the war situation and a popular determination to do a popular duty.

We need both these things, especially the latter. The people do not realize; the people do not do as they would do if they did realize. The current of social, and commercial life flows on unruffled or unimpeded by considerations of the awful actualities on the scene of conflict, where Canadians—our fellow citizens and neighbours—are suffering, struggling, bleeding, dying, while we buy and sell, play and dance, and hunt pleasures as if we had no interest in the war, no duty arising out of our relations to the struggle, or to our own men who are in it to the death.

The people are playing the game of gain and pleasure; the government is playing the game of politics—both "fiddling while Rome is burning."

RIGHT OR WRONG.

The following paragraph appears in the Winnipeg Tribune, (classified independent), in comment on the McLeod-Tellier report of the investigation of Hon. Robert Rogers, which declared him guilty of falsehood and grave misdemeanour in connection with pulic works contracts in Manitoba:

> "In the political history of Canada there is not anything which quite equals in crude scandalousness the McLeod-Tellier investigation. If this finding is to stand, and if it is to be operative with Sir Robert Borden, as it apparently is, then Justice Galt should be impeached. If Justice Galt is not to be impeached Sir Ezekiel McLeod and Justice Tellier should be ignominously removed from the bench, or have their pensions withdrawn, and Hon. Mr. Rogers should be forced to leave the Government.

This is one view of the situation; another is furnished by the Kingston Standard, rabidly partizan, which says:

> "Hon. Robert Rogers' vindication is so complete that it should forever silence those Liberals who have spent thousands and thousands of dollars to "get" Mr. Rogers, but without success."

Unfortunately the vindication of the "Hon. 'Bob,' is too "complete" to be respected. No one familiar with the history of recent and current politics will, even with the most "complete vinmdication" believe that in the case of Mr. Rogers there was no fire where there had been so much smoke; that he is the stainless, Simon-pure, patriotic politician that the McLeod-ellier whitewash makes him. These investigators of a brother judge's findings, laid on the whitewash too thickly. Hon. Mr. Rogers amy not be so black as he is painted. Neither is the devil, perhaps, but it is preposterous to think that a judge in good standing, a judge appointed by a Conservative government on the recommendation of Mr. Rogers, himself, could so far forget himself, so far disgrace his office, as to make an idiotic and one-sided finding, that had no foundation in evidence or fact, or in inference. Given similar conditions, given the demand of the "Master of the Administration" that preparatory to a general election he should be white washed and purged of the crimes of which a royal judicial commissioner had found him guilty; given a pliant premier under the spell of the "bad man" of his cabinet; given compliant judges, and we can have any judge in the land made a monkey of.

The whole affair is to the discredit of Canada. We have always prided ourselves upon the high standing of our judiciary, but we have in this case a judge who is either so ignorant or vindicative to make a biassed and iniquitously unjust finding, that would not stand a moment's scrubeing justified, we have two judges willing to do the bidding of politicians, willing to prostitute their office to serve a petty, political purpose.

It is evident that either one jduge or two judges were unjust and incapable. Both sets of the rival investigators cannot be right, or both wrong. Somebody should be severely disciplined. It becomes the duty of Sir Robert Borden to take action in impeaching Mr. Justice Galt, who, if the finding of the two other judges is right, has both discredited Sir Robert Borden's appointment and disgraced the bench.

There are, too, to be many speeches. If in the past three years we had had as much work as words, our share in winnig the war would be largely done.

A man with a single idea is a crank. Yet a man with no ideas at all may be a social success.

A spinster says if there is truth in the axiom that man proposes and God disposes, many men fail in their duty.

Canada Must Prepare For The Emergency

Canada has boasted that she is the bread basket of the Empire. Yet in the hour of need she has failed—failed miserably—to play her self-established part. The Mother country has asked for bread and she has been given a gold-brick. Canada with her millions of acres of fertile lands, awaiting only the developing activity of her people, has failed to increase her acreage. She has failed the Empire, she has failed her Allies and she has failed herself, for never was there a better opportunity to serve the world; to earn fancy profits; to create private and national wealth; to help reduce taxation; than there was in the increase of agricultural production, with practically the whole world waiting to pay the price.

But while the war lasts and the demand for food stuffs continues there is little to be gained in regrets. The needs of the Allies in 1918 promise to be even greater than they were during 1917. In England, they began in January and are preparing 3,000,000 additional acres. There they have a capable executive as Minister of Agriculture.

In Canada, we are doing nothing nationally. Our Minister of Agriculture has proved a failure. He is the victim of a system that fills Cabinet positions with successful politicians, instead of with successful executives. He is such a superior type of man personally, that it pains us to be compelled to draw attention to his weakness as an administrator. But the situation is urgent. The grain is needed. The revenue is needed.

We want, and can get, 5,000,000 more acres under cultivation this autumn for the 1918 crops. A new Minister of Agriculture must be got at once. The Premier must not wait for a reorganized Government. The country will support him in any good appointment he will make. There is not a day to be lost. Let it not be said next summer that we have again failed, in our national and world duty, by procrastination.

The Minister of Agriculture need not be a trained agriculturalist. In Ontario we find Hon. Mr. Hearst as director of agriculture, has done more in the short time he has held the office than the well-intentioned, but helpless political minister at Ottawa during his whole term. — Financial Post.

Mr. Frank McKeen of Barrie Has Been Appointed—Machinery Is On the Way

Mr. Frank W. McKeen, who for the past two years and a half has been superintendent of the shoe factory of Underhill's Limited of Barrie, Ontario, has been appointed superintendent of the new shoe factory of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Company, and will enter upon his new duties next week. Mr. McKeen is a practical, experienced shoemaker with twenty years' insight into the work. He learned the business with his father in Quebec and has a thorough acquaintance with every branch of the work.

Installing Machinery.

The United Shoe Machinery Company of Montreal, will in a few days commence the installation of all the latest machinery for the manufacture of men's, boys' and youths' medium and high grade staple shoes. The initial output will be in the neighbourhood of four hundred pairs a day. The firm will employ a large number of hands at the outset. When the manufacture of shoes is under way, Peterborough will have the only shoe factory between Toronto and Montreal, with the exception of the Weston Shoe Company of Campbellford.

MARRIAGE MAY BE OFFENCE

May Prosecute Men Marrying to Escape Draft—Wives Accessories.

WASHINGTON, August 2.—Provost Marshal General Crowder has issued a ruling that men who have married since July 20, the date of the army draft lottery, and who present exemption claims indicating that the marriage took place solely to evade the draft, render themselves liable to prosecution under the Selective Draft Act.

Wives who have married solely to help their husbands escape service are also subject to prosecution, according to this ruling.

THE WILL OF A NATION

(By CAPT. ROWE)

The "Will of a Nation" is a phrase very commonly used, yet a nation's will is difficult to define and often peculiarly hard to discover. Being, as it is, a combination of differing wills, it scarcely exists in a definite form in normal times. To a large extent it is shaped by the press, but the press is dependent on the real article for its material. If it moulds into shape material of which there is a deficiency it must sooner or later abandon the project and work on other that is more plentiful.

But these are not normal times and the will of the British nation, to begin at home, was never more coherent or definite than it is at the present moment. The Briton is slow to anger and can hardly ever be accused of rapid thought, but his bull-dog qualities are by no means imaginary; he is tenacious in action and having once made up his mind clings disturbingly to his convictions. The British character has never been honoured with such flattery as it has received during the last two years from Germany. The increasing fear and hatred of England which the rulers of that country have expressed and encouraged constitute so complete an acknowledgment of the qualities named that it is difficult for a Briton to resist altogether the temptations of vanity.

The decision to which the people of Great Britain have come, with an unusual but unmistakably unanimity, is characteristic.

Germany as at present governed cannot be trusted, therefore, to use the bull-dog metaphor, teeth in there must be no let-go. It sounds very simple and perhaps brutal reasoning, yet beneath it lies a conviction, the soundness of which grows increasingly evident. It is that since the ultimate future cannot be foreseen the immediate future must be made good.

Admittedly Great Britain has laid herself open to a very easy form of verbal attack. She went into the war declaring that she fought on principle and not for gain. "Give us peace" cries Germany, "and we will satisfy your principle which we heartily accept. If you don't, it will prove that you were lying and that you fight for gain." It cannot be denied that this is a plausible argument, and it is directed almost exclusively against Great Britain, the only one of her enemies whom Germany has not succeeded in robbing. No doubt Germany as a whole, believes that this arch-enemy, as she declares her to be, is self-seeking, and perhaps only Great Britain herself is fully conscious that it is not so. In any case the nation has made up its mind, rightly or wrongly but with sincerity, that nothing can happen which makes for security until Germany is forced to our knees. Until then accusations, however plausible, can only be disregarded and left for time to disprove. The business in hand is TO MAKE CERTAIN. The nation has willed this more unitedly than it has willed anything in its history.

What then of the will of Germany? The will of her present rulers is manifest. They are undoubtedly shocked by the discovery that their ambitious schemes are proving impossible of achievement, but there is no sign that they have given up these schemes permanently. That they may pursue them in the future two things are clearly necessary. (1) They must lull Europe into quiescence and their enemies into the careless sleep that was their portion before the war. (2) They must remain in power and hold their own people in subjection. Now there is good reason to suppose that they will accomplish neither of these necessary aims. In both cases it will be the popular will that must cause their undoing.

They will never again lull Europe to sleep for the obvious reason that all nations have wakened up to realities that were no more than dreams to them in the past. The meaning and the stupendous folly of war have become terribly apparent. Diplomacy, carried on with the threat of war as its essential weapon, has been the great game of governments while the peoples have been careless spectators, hardly even watching the play. It will be strange if this state of things is permitted in the future without limitations on a freedom of action that has proved itself so dangerous. It will be strange above all if this tyrannical freedom is left uncontrolled in Germany whose rulers have directly caused the misery of their own people as well as the suffering of other nations.

The will of the German nation has not yet made itself felt. Public opinion in Germany is so carefully and crushingly manipulated that it is hard to discover what the will is and what form it will ultimately assume. Nevertheless there are signs that it exists and that it is slowly gathering a momentum which sooner or later must roll from its path the despotic force that seeks to direct its movement. The will of the German people, as judged by their press and by captured correspondence, is still seeking, yet is gaining every day, in coherance. It would not be fair to say that it is definitely opposed to the continuance of the war for, though the war has caused great suffering to the inhabitants of Germany and reduced many to a state of passionate misery, the bulk of the people see no reasonable choice before them. They believe that they must fight on or accept ruin. Yet side by side with this are growing evidences of a determination to build a new future, in which the will of the nation shall be paramount. The rulers of Germany have not only opened the eyes of their present enemies, but the eyes of those whom they rule, if in less degree. In this lies the hope of Europe. With the old Germany no other peace is possible than a peace secured by victory. Even such a peace may scarcely be stable unless the new Germany which is in embryo springs into quickened life. By the wills of the nations themselves the future will be framed and, not least among them perhaps, the new and true will of the German people.

Weekly Report On Farm Conditions

Summary of Weekly Crop Reports Furnished by the District Representatives

Following is a summary of weekly crop reports made by District Representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Some fields of winter wheat and rye have been cut, and are yielding well. Spring wheat is also promising a good yield, and like all the spring grains, will have plenty of straw. The midge has been doing injury to the growing wheat in a few of the counties in the western half of the Province, more especially in Welland and Haldimand, the damage to the crop ranging from 5 to 25 per per cent. in any one district. Barley is ripening rapidly, and will give a high yield. Oats are also doing well. Peas at present are looking better than for years, but the hot, dry weather will be their testing time. In the heavy bean raising county of Kent that crop is likely to turn out well.

The week of clear sunshine has been ideal for haying. Both clover and timothy have been got in under ideal conditions, and will be of much better quality than last year's cut. Prospects for clover seed are said to be promising.

Roots, where properly cultivated, are looking fine, and all classes give promise of at least an average yield. Early potatoes are doing well, but blight is threatening some of the later varieties.

Sour cherries have yielded well, and raspberries are plentiful.

Early field tomatoes are now on the market. The plants have made vigorous growth.

Live Stock.—Live stock, especially young animals are reported to be in excellent condition. There has been a decline in values running about 75c. per cwt. in the case of market cattle. The week of intense heat has told upon pastures, and the flow of milk has slowed up, although it is now better than the average for the time of year. The fly is becoming very tormenting to cattle.

Hogs have slightly decreased in price; marketing is about as usual.

Farm Labour.—The frequent rains of the latter part of spring and early summer, which delayed the planting of corn, roots, and other late field crops, and prevented hay cutting at the normal period, have been followed by a week or more of torrid weather which is fast hastening the ripening of grain and is causing the overlapping of the haying and harvesting seasons to such an extent that farmers are almost in despair of securing adequate help to get in the crops at the right time and in the best condition. Much disappointment is being expressed at the right time and in the best condition. Much disappointment is being expressed at the slow response so far of men from the towns and cities to give the help that was expected on the farms during vacation. In Halton women are working in the fields, driving horses on rakes and mowers, and also on corn cultivators.

The German Losses In Flanders Are Enormous

succeeded in penetrating the British positions along a front of some 300 yards. The British turned an intense artillery fire on these positions, and at nine o'clock at night delivered a counter-attack.

Perry Robinson, in a despatch to the Times, points out that the main result of Tuesday's fighting was the breaking out of the Ypres salient and the seizure of Pilkem Ridge, also the western face of the plateau on Zennebeke Ridge. He pays a high tribute to the French. A favorite type of German stronghold, a structure of concrete, made in one piece, called a "Pillbox" is used for machine-gun posts, and several together for redoubts. These were thrown upside down by the bombardment, many of them being still filled with their garrisons of twenty or thirty men, dead. The total wounded was comparatively few. Nearly all got back before evening, so admirable was the Red Cross service. Some guns were captured and much ammunition, including a lot of German gas shells of the latest variety which are now being shot back at them. There are a large number of weedy young men of the class of 1918 among the prisoners.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

Thursday evening's report from headquarters in France reads:

"In the course of the morning and again this afternoon the enemy made a series of violent, but unsuccessful attempts to recover the ground lost by him northeast of Ypres.

"Regardless of the increasing severity of his losses, strong bodies of his troops repeatedly attacked our position from the Ypres-Roulers railway to St. Julien. In every case his advancing lines were broken up and dispersed by our artillery barrage or repelled by the steady fire of our infantry.

"Parties of our troops raided enemy trenches last night northeast of Gouseacourt and inflicted many casualties."

Squabs should be trussed before broiling, so that they can be served neatly on a square of toast.

FEELS BETTER NOW THAN IN 28 YEARS

"My Friends Congratulate Me On My Improvement on Tanlac" Says Hooper

"I have had a long hard struggle with ill health, but by the help of Tanlac I have overcome all my troubles and although I'm now fifty-six I am actually feeling better than I have since I was twenty-five years old." This interesting and remarkable statement was made by Sam Hooper, owner and operator of a blacksmith shop at 9 Brock avenue, Toronto, a few days ago. Mr. Hooper has been blacksmithing in Toronto for many years, is a member of both the Ancient and Independent Orders of Foresters, also of the Odd Fellows, and is a man of wide acquaintance and many staunch friends.

"For the past four or five years now," he continued, "I have suffered from nervousness and a general rundown condition, and although I tried numbers of different medicines I kept getting worse all the time. During the past year I fell off from one hundred and ninety-eight pounds to one hundred and sixty-six, and my friends were always commenting on how bad I looked. During the week just before I started on Tanlac I lost five pounds in weight, I was going down so fast I became alarmed about my condition. I just seemed to have a general break-down and wasn't worth a cent so far as doing my work was concerned. I would eat fairly hearty, but somehow my food didn't agree with me and gave me no strength or nourishment. The gas formed by my sour, undigested food would bloat me up and cause terrible pains all through my sides and stomach. It hurt so bad one time I thought sure I had appendicitis and got so uneasy that I went and had an examination before I could be satisfied about it. I couldn't sleep and dreaded for night to come because I knew I would just lay awake in my nervousness and misery and get up in the morning feeling worse than ever. I was so weak and worn out I couldn't do a thing but lay around, just had to give up all active work and hire all my shop work done. Nobody will ever know how I suffered, because I can't describe it. I couldn't find out what was wrong with me, and couldn't get anything to do me any good.

"My friend Harvey Hamilton told me how Tanlac had helped him and advised me to try it. Well, he couldn't have done me a greater kindness, for it has made me over again, almost. I began feeling better before I had finished half of my first bottle, and I have just been mending right along ever since. I can hardly tell I ever had stomach trouble now and am relieved of the gas and indigestion almost entirely. My nerves are stronger and more steady, I sleep good and my friends instead of talking about how bad I look are congratulating me on my wonderful improvement. It has helped me wonderfully already, is still helping me, and I'm glad to tell about it."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by The Warne Drug Co., Limited.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 3, 1917.

Editor, Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I noticed in last night's paper that Mr. Jas. R. Runnett draws attention to a statement which appeared in the Review to the effect that I would support the Conscription Bill even if I had to support Borden. This, I may say, was an absolutely unauthorized statement for which I accept no responsibility whatever.

I do not know whether Mr. Runnett is a Conservative or Liberal, but I am most positively a Liberal and cannot express my opinion of the Borden Government's inaction without becoming abusive. I feel, however, that whatever may have been his motive, Sir Robert Borden did a good piece of work when, with the assistance of a good many Liberals, he put through the Conscription Bill. Anyone who has been close to recruiting knows that the voluntary system is unfair and has exhausted itself. Unless we intend to "leave the boys in the trenches to work out their own salvation," we must put this bill into operation without delay.

Whatever others may do I for one am not afraid to state my position. I am a Liberal who believes in conscription. I do not believe either party is strong enough to enforce conscription, so I believe we should have a National Government, which will organize all our resources. I believe, too, that the sooner the present Government is out and a new one is in its place, the better for the country. In my humble opinion the Liberals should offer to form a National Government for the period of the war, if returned to power. This is where I stand.

Yours truly,
Joseph Wearing.

RESTRICTIONS ON TRAVEL.

Many Women in England Would Like to Come to Canada.

LONDON, August 2.—Considerable exasperation undoubtedly is manifested at inabilty to travel from England to Canada. We hear of ladies anxious to undertake the journey to get married. Many believe the lack of passports is at the bottom of this inability, whereas the truth is the restriction is in accordance with Imperial regulations which forbid ocean travelling for women and children except under special conditions, and facilities granting these special conditions are extremely limited, especially during the summer. The Canadian High Commissioner's Office has this matter constantly under review, but it is manifestly impossible to override the Imperial regulations, even if the regulations were not framed in the best interests of those affected.

Queen Served Poor Subjects In East London

Amusing Incidents when Her Majesty Visited a Communal Kitchen.

The Queen, with Princess Mary and Princess Christian, recently served dinners to the poor of East London at the communal kitchen opened earlier in the day by Princess Christian. The kitchen, which has been given by Herts, Philatelic Society, has been established at Stepney Central Hall. Upon Her Majesty's arrival a little girl, eleven years of age, whose mother was killed in the air raid, presented a bouquet to the Queen.

Later there was an unrehearsed presentation. A woman, after asking for 2d. worth of soup, pushed forward her little boy and asked the Queen to accept three roses which he carried. The Queen, taking the flowers, asked where they were grown, and the child replied: "In our back yard. I've been keeping them for you." The Queen, thanking the child, put the roses in her belt, and then asked the woman's name and address.

"Well, my dear, and what can I get for you?" Her Majesty asked one little ragged mite. "Twopenn'orth of ham, miss, please," came the unexpected reply, which caused the Queen to laugh heartily as she passed the order along to Princess Mary. The little girl had failed to bring a plate. "No plate?" said the Queen. "How are you going to take the ham home?" 'Oh, I can in this paper," replied the child, passing up an envelope.

There was then some little difficulty in placing the meat, of which there was a generous quantity, inside the small envelope. For a moment the Queen hesitated. There was no fork at hand to lift the ham from the plate. Noticing the spike file on which the tickets were placed, Her Majesty, removing the checks, utilized the spike file and transferred the meat to the envelope, amid much laughter.

"Bring a plate the next time, dear," Her Majesty advised the child.

"We look to the resources of Canada and to the indomitable energy of Canadians for an answer that will shatter Germany's threat of starvation," says Baron Rhonda, Food Controller of Great Britain, in a message to Hon. W. J. Hanna, Food Controller of Canada.

DOWNING STREET SECRETS.

Let Out of Bag by Mrs. Lloyd George.

Mrs. Lloyd George gave away some of the secrets of Downing street, when, presiding at a recent lecture on domestic labour-saving at the Economy Exhibition, she said:

"When we went to 11 Downing street (the official residence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer), nine years ago we found a big scullery there with not a window, not a gleam of light, nr ventilation of any sort or kind.

"It took me some little time before I could persuade the Board of Works to build me a nice little scullery. I did not rest till I got it. Now there is a nice little complete scullery with a glass roof and a window which opens out into the garden.

"Perhaps you would not believe me if I told you that when Mr. Asquith came to 10 Downing street nine years ago there was not a single bathroom in the place. I think it has improved a little since we have been there."

Organization Plans Are Being Completed

Great Win-the-War Convention Busy To-day

Special to the Examiner.

TORONTO, Aug. 3.— Delegates to the great Win-the-war Convention being held at the Arena, assembled this morning at 10:30, and are spending much time in arranging organization plans. In another part of the building the women planned for their mass meeting, to be held to-night, and drafted the resolution to be presented. The speakers at to-night's mass meeting will be Mrs. H. P. Parsons, of Cochrane; Miss Temple Armstrong, of Port Rowan; Mrs. L. S. A. Hamilton, Lieut. Machell, Sergt. Knight and Mr. Godfrey. All this afternoon will be spent in completing the organization of Win-the-war Campaign.

Submerged And Drowned Thirty-Eight Men

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The German submarine which sank the British steamer, Belgian Prince, smashed all the lifeboats on that vessel, destroyed all life belts, and then, after taking the crew aboard, suddenly submerged, drowning 38 men. Thomas Bowman, chief engineer of the vessel, and a survivor, told the story to-day at a British hospital.

Opportunity For Young Men Who Desire To Fly

Local Board Will Supply Forms and Give Information

A meeting was held last night of the local Board of the Aero Club of Canada, which is composed of Messrs. G. H. Logie, James Lynch, Roland Denne and C. G. Graham. At last night's meeting Mr. Logie was appointed chairman and Mr. C. G. Graham, secretary.

Those who have application blanks for enlistment are asked to fill them in and leave them with Mr. Graham at the Empress Hotel, when they will have immediate attention.

There is a supply of forms on hand and any young man desirous of going into the flying service can get information and blanks from any of the above committee.

Five Brothers Meet At A Family Re-union

Five brothers, the sons of the late Richard Record Ashburnham, are having a reunion in the city. Those from outside are Rice from Caledonia, Mich., Will from East St. Louis, Ill., and John of Port Hope, who with Richard and George of this city make the five. It is the first time they have been together in thirty years. Rice who left Peterborough many years ago still thinks this is one of the finest small cities he ever saw; greatly improved and advanced since he first left its borders. On each previous occasion to the city he religiously visited a spot on the old Roger's raceway, where he almost lost his life, but this time the place has been obliterated on account of its being filled in. Mr. Record is making his headquarters at the place of business of his brother, Mr. George Record on Simcoe street, and would like if any of his old friends and acquaintances would 'phone him or drop around.

Sergt. Kidd's Upset In Pigeon Creek A Holiday Incident

While fishing on Pigeon Creek yesterday afternoon, Police Sergeant Kidd, who is on holiday leave, experienced the discomfortable consequences of an upset. He was accompanied by a trustful neighbour, Mr John Holmes, and the little party of two looked forward expectantly to an afternoon of pleasure and of fish. And from a special report brought in by native runners they were disappointed on both counts. A strong wind was blowing across the creek in one of its wide expansions, and well out from shore the canoe turned over, dampening its occupants and their outing The most acceptable of several explanations offered ascribes the upset to the sudden attack of big fish—they always are—at the trawling bait, but whatever the cause, Sergeant Kidd was tumbled into the element, in which he is as secure and confident as on dry land. Both men finally reached shore, where they performed a Robinson Crusoe stunt of drying their apparel. Meanwhile they had lost their fishing tackle, lunches, cushions and other baggage, some of which they salvaged. Sergt. Kidd persisted in diving for a fishing pole, which he finally rescued. When they arrived it was not at the end of a perfect day, not by any means. Their clothes were only half-dried, the fish they had prepared for were still unbooked, and in every respect it was a dissatisfactory afternoon.

MILITARY NEWS

its inauguration simply a local arrangement for carrying on the training in camp of overseas companies of the C.D.F.

TORONTO, Aug. 3.—Tre demobilisation of the staffs of the Canadian Defence Force is the next move in military circles, to be carried out from the Department of Militia at Ottawa. According to information received by all the C.D.F. staffs of the militia regiments in the city yesterday, this step will take place almost immediately, and an attempt is to be ade to provide employment for a portion of the officers affected by establishing one central battalion in each military district, to which a number of the C.D.F. officers will be attached for the purpose of training the men already enlisted. While recruiting for the Canadian Defence Force was called off some time ago, the staffs of each of the local regiments were retained and were put in charge of the present recruiting system, which has resulted in each of the regiments going out individually in an effort to sign on men for their overseas companies. These men, as recruiters, have been sent to Camp Borden.

KINGSTON, Aug. 2.—In Military District No. 3 during the last two weeks of July, 163 recruits enlisted. The Signaling Training Depot at Ottawa secured the largest number.

VIGOROUS SPEECHES AT OPENING OF WIN-THE-WAR CONVENTION

"There should be only one party in Canada: a party determined to win the war and to mobilize the full strength of the country, in men, in money and in resources."—Premier Sir William Hearst.

"We have staked our future on the issue of this war, and we have to put all our organized and disciplined energy in to guarantee our own future."— Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., M.P.P.

"The people of this country should concentrate all their efforts for the next 12 or 24 months on the war, to the exclusion of everything else."—Mr. Hugh Guthrie, M.P.

Toronto, Aug. 3.-A grim grip, as of people who seemed to fear that someone near and dear would have to pay a pending, cruel price from an implacable foe, held the six thousand men and women who assembled last evening at the Arena to reiterate for the hundredth weary time, the call of their inner souls for conscription to reinforce Canadian men where alone Canada can help to win the war in deed and fact. They had come at the invitation of the "Win-the-war Convention." It did the need a second glance to know that the greater part of those present had come because they had relatives at the front. Only in Toronto, perhaps throughout the wide Dominion, could so many of this noble blood relationship be found. Hundreds of war veterans—veterans under thirty, most of them—were there also as predecessors and direct representatives of the men in the trenches. These were aspects of the-proud price the "loyal city" is paying for its imperishable tradition of glory.

Great and Small There.

Mr. Hugh Guthrie, M.P., Mr. N. W. Rowell and Sir William Hearst, Premier of the Province, were the chief speakers, though some of the most striking things of the convention were said by more modest men who, "no orator as Brutus is," were like the grander Anthony, "plain, blunt men, that do love their friend"—returned soldiers, whose remarks took up the first part of an eventful evening.

There was little decoration of the vast auditorium. But there was a deep impressiveness in the tier above tier of maimed and broken veterans, of women dressed in mourning and of earnest, sober citizens, who came because they realized what was at stake if Canada does not stil further aid in winning the war. It was the realization of this sobering thought which made the insistence of the speakers so cordially responded to in the Arena. The third anniversary of the war conveyed to them something more than to the mass.

Returned Men's Concert.

At intervals several returned men who had lost limbs were carried in, amid the cheers of the gathering. The band of the Queen Own Rifles gave a concert for an hour before the opening of the meeting.

Hon. Dr. Pyne, Hon. W. D. McPherson, Col. Leonard (St. Catharines), Major Canon Dixon, Rev. Mr. J. O. Miller, A. E. Ames, F. B. Fetherstonhaugh, Ald. Donald Macgregor, the Convention Committee along with the Provincial leaders of the Liberal and Conservative parties, were on the platform.

Under their commanding officer, Lt.-Col. Wilson, the veterans formed at their club house, Carlton and Sherbourne streets, and marched to the Arena by way of Carlton street, Yonge street and Shuter street. They were greeted with loud applause as they entered the Arena.

LAST ORDER GIVEN WAS FOR 100,000 RIFLES.

Ottawa, July 31.—A return given to the Commons in reply to a motion by J. G. Turriff, of Assiniboia, states that the last order given by the Government to the Ross Rifle Company was for 100,000 rifles. It was granted on February 17, 1916, and it was cancelled when only 16,170 weapons had been delivered. The return also says that no recommendation was received by the Government from the British Army Council that existing Canadian facilities be utilized for the manufacture of the new and improved Lee-Enfield rifle.

DOUBTS U-BOATS CAN WIN.

Austrian Admiral Says They Are Merely an Aid in War.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 1.—Vice Admiral Maximilian Njegovan, Commander of the Austrian fleet, in an interview given to the Neue Freie Presse, said he did not believe that submarines would bring about a decision in the war. He said:

"At present the U-boats are much spoken of as making England, Austria's principle enemy, uncomfortable, but they merely are a means toward victory. It would be a mistake to believe from the experiences of this war that big ships are useless, but for us the essential type is that of light cruisers.

"If we had a great fleet, the war with Italy would have been finished long ago. Indeed, the war would never have been possible."

Society Notes

Mrs. Spendit, the well-known society leader, has applied for a divorce on the grounds of her husband's cruelty to her in telling her her waist is too small, and the next day telling her, her waste is too large. Mr. Spendit's defence is that his wife's waist is so small that she had not enough breath to push through the crowd to get one of the preserving pans which Paskin's Grocery is selling this week at such marvellously low prices.

Mr. Delaware, the famous potato grower paid a visit to town this week for the purpose of obtaining a further supply of Paris Green at A. W. Paskin's store, as he says it is the best to be got and only costs 70c a pound.

Mrs. Goodun is giving a garden party on Monday at her cottage on the little lake, and has laid in an extra supply of the dainty marshmallow and Jam-Jam cakes which were so appreciated last time. All her friends were astonished when she told them she only paid 20c. a lb. for them at Paskin's, on the corner of Hunter and Aylmer. She hopes the girls won't make themselves ill by eating too many, and recommends the young men to bring a can of Health Salts, which can be obtained at the same store for 12c.

Mrs. Justaspliced says she is going to have some of Paskin's cooked meat for dinner on Sunday, as that gives her more time to sit on Alyy's knee.

A. W. Paskins, Cash Grocer, Corner of Hunter and Aylmer, are offering special values on Saturday in all lines Their 'phone No. is 317.

Conscription Is Discussed In Senate

Senator Choquette Maintains French Canadians Have Not Been Given a Chance

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—Senator Claude Macdonell was introduced to-day by Sir James Lougheed and Senator Mason; Senator Clive Pringle was introduced by Sir James Lougheed and Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

The debate on the military service measure was resumed by Senator Choquette. He said that the most powerful motive that influenced him against conscription was the pledge that the Prime Minister had given to the Canadian people that there would be no conscription. The pledge had been given on the floor of the House, and he was humiliated for his country that the pledge should have been broken. He was proud that Sir Wilfrid had considered it his duty to hold the Government to that pledge.

Though the English might be willing to give their last man and their last dollar to the cause he did not believe they realized what national bankruptcy meant, and to the Province of Quebec the idea was absurd.

The Province of Quebec was aainst conscription and was making a proper protest against it. It said: "Show us that the majority of the country are against us and we will submit. Let the electors decide, and we will submit to the nefarious conscription."

The Province of Quebec was against be scared into supporting conscription by exaggeration of the German menace. "If anyone feels any anxiety about Mr. Flavelle's bacon or Mr. Cochrane's mines or Sir Herbert Ames' shoe factories, such are not to be found in Quebec."

Senator Choquette said that at the time of the first enlistment for Valcartier, French enlistment had been discouraged by the English officers. French officers had been insulted there. General Lessard and Col. Landry had been set aside. When Sir Wilfrid went on the recruiting platform the English press said that he was seeking votes, not men. Proper appeals by the authorities would have got not 25,000, but 125,000 French-Canadians from Quebec in the opening months of the war. To-day proper appeals to the French-Canadians would get 50,000 men within a few weeks. He believed that it would be better for the allies if the one hundred thousand men it was proposed to take were kept in Canada producing food.

Senator Birrol of Nova Scotia held that the development of events had rendered compulsory service essential. In many parts of the country the people had not the opportunity of realizing the seriousness of the situation, and would vote against conscription, though if aware of the true conditions at the front would vote otherwise.

Senators Power, Legris, Tessier and Lavergne also spoke opposing the bill and Senators L'Esperance Bourque, Robertson and McLennan supported it.

Sir James Lougheed said there was a desire to complete the debate on Friday, and he therefore proposed that the Senate should meet an hour earlier.

Senator Landry adjourned the debate.

60 PER CENT. OF THE 1,500 MEN EXAMINED FOR THE ARMY HERE IN DAY PASS PHYSICAL TEST

Marked Improvement in the Returns is Pleasing to Officials —Fewer Exemption Claims Recorded—Districts Where Native-born Population is Large Make Encouraging Progress.

PHYSICIANS TOO STRICT

NEW YORK, August 4.—Twenty boards in local exemption districts in New York Thursday examined nearly fifteen hundred men for the first national army. Reports made showed that there had been a big gain over the first few days, both in the number to pass the physical examinations and in the reduction of those claiming exemptions.

Federal officials in charge of the draft, greatly pleased by the improvement in New York, said they believed fully sixty per cent. of the total examined had passed the physical examination. Returns from many districts showed that the number ranged from about forty per cent. to as high as eighty per cent.

MARKED IMPROVEMENT SHOWN.

With the examinations beginning in districts where there are more American born citizens, there was a marked improvement in the reports The number qualifying for physical fitness was far grater than in the east side sections, where the first tests were made, and fewer claimed exemption.

Roscoe S. Conkling, representing the Adjutant General in directing the draft here, made an inspection of twenty district headquarters between Fifteenth and Seventeenth streets and covering both the east and west sides. The average for the twenty districts showed seventy-six per cent. had passed the physical test. Ten of the twenty districts reported more than eighty per cent. of the total number examined had possessed the physical requirements. All excepting four of the twenty districts were making examinations under the five day waiver agreement.

Encouraging reports reached the headquarters, in the State Arsenal, from many sections. One young man who said his brother had been rejected twice by recruiting officers asked the draft managers if there s not some way of appealing from the decisions of local boards. He d his brother feared he would be rejected for physical defects and was xious to make a test on appeal to prove he was capable of serving in the army. He was told the government itself would appeal cases where it was thought desirable.

PHYSICIANS TOO STRICT.

It was hinted that physicians in some districts had been too strict; that they were looking for physical defects instead of trying to find soldiers. Some of the examiners, it was learned, were told that where there was doubt to give the government the benefit and left army physicians decide the merits of cases in the second examination to be made when the draft army is called to camp. Even the slightest defects has been taken by some physicians in the first tests as disqualifying registrants. Some who have been rejected may be called back for further examination.

Any registrant who is even suspected of trying to deceive the physicians by posing as having physical defects will be passed through hereafter and made to prove his case before other physicians who have more time for the work. The physicians have been told they do not need to find absolutely perfect specimens in order to get soldiers.

When several aliens appeared before William Henkely, Jr., in District 119, at No. 239 East Eighteenth street, and said they wanted to fight Germany but could not because they never had made a move toward becoming citizens, they were told to go out and get their first papers and that their examinations would be held up until they returned. They went. Of the first twenty men examined in that district only six were rejected.

ACCEPT SIXTY-SEVEN OUT OF NINETY-TWO.

Sixty men were examined in four hours in District 110, in Public School No. 32, No. 357 West Thirty-fifth street. The total for the day was ninety-two, and sixty-seven were accepted. That is the largest percentage accepted so far. Exemption claims were filed by fifty-eight of those who passed the physical tests. Before taking their examinations nine declared themselves ready for service.

Jacob I. Wiener is chairman of that board, and the examining physicians are Dr. Frederick Griffith and Dr. Rush C. Bauman. Four night nurses from Bellevue, William Kelly, David J. O'Leary, Charles Murray and John Howell, have volunteered as aids.

A letter received by Mrs. William Duffy, of No. 384 West Seventeenth street, from her uncle, who is Sergeant Major William Kirkpatrick, serving with a Canadian regiment, was shown to Dr. Griffith. The letter was dated, "Somewhere in France," and follows:—

"Now that the U. S. A. has got into the game perhaps some of your boys will have to come. Do not feel to bad about it. It is a man's game, and for the cause of freedom and justice and any young man with the spirit will want to come in. To stop them will only mean the crushing of their best ambitions.

"We hope that it will be all over before the fall and there will be no need of America's big army, but we will welcome them like brothers if they get here.

"We are in a very beautiful part of the country. The roses are in bloom and the strawberries are getting ripe, but all the towns and villages are in ruins; there are no inhabitants in them. They were occupied by the Huns two months ago."

Mrs. Duffy's son Joseph was killed in action in France.

One of the best records made Thursday was in district 10, with headquarters in the Bronx County Court House. Of the first one hundred men examined seventy-five passed the physical test, and of that number only ten claimed exemption.

Cattle Market Remains Firm

Generally a Light Run of All Classes This Week—Hogs Advance

Receipts of all classes of stock were comparatively high throughout the week, though generally speaking there was enough in the butcher cattle class for all requirements. Early in the week there was some enquiry for choice quality heavy steers suitable for export to New York and Boston. Two or three loads of this class were bought for New York at top prices for the week at $12.20. There was a good demand all week for the choicest butcher cattle, and as the offerings in this class were very small, there was an advance of about 25 cents over the average prices for the week previous. The commoner quality cattle did not share in the advance, barely holding steady and with a tendency lower. Good butcher cows held firm and were slightly higher towards the end of the week. Canners and cutters, steady.

The stocker trade was generally slow, but for good, breedy steers there was a fair demand, and supplies light. Common stockers were not wanted.

Choice milkers and springers were in fair demand, but common not wanted and difficult to dispose of.

Calves were not too plentiful and generally were in a strong market all week.

Lambs were in very good demand, at steadily advancing prices all week, and closing about two dollars higher than last week.

Hogs are in strong market, with supplies very light against a keen demand. Prices advanced 50c to 75c for the week, the market closing good and strong.

Should Not Be Asked To Send Men To Front

Senator Landry Contends No Authority Exists To Call Of French Canadians

A PERSECUTED RACE

OTTAWA, August 4—The Senate yesterday afternoon carried Senator Lougheed's motion allowing Saturday sittings, with the proviso that this be not done except when specially desired.

Before the orders of the day were called, Senator Choquette presented a petition against conscription.

Senator Landry, Conservative, resumed the debate on con scription. He asked if the present act was better than the act it proposed to amend. Why bring in a measure which was the same as the law unless it was for the purpose of making the other stronger Under the Militia Act, he said, that it was asserted that Canadians could not be sent overseas for the defence of Canada. He reviewed the events at the outbreak of war and showed how Canadians were placed at the disposal of Britain for service overseas.

"This was done in compliance with the promises of our public men," he declared. "Our soldiers did more than their legal duty in leaving our shores to resist invasion. This is the view of the leading overseas statesmen."

He quoted Bonar Law as saying that the Dominion troops came of their own free will to defend the Empire.

HADN'T POWER TO RAISE TROOPS.

"Britain has not the power to raise a corporal's guard in Canada," he went on. "Yet Canada has sent overseas up to date 420,000 of her sons, perfectly equipped. Compulsion could not have been resorted to. They went over willingly, and now, against the promises of certain legislators, power is given by the bill now before us to reinforce our four divisions by 100,000 conscriped men.

"This Government wants to be clothed with an authority to which they have no right," he continued. "The bill is sugar-coated with the term 'seleceive conscription,' and they were asked to swallow it.

"Where is the necessity," he said, "to send 100,000 conscripted men when they are not actually needed" He gave figures to show that there are 50,000 men behind the lines and over 150,000 in England. "Before the expiration of this war, the United States will be able to send over ten times that number.

"Our Province is accused of having failed in its contribution. I deny this, and I maintain that the fault is not ours. The result is in telling married men that they could not go without the consent of their wives and families. The result was that the French people, who marry young, were kept out of the field."

He showed what he claimed to be the ridiculous action of the Government in hindering the appointment of French officers to command his fellow-countrymen. He showed how General Sir Sam Hughes had set aside French translations of military books of instruction.

A PERSECUTED RACE, HE SAYS.

He spoke of the number working in munitions factories, and urged that these ought to be counted as just an important part of Canada's contribution as the soldiers.

The Senator read letters to show that Col. Armand Lavergne had always stood ready to do his duty on a voluntary basis. "Day after day," he went on, "we are struggling against an ungenerous majority to preserve the tongue of our mother. Everybody has heard of the now famous regulation 17. I defy anybody to say that this infamous regulation was not concocted to kill the French language in Ontario. We are persecuted. We are abused by those who ask what we are now doing for the Empire. We are fighting for our liberties. Do not ask us to go to the front and leave our families to the mercies of those who want to kill the French language in Canada."

How Best To Can Beets, Tomatoes And Pears

TOMATOES.

Tomato butter—To five pounds of tomatoes allow two pounds of sugar, one and one-half pounds of apples, one-quarter of an ounce each of stick cinnamon and ginger, one-eighth of an ounce each of mace and whole cloves. Skin, remove hard portions at stem ends of tomatoes and cut in pieces. Pare and slice apples. Tie spices in cheesecloth bag. Add one pint of vinegar to mixture and boil all together for three hours, stirring frequently.

Tomato Preserves—To one pound of yellow pear tomatoes allow an equal amount of granulated sugar, two lemons and two ounces of preserved Canton ginger. Remove skins and stem ends and cut into quarters. Place in porcelain-lined kettle, add sugar, cover tight, and let stand over night. In the morning pour off syrup and boil until quite thick. Slice lemons and remove seeds. Add tomatoes, ginger and lemon to syrup and cook until tomatoes have clarified appearance, skimming as needed.

Sweet Pickle of Tomatoes—To one-half peck of firm green tomatoes allow five large white onions. Slice tomatoes and onions as even thickness. Place in stone crock alternately a layer of tomatoes and layer of onions, making layers a couple of inches thick and sprinkling with salt. Cover with plate, placing heavy weight on top and let stand over night. Drain and rinse with cold water in the morning. Again place in crock, sprinkling layers with one and one-half cups of brown sugar, one teaspoonful each of celery seed, mace, allspice, pounded cloves, and mustard seed, and one-half teaspoonful powdered cinnamon. Add sufficient vinegar to suit taste. Boil mixture until thick syrup forms; again place in crock and cover with linen cloth before placing on earthen lid.

BEETS.

Canned Beets—Select small tender red beets of an even size. Larger and older beets do not retain their color as well as the smaller. Wash and scrub thoroughly, taking care not to cut through skin or break roots. Blanch five or six minutes, plunge quickly into cold water, cut off roots, and with hands push off skin. Pack whole, getting as many as possible into a jar, and add a level teaspoonful of salt to each jar. Place pars in rack in boiler and fill to overflowing with boiling water. Adjust rubbers and sterile lids, but do not fasten latter securely. Put boiler on fire, pouring in sufficient warm water to come to the tops of the jars, and sterilize for an hour and a half after water reaches boiling point, having boiled tightly covered all the time. Remove jars one at a time, fasten lid securely, and store in a cool, dark place. Well canned beets will be a lighter color when removed from the sterilizer, but will grow brighter in color in a few days.

Beet Relish—Wash and cook beets until tender. Remove skins and when cold chop fine and to each cup of chopped beets allow three tablespoonsful of grated horseradish root, two tablespoonsful lemon juice, two teaspoonful powdered sugar, and one teaspoonful salt. Mix all together and bottle.

Pickled Beets and Horseradish.—Cook beets, remove skins, and chop fine. To each quart of chopped beets allow one cup of grated horseradish, one teaspoonful salt, and one-half teaspoonful paprika. Place mixture in saucepan and add sufficient scalding hot water to cover. Reheat to boiling point Sterlize jars and covers. Turn mixture into jars, adjust rubbers, and fasten covers securely.

PEARS.

Pear Honey—Pare and cut the fruit in small pieces. To each pound of the prepared fruit allow the grated rind of one lemon. Add lemon rind to pears and cook quickly until water evaporates; then strain through sieve. To each quart of the pulp allow four cups of sugar and the juice of two lemons. Cook all together rapidly until thick, stirring frequently. Turn into glasses and seal.

Sweet Pickled Pears—Pare three and one-half pounds of hard Duchess pears. For this quantity make a syrup of two and one-half pounds of sugar, one-half pint of vinegar, and one-half of a cup of water. If vinegar is very sour take more water and less vinegar. Add one-third of a cup of stick cinnamon, one tablespoonful cloves, and boil slowly for one-half hour. Press a couple of cloves in each pear and cook in the syrup until tender. Put pears in jars, reduce the syrup, and fill jars to overflowing. Adjust rubbers and covers.

Pear Chips—To four pounds of pears allow two pounds of sugar, two ounces ginger, and two lemons. Pare firm pears, quarter core and cut in small pieces. Add sugar and ginger to the pears and let stand over night. In the morning add lemon juice and the grated rind of lemon and cook slowly for three hours. Turn into glasses and seal.

Canned Pears—Pare the fruit, cut in halves, and remove cores, retaining the stems. Make a syrup of one cup of water and the juice of one lemon. Skim, add pears, and cook until tender. Sterilize jars and covers, and with silver fork place pears in jar. Fill jar to overflowing with hot syrup. Adjust rubbers and cover and tighten securely at once. Bartlett pears are the best for canning.

Military Styles Now Appear Among Others

Tub Frocks of Linen and White Georgette for Hot Weather

Novelties in Bathing Dresses

New York, Aug. 1, 1917.

It was only natural to expect that in these times of war, women's clothes would show the military influence, but somehow there have not been quite as many military styles on the whole as we would have thought. Here and there, however, sprinkled among the distinctly feminine frocks, some strictly military frocks appear. One of the most successful dresses on this order is the frock with the cape pictured here. Capes have been rampant ever since the spring and early summer, and now they are attached to dresses and have become quite an important feature of the fashions. Much of the charm of these capes is due to the pretty linings which they reveal when they are blown open by the wind. Patterned silks with flowers or dots are employed for the linings as well as plain colors in shades contrasting with the dress material. The dress in the sketch is of blue gabardine, with the popular coin-dotted foulard for the lining of the cape. The blue foulard with white or yellow dots is very effective for these linings.

Linen Tub Frocks.

Now that the warm weather is really and truly here the cool tub frock comes to take the place of heavier dresses. Linen is just as much a favorite this year as ever but the novelty about it is that it is combined with voile or organdy. The usual trimming is heavy stitching, braid or embroidery. Dresses entirely of linen, unrelieved of anything but perhaps a collar of organdy are also considered very smart.

In the white dresses for afternoon there is nothing daintier than those of Georgette crepe trimmed with white chalk beads or white silk soutache braid. In one rather elaborate model the waist was literally braided all over and the effect was very rich.

Pale pink Georgette trimmed in the same way with pink or white beads or pink braid is just as much favored as the white dresses. This particular shade of pale pink that is so popular at present makes charming evening dresses in soft satin. I have seen some with short sleeves of pink tulle to match, and others in which very fine creamy lace is used to make the waist or sleeves. Low-waisted models with soft clinging draperies at the sides are very new, but the normal waist line is still very strong and now there are even rumours of the Empire line coming back to favor again.

Novelties in bathing Dresses.

In our attempts to escape the mid-summer heat, many are taking refuge in the cooling waters of the ocean. Bathing dresses are consequently in great demand just now. To vary the eternal black satin and navy blue taffeta, some of the newest bathing costumes are of dark red jersey cloth. Dark red and blue rubberized cloth was a combination recently seen. Other novelties include black velvet suits and blue taffetas, trimmed with yellow or bright red sateen.

1 quart of water.

1½ teaspoonfuls salt.

Boil the samp in the salted water until tender. Drain and combine with the following sauce:

1 cup skim milk.

1 cup finely cut cheese.

2 tablespoonfuls flour.

1 teaspoonful salt, ¼ teaspoonful mustard, paprika, or other seasoning.

Mix the seasonings with the dry flour. Add enough milk to form into a smooth paste. Add the remainder of the milk, and heat in a stewpan, stirring constantly until thick. Add the cheese and stir until it is thoroughly melted.

Put a layer of the boiled samp in a baking dish or casserole. Add a layer of sauce and so on alternately until the material is all used. Sprinkle bread crumbs over the top layer of sauce and cook in a medium oven until the crumbs brown.

Hulled Corn.

Lye hominy or hulled corn (to give it both its Southern and its Northern name) may be used in place of coarse cracked corn in the preparation of this dish. If this product is used it is unnecessary to heat it until it is placed in the oven.

A richer sauce may be made, if desired, as follows:

2 teaspoonfuls butter.

2 tablespoonfuls flour.

1 cup milk.

1 cup finely cut cheese.

1 teaspoonful salt.

¼ teaspoonful mustard, pepper or paprika.

Melt the butter in a saucepan. Mix into it the flour and seasonings. Add the milk and heat, stirring constantly until the sauce becomes thick and smooth. Add the cheese and stir until it is melted.

German Foods Gets Rapidly Scarcer

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Reports from Germany show the steady disintegration of national confidence in the food supply. The Berlin trade unions visited Chancellor Michaelis, demanding more food, and received assurances which the Chancellor later had to admit could not be redeemed.

The workers then demanded that the representatives of the Miners' Union in the Prussian Food Controllers office memorialize the Chancellor, threatening immediate reduction in the coal output unless there was more food throughout the country.

Undersized potatoes are being dug extensively and sold at extravagant prices, injuring the crop prospects. Orders that consumers must not buy more than two pounds of fruit are being disregarded utterly, the people buying all they possibly can and frequently destroying it when it is removed the inspectors are liable to investigate.

The rich buy and hide all they can get, leaving the markets bare when the poor apply.

A Dusseldorf paper declares everybody is violating the regulations, even cities competing to obtain and store supplies; exporting districts prohibiting exportation and importing districts offering extra prices. The municipality of Bremen offered potato growers of Hanover an enormous price for new potatoes. The Hanover food authorities promptly threatened to prohibit exports unless the German offer be withdrawn.

Long ago the Food Controllers promised to increase the bread ration on August 15 and said there would be no reduction in meat rations until then. Now it is announced that the promise cannot be kept. The bread ration will remain stationary and the meat ration will be reduced sharply. Recently Saxony sharply reduced the meat ration causing intense Socialist dissatisfaction.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

"Good Morning" And "Sweetheart"

By SAMUEL E. BRANT

I had been running a locomotive for ten years, my runs always covering those hours when persons are free to mingle with one another sociably.

I was getting old—that is, what I thought was old in those days. I was thirty-four, and I didn't like the prospect before me. I'm a domestic man, and home is the only place for me when I'm not busy. I used to envy every snug cot I passed on my line, and my heart sank that I couldn't have one of my own. I had the money saved up, but if I got the house I had no woman to put into it, and what's a house without a woman? And, what's more, there's no use in a man's trying to make a home without a wife.

There was one place beside the road that I thought if I got a wife I would like to buy and fix it up to live in. It wasn't far from my starting point, and between runs I could spend my time there in comfort. Ever since I had gone on to the route it had been shut up. It was a two story cottage with a big porch. I thought how nice it would be to sit on the porch in summer and smoke my pipe while my wife was cleaning away things after getting supper.

But one morning when I passed the house I saw that my dream had been spoiled. Some one had taken my prospective home away from me. At any rate, a man was repairing it, another was painting it, and a third was mending the fence. A few days later when I went by I saw an old lady sitting on the porch.

One Sunday I saw a young woman fixing up the grounds. I concluded that she was the old lady's daughter and was at work in a store or an office, leaving Sunday her only day free for working about the house. When July came on she used to work about the place Saturday afternoons, but when September came she stopped this. I didn't see any man about the place and concluded the young woman was a spinster.

One day during the winter she was starting out from the house just as I was drawing near it. I didn't give her time to cross the track, for I wished to see her close by. When I reached her she was waiting for my train to pass, and I looked right down on her from the cab window. It happened that she looked up and saw an expression of admiration on my face. It was only a passing glimpse for either of us, but it was enough.

After that I saw the young woman quite often when I passed. I noticed that on my outward run on Sunday, when I passed her house about 11 o'clock, she was always on the porch with the old lady or working in the garden. But this was when the weather was warm. And I could see that she knew my train, and I fancied she was looking out for me.

When spring came on I noticed her out making a flower garden. When she had got the ground in order she put in some seed. In March the plants began to come up, and it looked to me as if they were going to make letters. And so they did. They were tulips and spelled "Good morning."

Now, there was no reason to suppose these words were intended for me any more than any one else, but somehow I couldn't get it out of my head that they were. At any rate, I just thought I'd risk making some sort of reply. There was an embankment not far from the house and in plain sight from it. One night I went out with some seeds and, making a bed on the side of this embankment, planted them. In a couple of weeks they were up and spelled "Sweetheart."

I took my train out one Sunday morning about the time my letter flowers got big enough to be read from the house. The girl was on the porch and as I passed threw me a kiss and ran into the house.

This was all the flower courting there was, for it was too slow. At any rate, it was too slow for me. I didn't want any more encouragement. The first spare time I had I got myself up in a clean boiled shirt and a decent suit of clothes and went to the house to get welcomed or snubbed, as the case might be, for there are girls who will be up to a lot of skylarking that won't stand to be approached except in the regular way.

The only weapon I took with me to make a fight with was a posy. I knew she was fond of flowers, and I relied on this considerably.

I went to the door and knocked. It was opened by the girl herself, and when she saw me she sort of shrieked and was going to shut it when I held my posy under her nose.

That did the business. She laughed and blushed and invited me in.

The old lady was there, and the girl introduced me to her, calling her mother. I began by saying a lot of nice things to the old lady, telling her what a cosy place she had and how often I had admired it.

Well, there isn't much more to tell. The rest of the courtship was very much like other courtships, I reckon, although ours was, I fancy, a little more delightful than any other. At the end of it I moved my traps to the house, my wife stopped work, and now I have a run that lets me off at 4 p. m., and about 5 I go into the gate for the rest of the day. The click of the latch is the signal for a lot of little toes to come out and climb all over me.

Few People Know This

Large doses of pills for the liver are not as efficient as small doses.

The big dose purges its way through the system fast, but does not cleanse thoroughly.

The small dose (if right) acts gently on the liver, and gives it just the slight help it needs to do its own work, and do it well.

Take one pill regularly, until you know you are all right.

The Truth About Corns

You have read much fiction about corns. Were that not so there would be no corns. All people would use Blue-jay.

Here is the truth, as stated by a chemist who spent 25 years on this corn problem. And as proved already on almost a billion corns:

"This invention—Blue-jay—makes corn troubles needless. It stops the pain instantly, and stops it forever. In 48 hours the whole corn disappears, save in rare cases which take a little longer."

That is the truth, and millions of people know it. Every month it is being proved on nearly two million corns.

So long as you doubt it you'll suffer. The day that you prove it will see your last corn-ache.

It costs so little—is so easy and quick and painless—that you owe yourself this proof. Try Blue-jay tonight.

PUBLIC OPINION

EDUCATION THE CURE.

(Southern Lumberman)

Peru is so anxious to impress the virtues of temperance upon the young that the National Congress has voted a substantial prize for the best textbook from which to teach, in the public schools of the country, the advantages of abstinence and the bad effects of alcohol. Leading publicists and educators are behind the movement. The widest latitude is given in the contest—both as to the size of the book and the manner of treatment of the subject, provided it is suitable for use in the primary grades.

It seems that both in Peru and Bolivia intemperance is a serious problem, especially in the mining districts. It is believed that the introduction of the subject in the public school curriculum will have an important effect.

BENEFITS OF RAW FOOD.

(Southern Lumberman)

A man in Edinburgh writes to his favourite paper to protest against cookery in time of war, arguing that the animal world has neither cookery nor indigestion. He says:

"A handful of raw meal, mixed with water, was once a Scottish soldier's ration; and I have heard of two boys at a village school whose daily 'piece' was a handful of oatmeal. This held under the pump, and made into a ball was an excellent meal, and both boys became Doctors of Divinity."

It would be interesting to know how much of the gloom of the Scotch conception of divinity is traceable to a restricted diet—or to what extent the natural stamina of the Scotch people has enabled them to thrive on both.

The raw food advocate continues: "Form the raw food habit. Learn to eat green stuff—onions, turnips, cabbage; and since sugar is scarce, eat berries at every meal."

In our country there is, or was some time ago, a raw food cult formed of persons who claim that uncooked food furnishes 'higher vibrations' than could be obtained from broiled steak and the like. We never understood just what that sort of thing means. But we do not recall that any of these disciples became doctors of divinity. On the contrary, some of them shed all of their old-time religion and most of their clothes.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAMES SUTHERLAND)

Luke 18th chap., 9th to 14th vs. The Pharisee and the Publican.

This is an old story spoken by Christ himself of a sect that prided themselves of being better than other men, and to all outward appearances were moral and charitable, devout attendants at the temple-worship, giving of their wealth to support the temple services, and living up to the Mosaic laws in tithe giving and public prayers. But God sees all our thoughts and acts and motives, and knows really what we are far better than we know ourselves. It is useless for us to put on a profession without having a real possession. A broken and a contrite heart God will not despise for he is gracious and merciful to the humble and lowly in heart, but self righteous and proud persons he despises.

It was to show up these hypocrite Pharisees that he spoke this parable, which was designed for th. conviction of those who trusted in themselves that they were righteous and despised others. They had confidence in themselves before God, and a high opinion of their own righteousness, depending upon the merit of it. Many are doing the same thing to-day. Two men went up to temple to pray, to offer up their personal devotions, as usual at that time. Christ is the way to God now, and to him we must look in all our approaches to God. The Pharisee went to the temple to pray; it was a public place. The character Christ gave of the Pharisees was that they did all their works to be seen of men. Hypocrites keep up outward works of a religious character to save or gain credit and reputation. The publican went to the temple because it was appointed to be a house of prayer for all people. God sees with what disposition and design we come to wait upon him in holy worship and service and will judge us accordingly. What the Pharisee says shows that he trusted to himself that he was righteous. We will suppose he was free from gross and scandalous sins, yet this was not all. He fasted twice in the week, partly as an act of temperance, partly of devotion, and he was charitable with his worldy estate. All this was very well, and commendable.

Miserable is the condition of those who come short of the righteousness of this Pharisee yet he was not accepted, and why not? His giving God thanks for this seems to be mere formality. He does not say by the grace of God I am what I am, but only, God, I thank thee. He dwells with delight upon this subject as if his business to the temple was to tell God how very good and righteous he was. He trusted to it as righteousness and pleaded it is hereby he had merited it, at the hand of God.

There is not one word of prayer in all that he said. He went up to the temple to pray but was full of himself and his own goodness; the favor and grace of God he did not think worth asking for. God, I thank thee, was but a word of course in a Pharisee's mouth as it must be in the mouth of every proud man who so uses it. He spoke of himself as if he had not been a sinner by nature or practice; he spoke of the publican as one for whom ther was no pardon. Let us beware of presenting words of proud devotions to the Lord; they are an insult to the Divine Majesty. The Pharisee despised others; he thought meanly of everyone else but himself. He speaks as if he was better than any. He thought meanly in particular of this poor publican. He knew that he was a publican, and, therefore, uncharitably concluded that he was an extortioner, unjust and all the rest that is evil. Could not he pray without reproaching his neighbour? There could be no plainer evidence of pride and malice. The publican's address to God was the reverse of the Pharisees: it was full of humility and repentance for sin, and desire toward God. His gesture when he addressed himself to his devotions expressed great seriousness and humility in a sense of his unworthiness. He kept at a distance. He lifted up his heart to God in holy desires but his iniquities were gone over his head as a heavy burden so that he was not able to look up. Ps. 40:12.

The dejection of his looks indicated the dejection of his mind, at the thought of sin. He smote upon his breast in holy indignation at himself for his sins. His prayer was short but to the purpose. God be merciful to me a sinner.

Blessed be God that we have this prayer upon record, as an answered prayer, and that we are sure that he who prayed it, went down to his house justified: words from the lips of Christ himself. So shall we be if we pray it as he did through Jesus Christ. God be merciful to me a sinner; the God of infinite mercy be merciful to me and to everyone who reads these words. He owns himself a sinner, by nature, by practice, guilty before God. He has no dependence but upon the mercy of God: upon that alone he relies; he disclaims all thought of merit and flies to mercy as his refuge. Nothing will save him but mercy.

We have seen how differently these two addressed themselves to God. It is now worth while to inquire how they sped. Our Lord Jesus to whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secret is hid, assures us that this poor penitent, and broken hearted publican went to his house justified rather than the other. The proud Pharisee goes away rejected of God: his sins are not pardoned, nor is he delivered from condemnation. He is not accepted as righteous in God's sight, because he is righteous in his own sight, but the Publican, upon this humble address to heaven, obtains remission of his sins. The reason is God's glory to resist the proud and give grace to the humble.

Lord, grant that we may not be tinctured with pride, but give us grace to be humble; may we be led by the Holy Spirit to God in Christ acknowledging our sins. We do not merit forgiveness or pardon, but we seek it in sorrow and contrition. Justification is of God in Christ for those who trust in his merits. There is no way but the new and living way, the way of the cross.

The publican's prayer is a model prayer and God loves to hear and answer prayer. His ear is ever open to hear prayer. Angels rejoice when the prayers of the returning prodigal reaches his Father's heart. He is ready to receive the penitent with open arms. We see how Jesus encourages us to pray; he taught his disciples and left them a model prayer. There is no class of sinners that Christ was so hard on as upon the Scribes and the Pharisees. We have this class of people amongst us still: they keep sinners from coming to Christ by their profession without possession. They are stumbling blocks and hindrances to the progress of religion, but when all is said and done the Gospel of Jesus Christ offers pardon and peace to all who will repent and forsake their sins. Whosoever will may come, and take of the water of life freely.

Yours sincerely,
James Sutherland.

SOUTH ORANGE AGOG AT RUDE AWAKENING OF VILLAGE FIREMEN

Policeman Conlon Suspended Following Charge That He Wielded Nightstick on Fire Fighter.

SOUTH ORANGE, Aug. 2.— Something occurred early Monday morning at the station of the South Orange (N.J.) Fire Department— something dark, for it was not yet daylight, and something mysterious, for nobody in the village could fathom it.

There was a fire whistle blown. Several villagers, alarmed by the whistle, called the station on the telephone. They were told there was no fire, that the "wires had become crossed." That only increased the mystery.

Then several villagers fortunate enough to dwell near the fire station heard whoops of pain and saw in the breaking dawn firemen running about, clad only in that simple raiment which firemen affect when they slumber. A crash was heard, too, and then all was still.

Thomas Maguire, police marshal, investigated. His inquiry was made public through the announcement that Thomas Conlon, a policeman of the village, had been suspended pending action by the village Board of Trustees.

Like all cases, there are two sides to it. The firemen's side is this:

Before the break of day Monday, they said, Policeman Conlon stole into the firemen's chamber of slumber. Before him lay the slumbering bodies of four sturdy fire fighters. From each bed struck out a pair of feet. Thereupon, they charge, the policeman raised his night stick and struck each of the four pairs of feet—struck them stinging blows, which raised cries of Anguish from the four startled firemen. Fireman William Kane took refuge in the bathroom. It is charged that the policeman's club was hurled through the bathroom window. It was at some period of this assault that the fire whistle was blown.

Policeman Conlon denies many of the particulars as stated by the firemen. He avers, however, that he did enter the fire house after his night's patrol duty and that he did poke playfully with his club at one of the firemen.

Many Children Die From Summer Complaint

When They Could Be Saved by Using

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry

There is not a Summer passes without thousands of people, especially infants, being attacked by Summer Complaint.

The prostration, often verging on collapse, which sometimes accompanies this disease makes it one of the most serious and dangerous we have to contend with during the hot months.

A remedy which will quickly offset the vomiting, purging and the profuse diarrhoea is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mrs. Thomas M. Theriault, Grand Anse, N.B., writes: "My three children were very sick with Summer Complaint during the hot days last Summer. I thought one day that they would die, and I didn't know what to do to cure them. I happened to have one of your almanacs in the house, and found by reading about Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry that it was a good remedy. I at once got two bottles, and they perfectly cured them. I recommend everybody to use this wonderful remedy."

SOUTH HAS WOMAN MAYOR.

Mrs. Horwitz Elected at Moorehaven, Fla., Despite Her Protests.

MOOREHAVEN, Fla., August 2.—Mayor Marion N. Horwitz, the first woman to hold such a position in the solid South, took office Tuesday night after making a strong fight against her own election. She finally accepted the office after receiving 75 per cent. of the votes cast at the election Monday.

She has been strong in her stand against a woman holding public office, but was the sole nominee for the mayoralty, and late last night a delegation of the leading citizens pleaded with her to accept the office, presenting a petition which had been signed by a majority of the voters.

Mrs. Horwitz announced Tuesday night to the new council that she stood for progressiveness, elimination of party lines in municipal politics, and a referendum on all legislation of a municipal character, sanitation, and the propr and immediate financing of the new City of Everglades.

A young Scotsman, who had married an English lady, some time afterwards paid a visit to a bachelor uncle in Scotland. "Weel, Alec, I hear ye hae gotten a wife," said the old man. "Yes, uncle." "What can she do?" "Do? What do you mean?" "Weel," the uncle went on, "can she sew an' knit? Can she mend your claes?" "No," the young man admitted. "Humph! Well, does she cook? Can she make parritch?" "Oh, no, uncle, the servants do all those things! But you should hear her sing, uncle! She has the most beautiful voice you ever heard." "Sing! Man, could ye no hae gotten a canary?"

JAPAN WOULD OFFER FLEET.

Ready to Guard Philippines if American Ships are Shifted.

Tokio, July 30. — Viscount Kikujiro Ishii and other Japanese, speaking authoritatively, put stress on the point that the coming visit of the Ishii mission to the United States has no relation to the recent action of the American government in sending a note to China. The mission, it is explained, is solely connected with the operations of the war. If political questions concerning China and the Far East generally are discussed with the Ishii mission at Washington, they will arise incidentally.

Viscount Ishii probably will submit to the Washington government, Japan's willingness and readiness to substitute Japanese warships for the American naval force now in the Pacific Ocean, including those making up the Asiatic fleet, with headquarters at Manila. The underlying idea is that by Japan taking up the task of protecting American territory and interests in the Pacific, the American fleet would be free for transfer to the Atlantic Ocean, where it would be more useful. The envoy will also discuss in a concrete way a project of practical co-operation with the United States in furnishing ammunition and general war supplies to the Entente Allies.

A strong movement in favor of Viscount Ishii taking up the Chinese question has arisen in Japan as a result of the discussion over the United States' action in China. The press generally has been urging that the present offers an excellent opportunity for a frank exchange of views with the American authorities.

Speaking generally the Japanese claim that they have a special position in China which is based on considerations of racial similarity geographical proximity, and economic rapprochement. The Japanese maintain also that they are in a position to acquire special knowledge of Chinese conditions and needs. They frankly assert that they above all others, are best qualified to assist China in her future development. A recognition of that superior place is believed here to be one of the great ends of Japanese diplomacy, a goal for the attainment of which the Japanese would strive tenaciously, and for a long period of years, if necessary.

It is recognized, however that the United States, free of foreign alliances, is in a totally different position from England and France and that it is a great step to ask her to abandon her prerogative of independent action in China and substitute a recognition of Japan's paramount place, which would be coupled with a practice of always consulting Japan. It is not considered likely that Japan would seek such a promise from the United States, at least at this time, despite the chauvinistic insistence of some of the younger and more aggressive figures in Japanese national life.

KERENSKY WITHDRAWS RESIGNATION

The British Troops Move Forward To New Positions

Field Marshal Haig Also Reports the Recapture of British Positions Lost in the German Counter Attacks on Thursday Night--Positions at Monchy Le Preux Being Completely Re-established.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

BRITISH TAKE NEW POSITIONS IN FLANDERS.

LONDON, August 4.—British forces moved forward over muck and slime of Flanders to new positions east of Korteker River and Cabaret, Field Marshal Haig reported to-day. To the south of the Flanders front east of Monchy Le Preux, the British Commander-in-Chief reported the recapture of British positions last in the German counter attack Thursday night.

East of the Korteker and Cabaret we made further progress in heavy rains during the night. Haig's statement asserted that at Monchy Le Preux our positions were completely re-established. East of Monchy we recaptured the remainder of the trench into which the enemy forced an entrance Thursday night. The Korteker River runs northwesterly from around Comines through Kouthem, near Hollebeke and Seanvocrde. Cabaret is on its bank.

ELDERLY HUNGARIANS CALLED OUT.

ZURICH, August 4.—All Hungarian members of the Landsturn under 52 years of age were to-day ordered to report for mobilization in twenty-four hours, according to Budapest despatches.

REFORM OF RUSSIA'S CABINET TO ELIMINATE THE SUSPECTS

LONDON, August 4.—Russia was once again reforming her Cabinet to-day for the fourth time since democracy overthrew absolutism.

Petrograd despatches to-day emphasized that the resignation of all the Ministers and the later withdrawal of those resignations by all save two of the Kerensky Cabinet members, was not due to lack of support from the populace. They were impelled first by charges approaching treason levelled against M. Techernoff, the Socialist Minister of Agriculture, forcing that member's retirament. Tehernoff did not withdraw his resignation, and he and Foreign Minister Terestchenko were the only two Ministers who were out to-day. Terestchenko is not a Socialist, and has occasionally exhibited lack of sympathy for the radical policies of his fellow cabinet members. Apparently the charges against Tehernoff were inspired by the Constitutional Democrats, on whom Kerensky had been working in an effort to have them designate a party leader for the Cabinet. That the Cabinet upheaval has not stopped Premier Kerensky's course in repressing the malcontents was proved in Petrograd despatches detailing the arrest of General Gurko, formerly commander on the southern front, and other officers; charged with fostering the recent army mutiny. A rigorous hunt was on for the assassin of General Erdelli, military governor of Petrograd.

NIGHT RAIDS ON FRENCH FRONT.

PARIS, August 4.—Overcoming the handicap of a steady rain and its mud under foot, French forces last night advanced and in reconnaissances explored farms behind the enemy's lines, to-day's official report declared.

German patrols were repulsed. Elsewhere on the French front, the statement said, north of the Aisne, the night was calm. On both banks of the Meuse artillery was active. Around Avocourt two German raids failed and we took prisoners. In the Argonne the Germans also were unsuccessful in raids.

GERMAN THREAT TO NEIGHBOURING NEUTRALS.

ROME, August 4.—Germany is informing neutrals, especially Holland, who are considering closing their frontiers against the Teutonic Empire, that such an act would be considered cause for war, it was reported here this afternoon.

PRIME MINISTER CALLS FOR RENEWED ENDEAVOUR

Message to Canadians on Entering Fourth Year of War to Consecrate Themselves Afresh With Undaunted Hearts to Allied Cause

OTTAWA, August 4.—The Prime Minister gave out last night the following message to the people of Canada calling for renewed consecration for national war effort on the occasion of entering the fourth year of the war:

"Once more we reach the anniversary of that fateful day three years ago when Germany challenged the future of democracy and the freedom of the world. The resolve of the nations of the British Commonwealth is now once more renewed. To-day they again affirm an invincible determination to sustain the ideals of liberty and justice to a victorious issue.

"The anniversary brings to us proud but solemn memories. With an intense realization of all the sacrifice and sorrow entailed on our people, we are conscious that Canada has vindicated her place among the world's greatest and truest democracies. Assuredly her sons have not suffered and died in vain, if liberty and justice are to have any meaning in the future of humanity.

"The forces of militarist aristocracy are still strong and unyielding. The issue of the struggle still hangs in the balance. In Europe the long-repressed democracy of Russia has not yet girded on its full strength; on this continent the mighty Republic to the south is still occupied in that necessary preparation without which no peace-loving people can throw their full force into an armed conflict. Not yet have the allied nations succeeded in throwing their united strength into the supreme effort. That will come; but meantime with the highly-organized and desperate forces that are arrayed against us it might be fatal if any nation should relax its endeavour, whether from loss of heart or in reliance upon the strength of others. The mightiest effort of each is needed to assure the triumph without which all that is dear to us is lost, and the world's future shrouded in darkness and despair. Let us to-day in Canada close our ranks, nerve ourselves for another year of struggle, and with undaunted hearts consecrate our fullest powers to the cause for which already our best and bravest have striven and suffered and fallen."

STORM LOSS OF $4,000,000.

SHERBROOKE, Aug. 3.— An estimate of the loss sustained by the storm in Beauce County is placed at about $4,000,000, divided: Brown Corporation, $750,000; Breakey Co., $1,500,000; loss to farmers, $500,000; loss to merchants, $500,000; highway bridges, public roads ruined and miscellaneous losses, $500,000; railway companies' loss, $250,000.

RESIGNATION OF PREMIER KERENSKY WAS NOT ACCEPTED

He Has Not Withdrawn It On His Own Terms and His Policy of Fighting Germany Will Be Carried Out

TO MEET CONGRESS

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Aug. 4.—To-day finds Kerensky again Premier and still nearer the dictatorship of all the Russians. None of the various "governing" bodies of Russia would accept his resignation, tendered yesterday, and he withdrew it, it is understood, on his own terms, namely, that his policy of internal management and of fighting German to a victorious end be carried out in its entirety. General Gurko, one of Kerensky's assailants, is to-day under arrest, charged with treachery and inciting the armies to revolt. To-morrow Kerensky, with Korniloff as his chief military advisor, will meet the Great Congress in Moscow, and it is confidently expected will be acclaimed as Russia's sole leader. There are rumours that he may be appointed president immediately.

Private Giroux's Medal "For Bravery in Field"

Mr. G. H. Giroux has received from the War Records Office the medal awarded to his son, H. Cyril Giroux, or as stamped on the edge of the medal "413116, Private H. G. Giroux, Borden Mortar Machine Gun Battery, Canadian Machine Gun

PTE. CYRIL GIROUX.

Service." The "bravery on the field," for which the medal was awarded, was performed in the Battle of the Somme, last September. The medal, which is considerably larger and heavier than a Canadian half-dollar coin, bears on its face a medallion portrait of King George, in high relief, and the obverse, the words "For bravery on the field," enclosed in a laurel wreath. This is probably the first medal to be received in Peterborough, and is, very naturally, the pride of the parents of Private Giroux, and it is no surprise that he has been promoted from the rank of private to that of "Gun Instructor."

The medal may be seen in the window of Gibson's jewelry store, next week.

German Critic Admits British Naval Superiority

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 4. — Captain Persaus, naval expert of the Berliner Tageblatt, thurats unpleasant heresies in the faces of naval enthusiasts in a review of the third naval year of the war. He says the superiority of the British fleet, despite heavy losses, is great enough to justify its claim that it controls the seas. The German fleet is unequal to meet it.

BRITAIN FACES FUTURE THE WITH HOPE AND CONFIDENCE

LONDON, August 4.—(Special Cable) — Britishers to-day commemorate the third anniversary of the declaration of war between Great Britain and Germany, with confidence and hope, backed up by universal labour and self sacrifice. With the beginning of the fourth year of the terrific struggle, with an absolutely unprincipled and merciless foe, Britain realized that on her shoulders and those of America will now rest the terrific fight of the remainder of the war. There is no quavering, however, in any class of British people. Sacrifices have been great and may be still greater. The burden has been heavy, but will be harder to bear, but through it all there is quite definite resolution. "We work and fight to beat Germany and must work and fight till Germany is beaten." That is the message of the British people to Canada and the rest of the colonies to-day.

6. There is a letter addressed to Pte. P. R. Hogg at Club Headquarters.

Some idea of the extent of the work of the Department of Militia in war times may be gleaned from the fact that over 7,000 different articles enter into the equipment of Canadian armies in the field, nearly all of which are manufactured, in whole or part, in Canada. The Canadian National Exhibition has arranged for a gigantic display of this equipment, and in order to adequately do justice to it an entire structure, the Educational Building, will be devoted to the exhibit, which will include everything of interest from hospital equipment to the latest type of Pom Pom gun just now coming into general use in France. There will also be a free display of moving pictures showing the manufacture of Canadian war equipment.

The Examiner has received a copy of the programme of the field day held "Somewhere in France" by the Canadian Corps, Ammunition Park on July 2nd, to commemorate Dominion Day, Capt. W. H. Munro of Peterborough commanding No. 3 C.A.S.P., is given as one of the contestants in the commanding officers' race. There were all kinds of field and track sports, including baseball and tug-of-war. The 116th Ontario County Battalion band supplied the music. The Examiner is indebted to Mrs. Vasey, whose husband is a member of the 116th band for the opportunity of seeing the interesting programme.

Not A Wheel Turns At Munition Factory

PORT HOPE, Aug. 4.—Business at the munition factory is at a complete standstill; not a wheel turns, and the men are still waiting for the promised wages. A representative from H. W. Petrie, Ltd., Toronto, has been in town for several days, and made all arrangements for the moving of the machinery. Men had been engaged and three cars were backed down on the siding to remove the machinery. The employees, forty strong, objected to the removal of any part of the machinery until their wages were paid and to show that they meant business they placed the local bailiff in charge.

The representative of the Petrie Co. said that twenty of the new machines in the factory were installed by his firm and there were about thirteen thousand dollars still outstanding on these. The Petrie Company had a lien on all the machines and while he sympathized with the factory employees, still they could have no claim to the machinery. However, to avoid any discord or trouble, he would allow the court to decide before taking any further action.

It is said the munition plant in Toronto, under the same management, has met a similar fate.—Port Hope Guide.

FRANCE USES BREAD CARDS.

Paris, Aug. 3.—Bread cards will be introduced into France on Saturday. Senate Passes The Conscription Bill

COMPLETE UNION OF GOVERNMENT PREMIER'S HOPE

Sir Robert Borden Says He Desires Representation of All Parties and Interests in New Government

REPLY TO DELEGATION

Special to the Examiner:

OTTAWA Aug. 4.— Replying to the delegation from the Win-the-War Convention which to-day presented to the Prime Minister the resolution passed at the Toronto gathering, Sir Robert Borden expressed the hope that a union government will soon be formed. He expressed the hope that the Government union will be based upon a union of all persons, irrespective of party, race or creed, and that it will include all the leading elements of the Dominion, including the labouring and agricultural interests.

"It is not an agreeable duty to summon the splendid youths and manhood of our country by the hundred thousand to take up arms to undergo untold hardships and suffering, to make perchance, the supreme sacrifice,"

"It is appropriate on this occasion to make my fellow countrymen fully acquainted with my desire and intention. I hope that in the near future a government may be formed based upon a union of all persons, irrespective of party, race or creed, who believe that the struggle which we now wage, is for the cause of liberty and justice, who realize that it involves the destiny of our Dominion, of the Empire, and even of the world, and, who, putting aside all differences of minor significance, are prepared to join in a united and determined effort to throw into the conflict the full power and strength of this Dominion. Only by very real and very special deeds can we win this war. Mere profession is hollow and futile. It is my desire, therefore, that not only shall both political parties be fully and fairly represented in the Government, but that it shall also include special representation of the great agricultural interests and of labour.

Right-of-Way Agent George Pope Is Dead

Was Well Known in Peterboro' City and County

WINNIPEG Aug. 4.—George H. Pope, land valuator for the Federal Government, and for a long time the right-of-way agent for Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, is dead at his home here, at the age of eighty years. He was born in Cookshire County, Quebec, in 1837. He was engaged in the lumber business. In 1904 he joined the staff of the Grand Trunk Pacific as right-of-way agent, and for them he purchased land throughout Western Canada. Previously, while connected with the Railways and Canals Department of the Federal Government, Mr. Pope bought the right-of-way for the new Welland Canal.

Mr. Pope was well-known in Peterborough City and County, having made frequent visits here in connection with drowned lands, etc.

Nine Liberals Favoured It --Amendment To Delay the Operation of the Act Also Voted Down--Enforcement of Act to Be Immediately Proceeded With.

MAJORITY AGAINST 10

Ottawa, Saturday, Aug. 4.—By a vote of 54 to 25 the Senate passed the second reading of the Military Service Bill at 1.40 this morning, the third anniversary of the declaration of war. Before the main motion was reached the House voted down the amendment proposed by Hon. Hewitt Bostock, the Liberal leader, calling for a postponement of the enforcement of the measure until after a general election.

The Bostock amendment was defeated by 34 to 44, a government majority of 10. The division on that amendment was in the main on straight party lines, save that Senators Landry, Montplaisir and Beaubien (Conservatives) allied themselves with the Opposition.

On the main motion, however, the defections from the government ranks numbered only two, namely, Senators Landry and Montplaisir, Senator Beaubien voting for the second reading. The Opposition, on the other hand, lost 9 votes. Hon. Hewitt Bostock, the Liberal House leader, supported the conscription measure, and was followed by Senators Thompson, Watson, Douglas, Beith, Talbot, McHugh, Gillmor and Deveber.

The feature of the discussion was the intimation by Sir James Lougheed that if the Military Service Bill were defeated in the Upper Chamber the government would consider the advisability of the immediate enforcement of the Militia Act. The government leader in the House said that the Bostock amendment was designed not merely to delay, but to defeat the bill.

"Were this bill which we are considering defeated," said Sir James, "inasmuch as the government has committed itself to maintaining a force of 500,000 men, it might feel it incumbent on it to put into force the Militia Act."

Sir James Lougheed pointed out that the Militia Act provided a method or conscription more drastic than that provided by the Military Service bill. As amended by the Laurier government in 1908, moreover it authorized the sending of troops out of Canada.

"I have authority," announced Sir James, "for saying that if this amendment is carried and the bill thus practically defeated, the government will be prepared to give consideration to the enforcement of the Militia Act to furnish reinforcements for the overseas forces."

There was a crowded attendance in the Senate during the whole evening, including all the newly appointed Senators, and the debate at times was very animated.

The bill will be taken up in committee on Monday.

THE WEATHER

The temperature last night was down to 51 degrees, and there was a feeling to the early riser that Jack Frost was not far distant. Lowest the previous night 55 degrees. Highest yesterday 74 degrees. Vastly different figures compared with those prevailing a few days ago.—W.P.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, AUG. 4, 1917

IMPORTANT.

The programme of the seveneenth annual convention of the Union of Canadian Municipalities, to be held in London, Ont., August 27th-29th, is of more than usual interest. It has to do with consideration of the problems inviting municipal cooperation, in connection with winning the war, and of the readjustment problems that will come after the war. In the solution of the details of these problems municipalities have a large share. Our municipal rulers find the work of ordinary administration sufficiently thorny and calling for much thought; but at this time their responsibility is doubled, and the sessions of the convention if they will help municipal authorities to know and think and act, should be taken full advantage of.

This time of world crisis calls for deep thinking, close counsel and energetic action by all elements of the Canadian people, and municipal councils from their more intimate relations to their constituents, have especial need to get inspiration, light and stimulus upon matters that will force themselves upon their attention from now on—till things are brought back to routine order at the conclusion of the readjustment that must follow the close of the war.

We Canadians are not entirely free from the Kaiser's obsession—that he is winning this war with his mouth.

VIOLATING FAITH.

Even in these days of emergency, in this time of crisis we find party journals strong to extract party gain and party comfort out of the situation. While the country is agonising in endeavour, throwing its whole soul into the work of helping win the war, these journals are striving to scrape up the crumbs of party comfort. Careful calculations are made of the party profit one side has gained, and the loss the other side has sustained in the present crisis of muddle, into which the Government has brought the country.

We need not wonder at these things when the Government's central policy seems to be gaining party advantage out of the agony of the war. Three years ago there was a party truce declared. Both parties loyally united, in profession anyway, to subordinate every partisan consideration to the task of Canada doing its utmost best. Partyism was absent in the unanimous voting of high sums for war purposes; and partisan strife was absent in the unanimous consent to extend the life of parliament—to help win the war by avoiding the distractions of a general election.

With an honourable government this agreement implied that the extended life of parliament was only to be used in the interest of the country, and the war; it implied that the new lease of life was not to be used to advance party interest. Yet, we find the Government playing the party game to the full—misusing its power to serve party purposes, filling the Senate with new members in order to give the Conservative party a party majority, in the Senate, to be used to party advantage. Morally the Government has no right to appoint a single Senator; it is a direct breach of the implied understanding upon what extension of parliament was agreed upon—an understanding that was as binding as a signed bond upon honourable men, upon men not under the German spirit that regards treaties as "scraps of paper." While the government is demanding universal sacrifice and service with "win this war," the only war by itself is busy in extracting partisan profit from the power given it to use in serving the cause of the country and our allies. And still partisan sheets claim that their party is the only loyal and honourable element in the country.

If consistency is a jewel, the Government's jewel box is empty.

THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR DRUNKEN BOYS.

Sir Robert Borden, is under discipline. Hon. Robert Rogers demanded the appointment of a white-washing commission. It was at once appointed and the white-washing performed, according to programme —or instructions. He is not so prompt to meet the demand of duty in other things. A year ago the Legislature of Ontario passed an act of prohibition of the liquor traffic. The spirit of the act was to close the bars, outlaw the liquor traffic and protect the people from the evil of access to strong drink. The act was leaky to the extent of permitting the importation of strong drink from outside the province, which had no constitutional power to prevent such a practice. But the Dominion government, that is to say Sir Robert Borden, has the power, but refuses to use it, as he is in duty bound. His failure to use that power—the power to make prohibition of strong drink absolute in Ontario, in the interests of the sobriety and morals of the people, and in the interests of promoting our share in the war.

Canada has been three years in the war, yet the government of the Dominion hasn't lifted a finger to remove one of the chief causes of national inefficiency, the cihef cause of the deterioration of the morale of the country. The United States has been three months in the war, yet it has already virtually enacted legislation that makes prohibition absolute in every state that has adopted it—, tha, stops the leakage of strong drink from the outside.

We have prohibition in Ontario that does not prohibit. We have "made clean the outside of the cup and platter," but under the surface there is a foul under-current of "rottenness and dead men's bones"—in the making—flowing into the province.

We of course don't know the extent of this illicit underground sneak traffic, but we do know that the express companies of the province and of Peterborough never had such a busy time delivering parcels of strong drink into the province. We don't know, either, the full facts of the demoralizing effects upon our people of this underground stream of strong drink. But we sometimes get an idea of it. An evening or two ago a lad fifteen years of age, still in knickerbockers, was seen reeling drunk on Gilmour street. Who was to blame for that? Sir Robert Borden, who has it in his power, both by constitutional authority and by the help of his majority in Parliament, furnished chiefly by this province, to enact legislation making Ontario "bone dry" and shutting off the supply of drink from our growing boys, and from our general population, many of whom it is feared, and even asserted, are acquiring tippling habits— the foundation of drunkenness—according to the measure of opportunity.

We are called upon by the government to economize, to forego expenditure on luxuries, in the interests of helping in the war, yet thee government that makes this appeal permits a traffic in strong drink, that means the waste of thousands of dollars every week, in addition to the moral damage done, the lives and homes debauched.

Sir Robert Borden has pledged the help of Canada in the war "to the last man and the last dollar." We are rounding up the "last man" by conscription, but are letting the last dollar—of the rich profiteer—go free.

ENGLISH SPELLING.

We are going to be doing business long after the war has passed into history, and it is necesary to keep all our activities at work and not mark time in anything essential while we are practicing the war march. Our educational interests are of the things that cannot be neglected. We must prepare our children to take the places of the flower of our manhood that will have passed out through the sanguine way of war.

Our educational system may be improved in application. New branches, such as technical instruction and training, are needed to meet the demands of the times. There are, however, some things that are little susceptible to improvement. The English language is one of these things. It has assumed a concrete and permanent form, subject only to surface changes. The language of a nation is as the breath of its life, the one great cohesive force of national unity; and its preservation in its purity and form of meaning is a matter of the highest importance—to preserve its historical character, the history of the language being the history of the race.

Spelling reform by prentice hands, and without authoriy, is iconaclism. The claims of the reformers that English spelling is an obstacle to educational acquirement, do not count in view of the true education—mental development, mind training. English spelling, like almost anything worth while, is hard to get; so is the higher mathematics, not of much practical use in a popular way, but valuable as a mind developer. It is the same, or, at least, similar, with English spelling.

Nor is it quite true that the spelling of the English language is hard to acquire. A news paragraph in the "People's Press," of Welland, mentions the fact that this year was the first occasion when children of foreign birth—Welland, as a great industrial centre, has a large foreign population — have passed the entrance examinations. They were two in number; and one of them was Rudolf Voros, a Hungarian. He entered school, entirely ignorant of the English language, in December, 1911, at eight years of age, and has completed the public school course in six years. He passed the entrance examinations with high marks, taking, it is worthy of special remark, one hundred per cent. in English spelling. Annie Rossen, a Russian, the other successful High School entrant, was Welland's spelling champion at a recent "spelling match" between teams of the city and Port Colborne.

What is worthy of note, is that here we have two children of foreign birth mastering, not only the stiff subjects of the curriculum, but attaining at the same time special excellence in English spelling, showing that English spelling is not so difficult to acquire when their is concentration of effort and attention, something that the teacher of these foreign children, Miss Forster, no doubt deserves the highest credit for securing with such excellent results.

Such facts deprive of merit the claim of the spelling reformers that the difficulties of English spelling justify the substitution of phonetic spelling for the good, old, time-honoured, venerable orthodox English orthography—with the loss of its etymological and historical values, and the loss of the mental training its acquirement involves, not to speak of the outrage of the priceless sentiment, associated with the form of the spelling employed by a long and glorious line of the greatest minds in English, or any other literature.

What a greedy time it is; we want one hundred thousand men to help our Canadians reap the harvest of victory in France; and we want ten thousand men to help gather in the harvest of Ontario.

AFTER THREE YEARS.

The Germany that is trying so hard to obtain any peace short of one dictated by its enemies as the result of its unconditional surrender —is that the same Germany which three years ago was pouring its troops through Belgium, confident of early capture of the French capital —this to be prelude to a victorious march into Petrograd and Moscow? Is the Kaiser now crying out that his armes are fighting for the life of the Fatherland the same Kaiser who then counted it but a question of days when he would dine in state in a conquered Paris?

The same—and yet not the same. From the population of the Germany that set forth upon its mission to force its kultur down the throat of the world millions of men have been subtracted, murdered by the Kaiser and the military autocracy of which he is the head. Not only have the Kaiser and his militarists driven those millions to death, but they have driven their country to something worse than death. They have made it pariah on the face of the earth a loathsome thing in the eyes of civilization.

It is a high price for Germany and the German people to pay for the luxury of a "divine rights" ruler, and all that goes with divine rights rule. Not the Germans of to-day alone, but their children and their children's children through many generations will bear the burden that the price entails.—New York Herald.

CITY SOLICITOR WILL SPEND VACATION ON FARM.

Mr. G. N. Gordon will help bring in the Golden Sheaves.

It is learned that Mr. G. N. Gordon is leaving to-day for a week's vacation, which he will spend assisting on a farm.

Mr. Gordon said that in his early days he was a pretty fair farmer, and he hopes after a week's work to get down to fighting weight, and to get as much benefit from it as he would at Preston Springs or any other of the health resorts.

As the firm of Gordon, Widdifield & O'Brien has been established Mr. Gordon is leaving his office in charge of his partner, Mr. J. A. O'Brien, and will try the greater production movement to see if he can help the cause, and incidentally raise a few blisters.

Two Good Wartime Books

There has reached the Examiner a most timely and interesting book, published by Hodder & Stroughton, Limited. Its title, "It is for England," indicates the thrilling and sterling character of its contents. It pictures conditions in England in war time, especially in the earlier days; and the main thread of the plot is wound round German intrigues and plots, fostered by naturalized German men of large financial influence. The thrill of the well-written and vivid narrative is heightened and softened by a beautiful love story, and the heroism and resource of a beautiful girl, who does much, and risks much in cucumventing the plotters. To read "It is for England," gives one a stirring idea of the perils through which England passed in, especially, the earlier days of the war, and of the resource and sacrifice in dealing with and overcoming them. "It is for England," is well written, and will be read with keenly excited and sustained interest.

"Doodle M'Clink," is a title that rather well suggests the character and readability of a war-time book published by Hodder & Stoughton, Limited. "Doodle M'Clink" is a character with the comical suggestiveness of his name. He is a member of the "black squad" in the stokers' hold of the "Sardin Castle," a stoker—one of a class of heroes, all too little unsung who swelter in the bowels of our warships and steamers and whose hands that wield the shovels and steel bars are the hands that often hold the fate of hundreds of passengers, and the fate of big battleships, and the outcome of battles in their grimp grip. Doodle M'Clink journeys to and from the ends of the seas and with his gallant cheerfulness and sturdy service, is the hero of submarines and other adventures, told with the sprightliest possible raciness of humour. The book is full of interest, of thrills and laughs that overlie serious interests and considerations. The story "abounds with the breezy atmosphere of the sea, and will doubtless meet in Canada with the large welcome it got in England, where the first edition was exhausted on the day of publication."

Germany Would Have Made Scrap of Paper Of Munroe Doctrine

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, Aug. 4—"If Britain had not gone into the war with her whole strength the Monroe Doctrine would have been treated as "A Scrap of Paper" by Germany," declared Premier Lloyd George to a vast audience at Queen's Hall today. The Premier was the main speaker at a special meeting held to commemorate the third anniversary of the war. Many British notables were present.

10,000 MEN NEEDED NOW

Ontario's Crop Must Be Harvested

Three months ago, in order to avert Famine and World Hunger, the Farmers of Ontario were urged to seed every possible acre.

To-day, thanks to their response, and favorable weather conditions, we have the result in a record crop of foodstuffs.

As we appealed to the farmers during April and May to plant, so now do we appeal to the employers of labor and their employees for help to harvest this crop.

We have applications on hand for over two thousand men, and thousands more needed if the harvest is to be fully saved.

It would be nothing short of a crime were one pound of food to be lost for want of men to gather it.

Loyalty to the men we have sent overseas, to our fellow-citizens in the Homeland, and to our Allies demands immediate and effective action.

The actual need for men exists to-day, and will continue to exist until the last sheaf of wheat and barley and oats is under cover.

The late season has brought haying, the hoeing of our root crops, and the harvesting of our grains crowding together.

Every man who can be released from his present occupation for the next month is needed.

Those who come from the farms can naturally render the greatest service, but able-bodied men willing to work should not hold back for lack of experience.

In the present emergency, all can serve.

In comparison with the sacrifices made by our men in the trenches, the most that any man is called upon to sacrifice in helping with the harvest must be insignificant.

Those who cannot serve in the first line of defence can serve in what Lloyd George has so well called "The second Line of Defence."

The Honorable W. J. Hanna, Food Controller for Canada, has laid upon us Men of Ontario the duty of harvesting the record crop with which, under the kind hand of Providence, the Province has been blessed.

He calls upon us for the sake of the Empire (and he knows the real need) to see to it that the harvest is not lost, and, having been gathered, that none of it shall be wasted.

As Prime Minister of Ontario, I call upon Employers to make it easy for their Employees to assist, and upon Employees to face the obligation of the hour in a Spirit of Service and Loyalty.

Our Manufacturers, our Government Department, our Municipalities, the Members of our Wholesale and Retail Trades, our Financial Institutions, in short, every employer of labor need release but a very small percentage of the men employed to place the required help at the disposal of the farmers.

If the men who have come from the farms in recent years, and the members of organized labor bodies, with those able-bodied men in every walk of life, display the Spirit of Patriotism which is in them, the harvest will be reaped.

I confidently call upon every Industrial Centre of Ontario to organize at once to secure the ten thousand men who are needed.

Prime Minister of Ontario

THE MARKET WAS LARGELY ATTENDED

Large Quantity of Small Fruit on the Market

The market was largely attended this morning, and the prices again started at unreasonable figures. However slow sales broke the market towards 11.

Eggs ranged from 38c to 40c per dozen.

Butter from 40 to 48c a lb.

Chickens, from 20c to 22c a lb.; or from 80c to $1.20 pair.

The outside market consisted mainly of small fruit.

Cherries were $1.20 to $1.30 per basket.

Raspberries, $1.30 per pail; 16c a box.

Potatoes, 60c to 65c peck.

A Decline In Soda Biscuits

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in the Canadian Grocer this week:—

Corn syrups have again registered an advance, due to the firm situation in the corn market. Starches, however, have not advanced since the increase recorded last week. Lobsters are expected to be in short pack with short deliveries on some lines. Packers have increased their opening price on one brand of lobsters by 25c per case. Jams and jellies have been advanced from 5c to 10c per dozen. Mustard is in higher market and blue has been increased. Cleanser, canned coffee, corned beef, bulk macaroni, ice cream cones, extracts, brooms are among the lines that have been moved to higher levels. Soda biscuits have been an exception to the generally upward trend of grocery markets and a decline of 1c per pound was recorded in this line during the week.

BUTTER AND EGGS.

Butter and eggs were in firm market with advances recorded in both commodities during the week. There is an excellent demand for cooked meats, but smoked meats are dull. Cooked meats have advanced. Both pure lard and compound lard are down in price as some of the larger concerns have made concessions in order to stir up trade during the dull summer season. Live hogs are coming to market in small numbers and prices have advanced accordingly. Farmers are presumably busy with haying and other work and have been unable to look after shipment.

Sugar was in an advancing market during the week. Four refiners advanced 50c per hundred, while the fifth increased prices twice during the week, amounting to 35c in all. There is still a difference of 10c between the majority of refiners and the one quoting at the lower figure. Sugar is in a strong position. Flour held in steady market with the demand reported better. Business is still quiet, travelers for all the grocery houses in Ontario being off the road for two weeks taking their vacations.

Record Increase In Potato Crop Is Now Assured

YIELD THIS YEAR WILL BE 150,000,000 BUSHELS IN EXCESS OF THAT OF 1916.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—More than 450,000,000 bushels of potatoes will be produced in the United States this year, according to an estimate obtained from the Department of Agriculture to-day. This will be nearly 100,000,000 bushels more than the average yield in the last five years, and more than 150,000,000 bushels in excess of the crop of 1916.

The size of the crop this year is attributable to the fact that there has been a 22.05 per cent increase in the acreage planted, and that the yield per acre is above the average.

Stimulation undoubtedly was given to the cultivation of potatoes by the campaign for intensified farming, and the estimate of the Department of Agriculture includes, so far as it was possible to do so, all of the home gardens that have been made this year as a result of that campaign. The enforcement of the food bill, now pending in the Senate, is expected to encourage the raising of equally large crops in succeeding years. Heretofore there have been regular fluctuations in the sizes of potato crops and an unusually large crop has invariably been followed by one much smaller. This has been due to the fact that when there was a large crop the farmer did not get as much per bushel as he had expected and the following year planted less acreage in potatoes. When there was a small crop the price was high, and each farmer, assuming that the price the following year would be equally high and that he would be, if not the only one, at least among the few wise ones to take advantage of the market, increased the acreage planted in potatoes. The farmer, therefore, has never been without a cause of complaint. If he had a big crop he was aggrieved because prices were low, and if prices were high he was aggrieved because he had a small crop.

Under the food bill the President is authorized to "purchase or lease to provide storage facilities for and to sell for cash at reasonable prices" potatoes among other "necessaries" in order to guarantee reasonable prices to the producer and to the consumer.

The importance of these provisions will be emphasized by a brief statement of the method of marketing the potato crop of the country.

"New" potatoes, as the early crop is called, are raised principally in Florida and partly in Texas and a few other Southern States. The marketing of this crop begins in March and usually has been completed in May, although shipments continue from the Southern States during July. These potatoes must be consumed within a few weeks after being harvested and are shipped all through the country in barrels or baskets. They are not used for seeding.

The first large supply of new potatoes comes from Virginia where the marketing of the crop begins about July 1. The greater part of this crop, particularly that raised in the eastern part of the State, is handled by the eastern shore Virginia Produce Exchange, which sells to wholesale jobbers in the North and as far west as the Mississippi River. These jobbers sell to commission merchants or through brokers to wholesale grocers, whom the retailers and hucksters buy. There is slight opportunity for speculation of inflation of price in new potatoes because of their perishable quality. New Jersey and Maryland begin to harvest their crops about August 1, and while these are called "new" potatoes and similarly are consumed immediately, they can be stored. Late potatoes, those which constitute the principal crop, are grown almost exclusively in the northern States.

SEND a Dominion Express Money Order. They are payable everywhere.

The Food Controllers of Canada and the United States will work in mutual harmony and understanding. Hon. W. J. Hanna, the Canadian Food Controller, and Mr. Herbert Hoover, have known each other for some years.

BROTHER OF LATE PTE. E. B. BOSWELL WINS DECORATION

Flight Sub.-Lieut. Henry George Boswell of the Royal Naval Air Service Wins Distinguished Service Cross For Sinking a German Sub.

Flight Sub-Lieut. H. G. Boswell, who has won the Distinguished Service Cross for sinking a German submarine as detailed below is a brother of the late Pte. Ernie Boswell who enlisted in Peterborough with the 57th quota to the 2nd Battalion, 1st Contingent and was killed at Langemarck.

The Toronto Star says:

For sinking a German submarine by dropping a bomb from his airship Flight Sub-Lieut. Henry George Boswell, 25 Roxborough street east, has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross. The D.S.C. was the first of the new decorations to be instituted as a result of the present war, and Lieut. Boswell is one of the first Canadians to win the coveted honour. His name appears among the list of honours recently published in the London Daily Mail.

While engaged on his regular patrol duty near the English Channel Lieut. Boswell sighted a German submarine on the ocean surface. Within five minutes he dropped two bombs. The second struck the submarine in front of the conning tower and the U-boat sank immediately.

As it was getting dark the aviator sailed to his base and landed in a running sea. Unable to see where he was landing, the machine was bounced 50 feet into the air. Control of the machine was lost and Lieut. Boswell was thrown into the propellor. He was stunned temporarily, but regained consciousness, and both the young aviator and his observer were rescued and landed safely.

PRAISED BY JELLICOE

When the affair was reported to the Admiralty, the air station received a telegram of congratulation from Admiral Jellicoe. Both the pilot and observer were recommended for the D. S. C. This was confirmed in due time by the King and both aviators have received their awards.

Lieut. Boswell has had a varied and unique career since the outbreak of war. When war was declared he immediately enlisted with the Princess Pats, where he was known as No. 185. He fought through the earlier engagements of the war until the battle of Hill 60 was reached. At that time he was serving with the 1st Battalion, which was compelled to undergo all manner of hardships. The men were continually up to their waists and knees in water. Lieut. Boswell contracted a bad attack of rheumatism. He was sent to a hospital in France, and was later transferred to fifteen different camps in England for treatment. He returned to Canada, for a medical examination in October, 1915, and was later discharged at Quebec as medically unfit.

RETURNS TO THE FRONT.

The Canadian climate seemed to improve his condition, and, as he desired to return to the front, he went through the Curtiss Aviation School at Newport News. He left for England in June, 1916, taking a course at the Royal Flying School at Crystal Palace, London. He went to Windermere, and was later sent to the Channel, where he has since been regularly engaged in patrol service. He was given leave on account of the shock caused by his being thrown into the propellor of his machine. He has now been transferred to one of the largest stations on the south coast.

BROTHERS AT SUEZ CANAL.

Two brothers of Lieut. Boswell, Sub Lieut. Walter O. Boswell, are Sub Lieut. Walter O. Boswell, are officers in the motor patrol service. Another brother, Pte. Ernest B. Boswell, was killed in action at Langemarck on April 23, 1915. He was 29 years of age, and enlisted at the outbreak of war with a Central Ontario battalion. He and "Scoop" Taylor, a Peterborough newspaper reporter, were the last two men of their platoon to face the Germans. They were both killed by machine gun fire.

BROTHERS AT SUEZ CANAL

The two other brothers are now engaged in a motor patrol service at Port Said, on the Suez Canal. They went together to the Royal Naval College at Greenwich in 1916, and graduated with high marks in the R. N. Reserve. They were engaged on cross Channel work for a time, and it was there that they had their first encounter with the enemy.

A DISTINGUISHED FAMILY

The Boswell boys come from a distinguished family. Flight Lieut. H. G. Boswell is the third cousin to win high honours in the present war. Lieut.-Col. S. H. Osler, son of E. H. Osler, of Cobourg, won the D.S.O. about six weeks ago for distinguished conduct on the field. He is attached to the Royal Engineers.

Another cousin, Lieut. Stewart Thorne, son of the late Horace Thorne of Toronto has been awarded the Military Cross for bravery in connection with the blowing up of Vimy Ridge. He was previously decorated with the Croix de Guerre by Gen Neville.

All the young men are grandsons of the late Rev. Canon H. B. Osler, who was for many years rector of York Mills. A. E. Osler, of Toronto, is an uncle.

MRS. SEELYE SPENT $10,113 IN 5 MONTHS, HER GUARDIAN SAYS

Surrogate Denies Her Application for $2,000, Opposed by Mr. Leubuscher.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—Opposing his ward's application for an extra allowance of $2,000 to defray medical expenses, Frederic Leubuscher, guardian of Mrs. Renee Boucicault Seelye, granddaughter of Dion Boucicault, in an affidavit before Surrogate Cohalan cited instances of her lavishness and expressed the opinion that the principal of the trust fund from which she receives her income would be dissipated with in a year by his ward if she had control of it. Although the Court had fixed her income at $6,000 a year, Mr. Laubuscher said she spent $10,113 between January and May, 1917, and then admitted to him she had outstanding bills amounting to $1,031.78.

Some months ago, Mr. Leubuscher say, he bought an automobile for his ward at an expense of almost $1,000, because her physician advised her to remain in the open air as much as possible. A few weeks later she informed him, he said, that a man named Alexander Marks or Hill sold the automobile for little more than half the cost price. According to the affidavit Hill or Marks was named as a co-respondent in the divorce action begun by Clarel Seelye against Mr. Leubuscher's ward, which resulted in Mr. Seelye obtaining an interlocutory decree of divorce.

Despite her income, the guardian declared, he was informed by Mrs. Seelye that she had pawned her jewels. In eight weeks, according to the affidavit, the young woman spent $3,243.88 for clothing, which included a score of hats. Her bills at the Somerset Hotel were at the rate of $100 a week and indicated the expenditure of $10 daily for meals.

Surrogate Cohalan denied Mrs. Seelye's application. She then entered a petition for her guardian's removal, but later withdrew it.

MOST VULNERABLE PART OF LINE BEING ATTACKED

If Allies Make Big Drive Now It Means Huns Along Coast Will Have To Retire

WASHINGTON, August 4.—The British-French assault on the German right flank has made a profound impression here because, in the judgment of many American army officers, it is directed at the most vulnerable point on the entire German front.

Complete success for the Allies, sweeping the German line back from the sea along the entire Belgian coast, would be an immediate answer to the U-boat warfare. The main North Sea bases for U-boat operations would be stamped out. Behind that achievement then would stand the possibility that the entire German line in France could be endangered by a flank attack.

The Best Opportunity.

The discussion here brought out strongly the fact that many American officers who have studied the situation believe the German right flank offers the only real opportunity to bring the struggle to a decisive issue in a single campaign.

Short of that, they can forsee only a continuing repetition of the deadly business of frontal attack, which in time would wear down the German resistance since the Allied Powers have the greater resources in men and supplies. How long the wearing down process would require no official is willing to suggest, however, and it is pointed out that if U-boat activity is not sharply checked, time will work strongly against the Allies.

Recent German operations have produced the impression among some observers that the assault upon the right flank has been expected by the German General Staff. The surprise attack some time ago upon a small sector of the British front, which swept the Allies back beyond the Yser Canal, materially strengthened that sector for the Germans.

In renewed German assaults upon the Verdun front observers have read also an attempt to prevent an Allied concentration upon the right flank.

In diplomatic quarters, however, the Verdun attacks are coupled also with the German advance in Galicia to furnish the stage setting for the renewal of peace suggestions through the German and Austrian Chancellors.

Playing German Game?

Some officers strongly believe that a great part of the German success heretofore has been due to the fact that the allies have been forced to accept the type of warfare which the German high command elected. When the Germans early in the war fell back to the Aisne and dug themselves in, the allies followed suit, and the opportunity for field operations was quickly lost. The game was mapped out as the German staff wished it to be played.

There are officers who believe that with the allies' greater forces and more powerful artillery, they now could be certain of fairly quick success if trench fighting could be abandoned for the shift and strategy of field operations. The Germans, these offiers say, also knew this, and has no intention of he can help it, of permitting any change in the battle scheme he has forced upon his enemies.

If severe pressure is exerted on the right flank, therefore, the German commanders are expected here to seek relief by an assault or a series of assaults elsewhere along the line. The only answer to such tactics would be to ignore enemy successes of this nature and keep pressing home with every available man or ship, the drive at the right flank.

Prices For Fats In Germany Excessive Newspapers Reveal

"For Sale, Cash on Delivery, Fat for Frying, 17 Marks ($4.05) per pound," reads one Ad.

Washington, D. C. — Germany's shortage of fats is forcibly illustrated in the advertisements appearing in the German newspapers which have just been received in Washington. Notwithstanding the fact that until recently large importations of fats have been reaching Germany from the United States through the neutral nations of Northern Europe, prices are very high—prohibitive, in fact, except for persons of wealth.

'For sale, for cash on delivery, fat or frying, 17 marks ($4.05) per lb.," reads one advertisement.

"Goose fat, 22 1-2 marks (5.36) per pound," reads another.

"Duck fat, 1-4 pound for 4.75 marks ($1.13)," is a Dresden bargain sale announcement.

Salted goose legs are quoted at 94c each. Minced goose meat brings the same price. Larded goose breast, a delicacy, will cost the epicures $2.08 per pound. Fresh fowls for soup are quoted at from $1.01 per lb. up.

An official distribution of cheese is announced for Dusseldorf with the announcement that there will not be sufficient to supply every one, but that "those who were not supplied at the last distribution and also go empty at the forthcoming distribution will be given the preference at the next distribution. They must therefore preserve the current voucher."

Prices quoted are 82c per pound for gouda and 36c per pound for Swiss cheese.

Young country laying hens are advertised for sale at $3.32 each.

"Well fed, snow white geese" are offered for sale at prices ranging from $11.91 to $19.06 each.

The egg ration at Hamburg for one week in June was one egg per person.

Rabbits bring high prices. "One buck, one doe and three young rabbits" are offered for $8.34.

Horses are in great demand for killing and delicacies made of horse flesh are advertised at prices varying from 53 to 86c a pound.

PEACE MAY COME QUICKLY.

Chancellor Admits Unexpected Developments Might Bring Results.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 3.—According to a published account of conversations in Dresden, Chancellor Michaelis said that while he was ready to accept any opportunity given him to secure an honourable peace the requirement of the hour for Germans was to avoid any manifestation of nervousness and prove to their opponents that Germany's might was unweakened. Germany's opponents, Michaelis said, had been greatly encouraged by the exhibitions of nerve in the latest inner crisis and by the German longing for peace, which was interpreted abroad as a sign of weakening of the German people. Peace would be brought no nearer, he said, by such things, adding that the Government would continue its efforts for peace, but would avoid earlier mistakes.

Michaelis intimated that the prospects for a speedy peace were not bright, but that unexpected developments might at any moment bring the question to a head and produce tangible results. He appealed for unity and declared that the entire German press much back the Government in all vital questions.

Discolored or Spotty Skin Easily Peeled Off

The freckling, discoloring or roughening to which most skins are subject at this season, may readily be gotten rid of. Mercolised wax, spread lightly over the face before retiring and removed in the morning with soap and water, completely peels off the disfigured skin. Get an ounce of the wax at any druggist's. There's no more effective way of banishing tan, freckles or other cutaneous defects. Little skin particles come off each day, so the process itself doesn't even temporarily mar the complexion, and one soon acquires a brand new, spotless, girlishly beautiful face.

Wrinkles caused by weather, worry or illness, are best treated by a simple solution of powdered saxolite, one ounce, dissolved in one-half pint witch hazel. Bathing the face in this produces a truly marvelous transformation.

IT is always safe to send a Dominion Express Money Order. Five dollars cost three cents.

BROKERS AIDING SLACKERS

Supplying Brides for those who Hope to Escape the Draft.

New York, Aug. 3.—Agents of the Department of Justice have begun an investigation to learn whether marriage brokers have undertaken to supply wives for young men who are seeking to avoid being drafted for service with the national army. The investigation is a result of two days of preliminary work by Secret Service operators and deputy United States marshals among the hundreds of applicants for marriage licenses.

More than one prospective bridegroom, it was learned, was found in the line of applicants who knew little or nothing about the women they were seeking to marry beyond her name, address and the other facts necessary for obtaining the license. Under the provisions of the draft regulations, government officers declare, they will be able to arrest and imprison not only the slackers, but the women and the brokers who brought them together.

GERMAN SURVIVOR RELATES EXPERIENCE OF JUTLAND BATTLE

Awful Scenes As Panic-Stricken Sailor Abandoned Wounded —Interesting Pamphlet Just Issued

The Hague, Netherlands.—Scenes on board the German flagship Lutzow during the Jutland naval battle, when some of the newest and largest of the German battle cruisers were battered of sunk by Admiral Beatty's British squadron in June, 1916, are vividly described by P. Krug, one of the Lutzow's survivors, in a pamphlet which has just been published here. It is believed to be the first detailed story of that great battle from the point of view of the German sailor to reach the public eye.

Torpedoed by a British warship early in the engagement the Lutzow, which was the flagship of Admiral Hipper, was hammered unmercifully by the big guns of the British vessels, and soon became a complete wreck, a "ship of the dead," as Krug describes her.

According to his story twenty-seven German sailors were trapped in the Diesse dynamo room before the battle had been long in progress and remained there when the Lutzow, a disabled hulk, was abandoned and sent to the bottom by a torpedo from a German destroyer. Two of these imprisoned men had been driven insane and were kept tied by their shipmates.

After describing the first part of the battle and telling how the arrival of British battleships turned the tables on the Germans, Krug writes:

"Suddenly the entire ship is roughly shaken. The colussus heaves far over, and everything that is not fixed is upset. The first direct hit the torpedo pierces the fore part of the ship. Its effects are terrible. Iron, wood, metal, parts of bodies, smashed ship's implements are all intermixed, and the electric light, by chance spared, continues to shine upon this sight.

Got Awful Mauling.

"Two decks lower, in the Diesel dynamo room, there is still life. That compartment has not been hit, and 27 men in the prime of life have been spared, but the chamber is shut off from all others, for the water is rushing into all sections. They are doomed to death. Several 38 centimeter shells squarely hit their mark, working terrible havoc, The first hit the wireless department. Of the twelve living men who a moment ago were seated before the apparatus, there is nothing more to be seen. Nothing is left but a smoking heap of ruins. The second shot fired again pierced the fore part of the ship.

The entire fore part of the vessel, as far as the Diesel motor room was past saving. Another broadside meant for the Lutzow fell short, but a torpedo-boat close by disappeared, leaving only a few odd pieces of wood and a smashed lifeboat drifting round. It is now half-past (?), and the hostile circle grows ever smaller. The Lutzow and the Seydlitz lie with their bows deep in the water; both are badly mauled. The fore part of the Lutzow was in flames. Shells burst against the ships' side in rapid succession. A terrible sight is presented on board the Lutzow, and it needs iron nerves to look upon it coolly. Hundreds have lost their lives, while many have lain for hours in torture, and the fight is not yet over. The bow is now crushed in and is entirely submerged. The four screws are already sticking half out of the water, so that the Lutzow can only make 8 to 10 knots an hour, as against the normal 32."

"The Admiral decides to transfer to the Moltke. He gives orders to turn and get away from the scenes of the fight but the Lutzow has not gone a mile before she receives a broadside of 38-centmeter shells. The entire ship was filled with the poisonous fumes of the shells, and anyone who failed to affix his gas-mask was doomed to be suffocated.

"It was three-quarters of an hour before the lighting installation was restored. Then for the first time the extent of the damage wrought by the salvo was seen. One of the shells had landed in the sick bay. Here there were three doctors and fifteen attendants besides 160 to 180 wounded. Of all these only four remained alive. These four were hurled into the next compartment by the air pressure; there they lay unconscious.

Ship Veritable Junk.

"The Lutzow was now a complete wreck. Corpses drifted past. From the bows up to the first 30-centimeter gun-turret the ship lay submerged. The other gun-turrets were completely disabled, with the guns sticking out in all directions. On deck lay the bodies of the sailors in their torn uniforms, in the midst of the empty shell cases. From the masts fluttered torn flags, twisted signal lines and pieces of wire of the wireless installation. Had not the lookout man and the three officers on the commander's bridge given signs of life, the Lutzow would have truly resembled a ship of the dead. Below, on the battery deck, and in the coal bunkers, there still lay innumerable wounded, but there was no longer a doctor to attend them.

Night came on and hope was entertained of getting away without a further encounter. But at three o'clock in the night news of the approach of two British cruisers and five destroyers was received, and just at that critical time the fore and middle bulkheads gave way.

"Orders were given to quickly carry the wounded to the stern. Then the order rings out: "All hands muster in division order abaft'. A tumult arises on the lower deck, for everybody is now bent on saving his life. It is impossible in that short space of time to bring up all the wounded, for they are scattered everywhere. Eighteen men had the good fortune to be carried up, but all the rest who could not walk or crawl had to be left behind.

"The 27 men shut up in the Diesel dynamo chamber had heard the order through the speaking-tube, for many, mad with anguish, screamed through the tube for help, and it was learned that two of their number lay bound because they had become insane. Inspired by their sense of duty these sealed-up men had continued to carry on their work in order to provide the ship with light.

"The torpedo boats now quickly took off the crew of the Lutzow, and those left behind were doomed to death. It was resolved that no piece of the vessel should fall into the enemy's hands. An order was given and a torpedo cleft the waters. Just then seven men were to be seen running like madmen round the rear deck. Over-fatigued as they were, they had apparently dropped off to sleep and only just awakened. As the torpedo exploded, the Lutzow's bow quickly dipped, and the stern rose until she stood on end. Then she heeled over and sank, forming a great whirlpool that carried everything within it into the depths.

"When the roll was called it appeared that there were 1,002 survivors of the Lutzow; 597 men had perished in the battle."

Baby's Great Danger During Hot Weather

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera infantum and stomach troubles come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in homes where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Chief Magistrate Of Berlin Bluntly Demands Freedom

Burgomaster Reicke Says "Let Us Be a Free People but Not Merely on Paper."

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 4.— Burgomaster Reicke, of Berlin, hits out with remarkable bluntness in passing judgment on the internal situation Germany in an article, in Monday's Berliner Zeitung Am Mittag, which has just reached here. Replying to a question as to whether Germany after three years of war was able to register gains internally, as well as externally, Berlin a chief magistrate said:

"The answer is but a hesitating affirmative. We seem to have become a nation of profiteering hucksters. Those who are not corrupted by the mammon chase are haunted with a fear lest, after all, the country is slipping back into the rut of officialdom. • • • We are still kept in leading strings; we are not really a free people. • • •

"We call for the benefit of the counsels of a dozen workingmen, but the word is quietly passed from the government table: 'These fellows cannot be told all. Just treat them like children.'

"What is wanted is a Parliament that has power, not a mere legislative machine, and a government of men who are not educated to believe that a bureaucrat necessarily knows better than an ordinary mortal. Let us be a free people, but not merely free on paper."

Our respect for old age depends a great deal on whether it is to be applied to men and women or boarding house poultry.

Working Out Of Conscription Leaves Much To Public Spirit

In Absence of Registration Military Authorities Must See That Men Affected Are Brought Forward

Ottawa, Aug. 3.—Now that discussion of the principle of conscription has fairly well died down, so far as the Commons at least is concerned, members are puzzling their minds as to the methods by which it will be applied. One of the outstanding features of the Canadian Act, as distinguished from the United States measure, is that there is no registration. In the United States a day was set apart when men came forward and attested to their names, age, occupation, address, etc. At the end of that day ten million men had registered. In Canada men automatically become conscripts as soon as the proclamation calling out their class is issued. After that they must either seek exemption from the tribunals or come forward at the place and time designated for enrollment. As soon as the proclamation is issued such men as are affected are under military authority and it is for the military authorities to see that they attend, or are brought to the place designated. This task will be more or less difficult.

In the case of a civil registration before enrollment, local officers acquainted with the populace of the particular district, will be in a position to fairly well comb out all the eligibles and to prevent slacking. Thereafter the military authorities could see to it that those who registered answered the call for enrollment.

Cannot Hold Men.

Under the Canadian law, there is absolutely no machinery to prevent a man leaving the particular district to which he belongs and setting out for a holiday in the woods or in the back country until the required number has been called out. After that he might return and plead that he had never heard of the proclamation.

Moreover, through the lack of registration there is no provision for attestation as to age. For instance, a man might fail to appear at the place of enrollment and might claim that he did not come within the class called. The onus would be upon the authorities to prove that he did. In the Maritime Provinces where up to a few years ago there was no provision for birth registration this would be a difficult matter. Many men may go free on account of this phase of the situation; on the other hand military officers in certain places may be inclined to be arbitrary and to refuse excuses. In such cases the only recourse would be the tribunal.

Leaves much to Public.

The successful working out of the Act appears to leave a great deal to public spirit. During the discussion of the measure in the Commons on July 11 the following passage, as recorded in Hansard, occurred:

Mr. Turriff: "If, say, in the city of Ottawa, a large number of young men who would be liable to conscription under this bill should fail to come forward, what provision is there for punishing them? It might be the duty of the Attorney-General of the Province to enforce the law, but he would not be likely to take action. I have not yet been able to ascertain that under these circumstances the slackers could get off."

Mr. Meighen: "It will be the duty of the authorities, no matter how many men had reported themselves, to see to it that the law is enforced as to those who did not and, so far as the government is concerned, that is the intention."

Mr. Nesbitt: "It would be the duty of the authorities to see that they were registered, but how would the authorities know?"

Mr. Meighen: "The general answer would be in the same way as we know of the violation of any law; but specifically I might say that inasmuch as everywhere in Canada there are those who have gone forward and who are interested that more go forward and that this war be pressed forward with all the strength of the country, it is believed that that class of people will make themselves of service to the country by making known to the authorities those who disobey the law, and I think there are good grounds for that belief. I do not think there is any section of Canada where there are not sufficient numbers who are interested generally in the enforcement of the law, and interested specially in the enforcement of such a law as strengthens the army of this country for the war, and who will assist their country in reporting men who failed to do their duty under this Act."

Enforcement may be Difficult.

In other words the Act is to be enforced through a confusing combination of civil and military authority and private espionage. Much depends on public opinion being behind the Act. Where such public opinion is non-existent or weak the enforcement of the Act wil conceivably be very difficult. Much would seem to depend upon the regulations which would be framed later by the tribunals but which at present can only be conjectured upon.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. Now you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the curse of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their graves, ruins health, makes you weak runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron acts directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. You start to day and take two or three tablets of Bonized Phosphorus with Iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent stronger.

This drug does not act like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is dispensed by one druggist in each city. F. C. Weber dispenses it for Peterborough.

Gift To Big Interests Grows As It's Examined

The Tax System Being Abandoned Takes in Some Instances Nineteen Times as Much as That Which Is to Succeed It

The more Sir Thomas White's gift horse in the shape of a business income tax is looked in the mouth, the more certain it is that the creature will never bite the big interests or the wealthy corporations, writes the Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto Star. At present, when a corporation's profits run over 20 per cent., it has to hand to the government three-quarters of that excess, besides substantial percentages on the rest of its profits. But under the new income tax it will be called on to surrender only about one-twenty-fifth (instead of three-quarters) of its profits over 20 per cent., and only one-twenty-fifth of its lesser profits also.

Now, anyone (except a profiteer), will admit that profits over 20 per cent. are the fairest sort of game for government marksmen in wartime. It might even be imagined that the government might wholly confiscate the excess and the companies and the companies still be able to 'struggle along" with their "little twenty." But confiscation is a word which makes Sir Thomas White's eyes "bug out of his head," especially when the big interests hold up their hands in horror. So having put his hand to the plow, he turns back. Instead of taking more, he will take less—much less.

Nineteen Times as Much.

Consider the case of the Ford Company, whose 54.25 per cent. profits were cited in Monday's Star. If the Middleboro figures which appear in Hansard are correct, then that company would pay under the present excess profits tax the huge sum of over $1,500,000 on its profits over 20 per cent. alone. But under the new income tax it would pay only $80,876 on its profits over 20 per cent., and only $127,981 on all its profits.

In other words, the tax which the Government is abandoning takes nineteen times as much as the tax which the government is imposing, so far as the profits of such a company over 20 per cent. are concerned. On the whole profits the present tax takes fourteen times as much as the new one. The Ford Company figures have been used as an example. But these facts do not depend on their accuracy as applied to that particular company. These figures hold true for any concern using capital of approximately $5,900,000 and making the profits stated.

Details of Taxation.

For anyone who wishes to go into details of the present and proposed taxation, and to "see how the wheels go round" in Canada's Finance Department, the following facts are of interest. The Ford Company's 1915 profits, as indicated by the Middleboro schedule, would, for purposes of the present tax, be classified as follows:

(Per cent.	(Profits.)
First 7 per cent.	$ 413,228
7-15 per cent.	472,261
15-20 per cent.	295,163
Over 20 per cent.	2,021,868
Total profits	$3,202,520

Taxes would be colected on the foregoing as follows, under the business profits tax:

No tax on	$413,228	$
One-quarter	472,261	118,065
One-half	295,163	147,581
Three-quarters	2,021,868	1,516,401
Total		$1,782,047

Even the older excess profits tax would have exacted one-quarter of all profits over 7 per cent., or a total tax on $2,789,292 of $697,323.

Here they are to Compare.

But what would the new business income tax do? It would take only a "measly" 4 per cent. of all profits over $3,000. Here is a table where the taxes under the present excess profits tax are set down side by side with those under the new income tax in the ecase of the Ford Company:

Profits.	Present Tax.	New Income Tax.
7 per cent.	nil	$16,409
7-15 per cent.	$118,065	18,890
15-20 per cent.	147,581	11,807
Over 20 per ct.	1,516,401	80,875
Totals	$1,782,047	$127,981

Two things will strike anyone who glances at the foregoing comparison: First, the discrepancy between the two taxes where profits up to 7 per cent. are concerned; and, second, the discrepancy where profits exceed 20 per cent. Attention has already been drawn to the latter feature. The government's new tax fails at the point where it should hit hardest and where the present one does hit hardest. The other feature, the tax under 7 per cent., is also worthy of analysis.

Gets at Minor Profits.

Under the present excess profits measure, profits up to 7 per cent. are regarded as reasonable and are not taxed. Under the new arrangement these will pay 4 per cent. on everything over $3,000. This, in itself, might be justified; it would be a war time measure, "taxing companies until it hurt." But when the companies which take huge profits are being "let down" from millions to hundreds of thousands in their taxes, it seems ridiculous to impose an added tax on concerns which are merely "doing nicely" in a business way. In plain words it is clear that the government is shifting the burden from those best able to bear it, and apparently is doing it deliberately and with callousness to the interests of the nation as a whole.

JAPANESE SHIPS FOR ALLIES.

Government Willing to Utilize Part to Make Up Sub. Losses.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3. — Just as soon as the export council can come to an understanding with the Japanese Government as to the meaning of the term "war uses," as applied to shipping, the quantity of American structural steel which may be exported to Japan for the purpose of building ships, will be fixed.

The Japanese Government for its part is quite willing that a large portion of its mercantile shipping shall be utilized by the United States or the Entente allies to meet the necessity created by the German submarine warfare.

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

FRANCE CAN STAND ANOTHER YEAR OF WAR OUTLAY QUITE AS WELL AS SHE STOOD LAST

PARIS. — French finances have been unshaken by the war is the opinion expressed to the Associated Press by Charles Gide of the University of Paris, an eminent authority on economic conditions, discussing the outlook at the beginning of the fourth year of the conflict.

"France," said M. Gide, "has spent about 70,000,000,000 francs on three years of military effort. Yet in the thirty-sixth month of hostilities, the French people are investing in short term treasury bonds as freely as they were two years ago; that is, at the rate of about 1,000,000,000 francs a month."

As evidence of the excellence of French credit, M. Gide pointed to the co-operation of the United States, which he said, "brings formidable aid to France and her allies. This," he continues, "not only removes all doubt concerning the result of the war from a military standpoint, but relieves the finacial situation by diminishing the drain upon French gold.'

France Can Stand It.

"The money which France has spent to sustain her military effort inside the country swells the figures of her outlay to immense proportions but this outlay cannot be considered a dead loss except in such proportion as is spent for steel, explosives, and other material made to be destroyed. Increased prices paid for every commodity, it must be remembered also, has vastly increased the revenues of the French people. Be the war these revenues were 30,000,000,000 to 35,000,000,000 francs. Now they are 50,000,000,000 francs annually. These figures show that formidable as the war debt may appear at the first sight the problem of its liquidation is not so alarming after all.

"France can stand another year of war outlay quite as well as she stood the third year. It would be embarrassing for her to pay in gold for everything brought abroad but this difficulty has been relieved by the credit generously granted by the United States.

Outlook Good.

France will get through the war financially sound, will reconstruct her industries rapidly and her interior situation will be liquidated without causing any economic upheaval." Referring to the situation of the other belligerents, M. Gide said:

"I do not think any country will be ruined by the war. All are more or less in the same situation as France. The only real drain upon their resources is what they pay abroad. The best expenditure is that which might be called fictions; that is, the transfer of money from the pockets of some citizens to the pockets of others, a transer in which a great many new fortunes have been built up but in which the real riches of the country have been left untouched."

Referring to the economic measures to be taken after the war and to the complaints by Germany of an effort to ruin her economically, M. Gide said:

"The talk of an economic war after the belligerents lay down their arms has almost subsided. I consider it neither possible nor useful for Germany to be crushed commercially. She will be vanquished on the battlefield, her military power will be crushed, but she will be left free to work out her own economic destiny."

ITALY'S WAR AIMS EXPLAINED TO U.S.

TO REUNITE ALL ITALIANS.

Rome Chose War for Freedom of Oppressed Brothers Rather than Conquest.

Paris. — The allied conference, which opened recently, will adhere to the original programme of the Balkan question as to the centre of its deliberations. While the leaders will naturally take the opportunity of discussing the general situation in relation to the recent events in Russia and Germany, it is semi-officially announced that nothing beyond an exchange of views is contemplated in that direction. Conviction is thus given to one of a group of rumours circulated by the pacifist propagandists to the effect that the Balkan question was merely a screen to hide a consultation in view of a speedy peace on the best terms possible.

Once the Balkan sky is cleared of the Greek stormcloud, it is obvious to the allied statesmen that the key to the whole problem must be sought in the Adriatic rather than in the Aegean Sea. Although America is not directly concerned, no question of such importance to the allied body can fail to interest us egreatly. I have procured a statement made to Whitney Warren in this connection by an eminent Italian Admiral—made as a presentation of Italy's case before the American people:

"What meaning have the words Trentino, Trieste, Istria, Dalmatia, and Adriatic for the average American outside of their geographical acceptation?

"I will explain the meaning of those five magical words which for Italians all over the world justify the confidence on which the life and action of new Italy are founded. Italy, after long years of bondage has been able to reunite scattered pieces of her territory by wresting them away after long and bloody wars of independence from foreign usurpers. But Italy is not yet completely united and cannot feel secure as long as her gates remain open, as long as she has not brought back to her arms her sons still under the foreign yoke.

"In centuries of servitude we learned to suffer but not to submit. We are fighting to complete our union, and rather than forego it we prefer to die. The Trentino and Trieste are doors to our home whereof the foreigner has taken possession that prevents us from closing them against robbers. If New York and San Francisco were occupied by the Germans, would Americans have acted differently from the Italians? And what is represented by the Trentino and Trieste on land is represented by the Adriatic on the sea, for the sea frontiers of Italy are greater than her frontiers on land. By sea Italy breathes and lives. The Tyrhenian and the Adriatic are her two lungs. If you take a lung from a man he may not die immediately, ut he will be phthsic. If you take the Adriatic from Italy she will die of phthisis.

"It is only necessary to glance at the map to see that without Dalmatia and the chain of islands along the coast Italy can never be secure on the Adriatic. Dalmatia and those islands belonged to Venice. By their possession she assured herself and Europe against the Turkish pirates in the sea. When Venice fell and Austria ravished the heritage of Saint Mark Italy was not yet freed from her long bondage. This heritage in the hands of the usurpers formed an integral and indivisible part of the great Italian motherland too feeble to break the bonds asunder.

"Everywhere Austria found traces of Italian culture on the coasts and among the islands. Ancient monuments and modern houses, churches of old and churches of to-day — language, customs, civilisation—all is Latin and all part of the Italian motherland. But little by little Austria by persecution and confiscation, replaced the Italians of these regions by Germans or Croatians from the interior. Our houses, our altars, our monuments, are now occupied in a great measure by foreigners of another tongue and another civilization, who do not realise what they have torn from us, who understand neither the language of our country nor its ruins. They only know they are there because there is the key to the sovereignty of the Adriatic. The Italians left in Dalmatia struggle still to save what remains of their country and to invoke her aid, but their voices become more feeble as their numbers decrease. We must strike now for soon it will be too late, our thousand-year-old Latin civilization will be abolished by these spoilers.

"To these reasons must be added another of military order. Our dreadnoughts are shut up in Taranto because we do not possess a harbor large or deep enough on the Adriatic to hold a large squadron, whereas Austria dominates the whole upper Adriatic from Pola, the middle Adriatic from Setenco and Spalato, the lower Adriatic down to Corfu from Cattaro, and every channel, every isle affords excellent shelter for a large and powerful fleet. Thus Austria can overcome the inferiority of her fleet to those of Italy, France and England. At any moment she can bring out her vessels from any point of the magnificent coast she has stolen from us, and we have no port at all to harbor our big ships.

"For these reasons the words Dalmatia and Adriatic evoke the following thought in all Italians to-day. We cannot use the sea which bathes half of our country because all advantages are on the opposite coast. Austria was for centuries without the Adriatic, yet she was powerful, and prosperous, because she was not a seafaring but essentially a continental nation. We, on the contrary, by our geographical situation are exclusively a maritime nation. We never have been able to live without the Adriatic, and now that we are threatened to be deprived of it forever, we will fight for it to the death.

"Italy does not demand territorial conquests; she wants simply to get back what belongs to her, what is necessary for her existence. If we had nourished the idea of conquest would we not have joined our former allies to profit by the advantages they held out? A vast colonial empire, the riches of Corsica, Nice and Savoy — was not that a tempting bait for our ambition? And remember that at the time Italy entered the war everything pointed to a victory for the Central Powers. But these promises Italy preferred, the Carso, the Trentino, and the Cursolari Islands. We are not waging a war of conquest, but struggling to turn out the intruder in our home, to deliver our own sons, to save Latin civilisation.

"You Americans, why are you fighting? To conquer and destroy life and all that makes life worth living? No, you entered the war to contribute your part to the liberty of those who deserve it so that never again shall a war of greed and injustice be repeated. Those are the aspirations of Italy also, and we need America to help us free ourselves, to make us masters of our own house, to uphold with all her conscience our rights to the Trentino and Trieste, Dalmatia and the Cursolari Islands when the peace negotiations begin. Those are the only conditions for us of a real and lasting peace."

Time may be a success as a wound healer, but it seldom removes the scar.

Beauty may be only skin deep, but it manages to get a seat in a crowded car.

Whenever a man begins to investigate a woman's cooking he means business.

Round shouldered men would be scarce if there were no troubles but real ones.

Time improves everything but women; they, of course, have been perfect from the beginning.

If a man is a coward he is scorned and abused; if a woman is a coward she is petted and encouraged.

CONSULAR SERVICE FACES BIG TASK

MUST TRACE SHIPMENTS FROM UNITED STATES TO NEUTRALS UNDER EMBARGO ACT.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A system of tracing to their ultimate destination shipments of supplies from the United States to neutral countries not contiguous to Germany will ultimately be devised as a part of the task of administrating the embargo act and the trading with the enemy act.

For the present the Exports Council is wrestling with the problem of apportioning supplies to the neutral countries, near or contiguous to Germany. The closest surveillance over these direct shipments will not entirely close the door to Germany, it has been pointed out, as shipments might be made to South America or other countries and thence reshipped to European neutral countries to be sent ultiately across the Germany frontier.

These indirect shipments present a less important aspect of the problem of suppressing trading with the enemy, but it will be given careful consideration. The opportunity for the shipment of supplies from the United States to European countries by way of South America is small because of the lack of vessels and the careful surveillance of the allied Powers, but precautions are to be taken to block even this method of affording comfort to the enemy.

The administration of the embargo act involves a tremendous task for the consular service, which is being readjusted to this end. In other respects the work of the service has grown prodigiously since the outbreak of the war and it will be pressed to the limit of its resources to obtain the commercial information upon which the decisions of the Exports Council will in large measure be based. Much information is being obtained from British sources, but the United States is not relying upon this entirely for guidance.

The government will depend upon its own system and follow, so far as possible, an independent course, although co-operating with France and Great Britain. The American consular forces are being strengthened in neutral European countries with this end in view.

KINGSTON, Aug. 3. — The British American Hotel, in service for one hundred and twenty years or more, is now a base recruiting office for Major G. I. Major Campbell is keeping the machinery for volunteer recruiting going, and every inducement is being made to get men to sign up before conscription. The harvest season is given as the cause for the slump in enlistments.

Laugh When People Step On Your Feet

Try this yourself then pass it along to others, It works!

Ouch ! ? ! ? ! ! This kind of rough talk will be heard less here in town if people troubled with corns will follow and simple advice of this Cincinnati authority, who claims that a few drops of a drug called freesone when applied to a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the corn dries up and lifts right out without pain.

He says freesone is an ether compound which dries immediately and never inflames or even irritates the surrounding tissue or skin. A quarter of an ounce of freesone will cost very little at any drug store but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Mid this announcement since the inaugurations of American women will welcome ation of the high heels.

CEREALS FROM ROUMANIA.

100,000 Carloads Available for the Central Empires.

ZURICH, Aug. 3.—The Vienna Neue Freie Presse, in estimating the world's harvest for the year, says that Roumania, after supplying the needs of her home population and of the Austrian and German armies, will be able to send 100,000 carloads of cereals to Germany and Austria-Hungary. The newspaper admits that grain in Germany and Austria-Hungary has suffered from the heat and drought, but considers that the harvest will be an average one, except as to barley, the crop of which will be poor. Taking the harvest as a whole, it declares the supply of bread, flour and potatoes for the fourth year of the war is assured, although hard times will be experienced until the new flour is put on the market.

"Food Controllers in the States and Canada were appointed in order that the men at the front might be fed," says Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canadian Food Controller. "In order that those behind at home should not go hungry; in order that Great Britain and her allies should not have to retreat from the enemy for want of food."

SCHULTZ IS CALLED IN THE WAR DRAFT

Leads' Third Baseman Leaves for Buffalo to Join the Colors.

Joe Schultz, the Leads' third baseman, has been called to the colors, and he left yesterday for Buffalo to be attested. He was one of the most recent recruits brought here by the Toronto management and was billed at that time as an extra good hitter. He received notification yesterday that he had been drafted, and as he left immediately, Blackburne was moved over to his old position at third and Warbey was put in at short. Schultz was married this Spring, but it is hardly likely that he will claim exemption under that clause. Unless Murray, the infielder released by Washington, reports at once, the Toronto infield will have a hole that it will take some filling.

BERLIN BOASTS OF WINNING, FORGETS HER LOST COLONIES

214,106 Square Miles of Territory Won, but Ignores 1,027,820 Allies Hold.

BERLIN, August 4.—In its review of the third year of the world war the Tageblatt says that the armies of Germany and her allies have conquered more than half a million square kilometres (193,000 square miles) of Entente territory, and asserts that the military strength of the Central Powers, instead of decreasing, has increased, while that of France has visibly diminished. The newspaper says the German people have plainly announced its readiness for peace and expresses the hope that common sense and a sincere desire for the cessation of hostilities will assert themselves in the ranks of German's adversaries. The Tageblatt says:

"The end of the third year of the war finds the issue in the East and in the West undecided. For the moment interest in the military operations is focussed upon Flanders and Galicia.

"The last year, however, has been fruitless of many instructive results. Above all it may be asserted that the Entente no longer has the disposal of unlimited production and supplies of ammunition, as was the case during the Somme battle. This cessation of munition reinforcement has had a noticeable effect on the Western front. And, whereas the material resources of our opponents have not increased and the strength of France has become visibly diminished we still are unimpaired in our strength and more strongly fortified than ever before.

He who is willing to be guided solely by the facts and will not permit himself to be deceived by illusions must admit that the ambition of our foes to crush us is to-day less justified than at any other period, and because this is so we may be permitted to express the hope that common sense and a sincere desire for peace may finally assert themselves in the ranks of our opponents.

The German people through its accredited representatives has plainly announced to the world at large its readiness for peace. We hope this expression will be appreciated in its full importance on the other side.

The following offers an approximate picture of the area of occupied territory which is now held by the military forces of the Central Powers measured in square miles:

Belgium	11,302
France	7,595
Russia	109,391
Roumania	39,600
Serbia	33,488
Montenegro	5,530
Albania	7,800
Total	214,106

This total is opposed by 900 square kilometres (351 square miles) of land held by the French, and the Austro-Hungarian territory in Russian possession, measuring 25,500 square kilometres (9,945 square miles.) The latter figure no longer holds good. It has been diminished by fully sixty per cent, and is likely to fall away entirely in the near future."

The Tageblatt appears to have forgotten the little colonies in Africa, all of which have passed into the hands of the Entente except a small section of German East Africa; her 200 square miles of colony of Tsingtao, held by Japan, and her 96,160 miles of fertile Pacific islands, now in the possession of Australia and New Zealand—a total of 1,027,820 square miles, or five times the size of her conquests in Europe, lost to Germany forever.

Lions and Tigers On Berlin's Menu As Famine Nears

Young Woman Student Says One Square Meal a Week is German Limit.

An Atlantic Port. — The intense hatred which has prompted the Germans to include in their prayers "Gott strafe England!" has been transferred with redoubled force to America, according to Miss Marie Brown of Pittsburg, who arrived here to-day after more than three years' sojourn in Berlin.

Miss Brown has been studying music in Berlin. She went there in April, 1914, and finished her studies just about the time the United States declared war against Germany.

"I decided to leave Berlin on May 29," said Miss Brown "but found obstacle after obstacle placed in my way and was unable to obtain the necessary papers to leave that country. My appeals to the highest functionaries were unavailing and in many instances I met with harsh and uncivil refusals."

Miss Brown said that just as she was beginning to fear that she would not be allowed to return to America at all, help came from an unexpected source. Captain Hans Tauscher, husband of Mme. Johanna Gadski, Metropolitan Opera singer, used his influence in her behalf, and she soon afterward received the papers which allowed her to return to her own country.

The food conditions in Germany are inexpressibly terrible," said Miss Brown. "When I passed through Leipsic," she said, "I was told that people there were eating the animals of the zoological garden. Elephant meat was on the menu at that time."

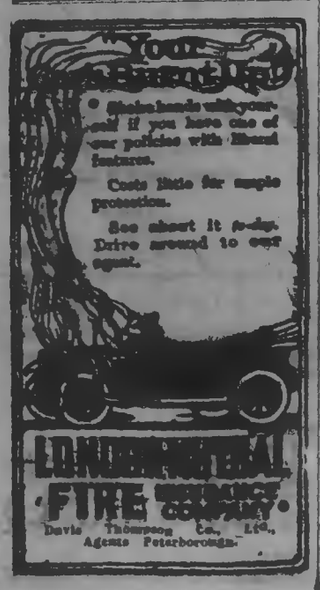
Lions and tigers were marked for the cuisine next, and monkeys were being reserved for the last.

Even in Berlin food prices are so high that none but the very wealthiest can pay them.

"Of course," said Miss Brown, "the wealthy escape some of the pangs of hunger which the poorer classes are suffering; but there is probably not anybody who is eating more than one square meal a week in Berlin. This is not so much on account of the cost as of the strict prohibitions in regard to food consumption.

"I left Berlin on July 14. On the day before that the price of butter was $2.50 a pound. Eggs were selling at twenty-five cents each. I was sharing an apartment with two other girls, one a Chilian, the other from Russia. A few days before I left our charwoman told us that she could no longer work for us as her strength was completely exhausted. She had not had proper nourishment in many months."

Miss Brown learned on her arrival here that her father, a prominent business man of Pittsburg, was seriously ill. She said she would go to him at once.



GERMANY AND GERMANY

By CHARLES GRAY SHAW

(Professor of Philosophy, New York University.)

It is only within recent years that the flamboyant cry, "Deutschland Ueber Alles!" has conveyed any definite meaning. Nations are as much given to resounding mottos as college boys to yells and dealers to high sounding advertisements. Germany had a right to be above all things German, but the wings of the heraldic bird of Prussia are not supposed to extend their ornithological sway to seas and steppes. There should be no doubt now that Germany sought to Prussianize and Potsdam a much wider area than "The Watch on the Rhine" seemed to betoken. For this reason it has become expedient to keep watch on both sides of the historic river. Sailing down this romantic stream, the Teutonic mind has begun to feel the mad spirit of the Lorelei, and while we do not wonder at the danger which threatens the skipper in his thoughtless barque, we fear lest the wreck of the imperial skiff may do some damage to other craft along the shore.

We must settle with our Germanic host, but the account demands payment in something more than war coin. We must subject the German to an nalysis which his own and rather pedantic psychology has provoked within our curious minds. Germany must come into the laboratory and have its mental measurements taken and recorded. The most apparent psychology of the mind Teutonic is to the effect that there are two Germanys—German people and German politics. This distinction was made by President Wilson, who had had to solve more than one psychological problem before he put his name to his war proclamation. There are indeed two Germanys in the sense that there is a dual number in the case of England and France, Russia and Italy, to say nothing of our western republics. But the German people have been so unable to see this obvious distinction that there is little hope of the people rising against the Crown. A German revolution, a German magna charta, a German Unabhanigkeitserklarung, or declaration of independence, are things to be dreamed of by other than German people. Mr. Ackerman has ventured this hope faintly and interrogatively in his war labelled volume, "Germany the Next Republic?" Others have tried to feel that the long suffering German worm would turn; but it seems as though Germany were likely to prove the exception to political rules and thus continue to hug its chains and return to the stone of its smiting.

There is a dual Germany, however, in the sense of that old Lutheran, Kantian, Goethean affair, whose memory is bound to remain precious in the minds of all who have the ability and willingness to make distinctions. That old Germany, spiritual, speculative and romantic, played Brunhilde to Bismarch's Siegfried when it gave up its Valkyrie horse in exchange for the ring of new Germany, with its militant commercialism, only to have the new Siegfried fall into a fatal condition of obliviscence. In the midst of political insignificance Germany brought forth wonders of philosophy and music. Those whose praise does not fear exaggeration when exaggeration seems appropriate did not hesitate to refer to the culture (bildung, but not kultur) of modern Germany as a thing not wholly unlike that Hellenic humanism which, except for sporadic revival in old Florentine days, had suffered the descent into "innocuous desuetude." That was the old Germany, a spirit which gave Germany its soul and made it a sort of cherub, a winged head without a body. Appreciating this condition of things, Eucken, who has been so sadly demoralized by the Prussian chaos, sought to add significance to the Schiller commemoration of 1903 by pointing out that then, in 1803, Germany enjoyed an inner but not an outer unity, while now, in 1908, the outer arrangement of things had caused the inner spirit of order to take to itself appropriate wings.

Such a psychological distinction must one make in analyzing the mind that is German. Its fine spirituality, of Geistigkeit, could not lie down in lamb-like safety by the side of the Prussian loon. The old Germany is dead, although one may greatly exaggerate the depth of its demise. Soon after the peace of 1871 Nietzsche accused the Germans of turning their victory into defeat. Since the end of the Franco-German War Europe, which has been called upon to witness many a political paradox, has seen victorious Germany strive for its own undoing while defeated France succeeded in the swift payment of its war debt, as also in the creation of a new spirit in philosophy and poetry. France, not Germany, has produced the culture about which so much has been said where not so much has been thought.

What's to become of the country which has despised peace and adored war? One does not like to play Saul among the prophets, yet one can hardly help speculating upon the future of such an enigmatical land. Knowing the reactionary nature of the German mind, it is possible to conjecture, that, instead of taking a step forward toward democracy, Germany may revert to its intellectual type and thus turn again to the works of its own genius instead of trying to throw the spirit of eternal contradiction into Europe and the rest of the world. It will be a long time before Germany produces another Goethe, Beethoven or Hegel; but Germany is better adapted to this sort of eugenics and more likely to indulge in just this venture than she is to continue the race of Crown Princes, Von Hindenburgs and Von Tirpitzes. When Wagner's Germanic Wotan was perplexed beyond the powers of his private philisophy to solve his problems he appealed to Erda, the earth spirit. If Erda may be induced to rise from the earth and dispense wholesome advice she may be accompanied by the spirit of the old Germany, which, we believe, has been by her side in the shades.

SOME LOCAL VEGETABLES SHOW SLIGHT DECLINE

Raspberries and Huckleberries Are Now at Height of Supply.

Tomatoes, cucumbers and several other lines of vegetables and fruits are a little cheaper this week, but for the most part this market is high and firm. The following are some of the prices:

Home grown tomatoes per pound—15c., 18c. and 20c.
Cucumbers each—5c. and 10c.
Potatoes per peck—60c. and 65c.
Tomatoes per 18 lb basket—$1.75.
String beans, per basket—50c.
Celery per bunch—10c., or 3 for 25c.
Cauliflower each—10c. and 15c.
Cabbage each—5c. and 10c.
Vegetable marrow each—10c.
Huckleberries per basket—$1.00 to $1.50.
Montmorency cherries per basket—$1.20 to $1.35.
Red raspberries per box—18c., or 2 for 35c.
Purple raspberries per box—15c.
Rockford melons, each—10c. and 15c.
Carrots, beets, onions, lettuce, etc., per bunch—5c

The berry crop is a heavy one, but its full effect will not be exercised on prices for the reason that labour is scarce and the full crop will not be picked.

Wild raspberries in the vicinity of Peterborough are also plentiful and many citizens are laying away stores of preserves for the winter. Automobile owners go farther afield and include huckleberries in their haul. Yesterday, several parties went all the way to Ketchecum Lake, returning last night with a big day's picking. On the market this morning huckleberries sold at $1.50 a pail.

Potatoes Holding Firmly.

The potato market is holding steady locally, but as soon as the bulk of the local crop comes in prices are bound to come down. This is the general feeling, but there are some growers, who believe that prices will prevail at a fairly high figure even during the season of the heaviest selling.

"The primary duty of a Food Controller in Canada and the United States," said Hon. W. J. Hanna in a recent interview, "is to see that the men at the front do not suffer from want of food, and that our Mother Country and our European Allies do not suffer from want of food."

"Have you the power to check prices?" Hon. W. J. Hanna was asked.

"Certainly."

"Are you going to exercise it?"

"In the cases where we have the necessary data we will not hesitate to check prices," declared Mr. Hanna.

WOODMEN AT CHEMONG.

Drive and Dance Was Enjoyed by Large Party.

The Thursday evening drive to Chemong under the auspices of the Woodmen of the World last night was a fine success in every way. The ideal weather following the depressing heat added to the good humour of the picnicers, which amounted to great enthusiasm when the motors arrived at the pavillion and Tucker's orchestra played for one of the jolliest dances of the season at the Park. After midnight Dan Sullivan, whose fame as a caterer is widespread, served a dainty supper. Mr. Sullivan was heartily thanked for his courteousness and obliging manner in handling the crowd.

A jolly drive home, spent in dodging motors going the other way finished an evening of perfect enjoyment.

"At first the call was for men, munitions and money," says Food Controller Hanna. "Now the cry is for men, munitions and food."

Allies Will Need To Destroy Three Subs Every Day

WASHINGTON — With 200 U-boats in active service against Allied and American shipping, the Germans are turning out from three to four submarines each week while the Allies are snaring or destroying an average of only one a week, according to figures secured recently in official circles.

Unofficial estimates of the submarine strength of Germany have far exceeded the conservative official figures. A scientific authority estimated that at the end of July, Germany possessed 700 submarines, these figures being based upon knowledge of the capacity of German ship-yards for construction together with the belief that Germany has standardized submarine parts. This authority asserted that Germany could build 1,000 submarines a year. At such a rate of construction, the Allies would have to destroy three U-boats a day to keep pace with German manufacture. The value of a ship is said to run from $1,000 to $2,000 per ton. Taking the larger figure, the financial loss in ships alone would be $1,600,000,000 a month. The cargoes of the ships destroyed in many instances are worth more than the ships themselves. Some officials estimated the damage inflicted upon Allied, American and neutral tonnage available for allied uses to run from $3,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 per month.

Several Classes of Subs.

Germany is known to be turning out simultaneously several classes of submarines, running from the small type for use in the English channel and on the trade routes between England and Holland and from the base at Zeebrugge on the Belgian coast, to the super-submarine of 1,200 tons and carrying two five-inch guns.

The intermediate types— these inflicting the largest amount of damage to the enemy shipping —are of the U-53 class and the mine laying submarines. The U-53 type is large and speedy with extraordinary seakeeping powers, and is employed in the lanes between the United States and Europe between Russia and England, and in the Mediterranean. They, together with the mine laying U-boats, operate from the largest submarine bases such as Kiel. These submarines do not restrict themselves to fixed sea areas, but employ the utmost strategy in evading their most deadly foe, the destroyer.

Want Naval Offensive.

The problem is narrowing down and drawing closer to the necessity of initiating a naval offensive, and it was learned on the highest authority that "unofficial pressure from official sources" in the United States has been brought to bear upon the British Government to induce it to institute or rather to plan for a naval offensive.

It was explained that there is no naval policy now followed by the Allies calling for an offensive, and that even should offensive operations be decided upon, several months must necessarily transpire before preparations could be made for it.

The pressure from America unofficial as well as from official sources, was said to be having its effect upon the Allies, and the prediction was confidently made that the time when the offensive will be undertaken is drawing near. It is not proposed to send warships up against German land fortifications, but to devise modifications of offensive methods involving the closing of submarine channels, both by deep nets and also by the use of destroyer patrols and seaplanes, the latter to be used both for observation and also for continuous raids upon German bases and submarine plants.

"Jim" Brady Executofs Settle With Claimants

Mrs. Mary E. McGee of New York has substantiated her contention that she is a half-niece of the late James Buchanan ("Diamond Jim") Brady to the satisfaction of the executors of the Brady estate. As a result, the executors have made a settlement out of court of Mrs. McGee's claim for a share of the estate, and her contest of his will, which donated the bulk of his wealth to charity, has been withdrawn.

Mrs. McGee asserted that she was the daughter of Brady's half-sister, Mrs. O'Neill. It is reported that Mrs. McGee accepted less than $25,000 in settlement of her claim. Counsel and claimants all refused to state the exact terms of the settlement. Five daughters and a son live at home with Mrs. McGee, and she also has a married daughter.

The executors have also settled the claim of Daniel M. Brady, a brother of "Diamond Jim," and Mrs. Harriet Mathieu of East Jaffrey, N.H., a sister. The amount of the settlement in favour of these two is variously reported from $200,000 to $1,000,000. Their claims were settled, it was stated, to avoid protracted litigation and to enable the New York and Johns Hopkins hospitals to obtain the bequests made to them as soon as possible, so they can be devoted to war work by the institutions.

Lloyd George Sees The Sunshine Of Victory Ahead

Premier In a Forceful Speech Refers to the Progress of the War

"A DEEP GLEN"

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, August 4. — Premier Lloyd George to-day say the sunshine of victory just ahead of the allies in a forceful speech at Queen's Hall, commemorating the third anniversary of the war.

"Nobody in Britain, France, Italy, Russia, or even in Germany and Austria, has any idea how near the summit of our hopes we are," he declared. "Russia's collapses is like a deep glen through which we are passing. Though it is not sure that we have reached the darkest depths, nevertheless across the valley we can see the sunshine of victory," said Lloyd George.

"The German war lords," the British Premier continued, "are glibb in taking about peace, but stammer over restorations. Before we enter a conference they must learn this utterance.

"There must be no workmen and soldiers' councils here in England. The House of Commons is the whole nation's workmen and soldiers' council. It can have no rival."

175,000 Men Asked To Serve On Farms

Ottawa, Aug. 4.—In an effort to secure farm labor for the present harvest, the National Service Board has sent out 175,000 circulars from Ottawa to men who indicated on their National Service cards their willingness to make a change of occupation if the public interests and exigencies of war demanded it. When the registration cards were returned last spring more than 300,000 men declared that they would be willing to undertake some essential war work. From these 300,000 names has been compiled a list of 175,000 men who are apparently physically fit, and now now engaged in occupations from which they could not be spared, for a time at least, to engage in farm labor. To all these men a National Service letter has gone.

In the letter it is pointed out that whilst this call for National Service may involve a sacrifice, men are invited to consider the fact that thousands of Canadians are to-day submitting to untold discomforts, risking their health, and for a remuneration of $1.10 per day. Those who cannot serve at the front are urged to serve the cause at home by helping on the farms.

Several hundred men in Peterboro have received the circulars in question.

Hay Pitching Record Established

A hay pitching record that is hard to beat was established on Monday on the farm of Mr. John Curtis, Ops, when J. O'Loughlin, of West Ops, aged 17 years, pitched twenty-eight loads of timothy in eleven hours. Two teams were drawing and the youngster remained on the job to the close, notwithstanding the fact the temperature of 95 degrees.

His friends are naturally proud of the record, and of his staying qualities.

Body Found In Lake

Rev. Mr. Andrews of Toronto, Evidently Drowned Trying to Reach Boat.

ORILLIA, Aug. 4. — The body of Rev. Mr. Andrews, who has been missing since Wednesday morning, was found in the lake yesterday afternoon. Deceased was a recent graduate of Wycliffe College, and curate of Church of the Messiah, Toronto. He came to Orillia Tuesday afternoon and was stopping with Mrs. (Rev.) S. A. S. Selywn, of Toronto, who is occupying a cottage on the lake shore, near Heward's Point. Mr. Andrews left the cottage about 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, in his bathing suit, and went out on the lake in a boat. It is presumed that he jumped into the lake from the boat, and that the boat drifted away from him and in endeavouring to reach it he was drowned. The boat was found yesterday. Messrs. C. H. McAlary and Herb. Smith, who have been searching the lake for two days, found the body yesterday. Deceased was twenty-eight years of age. So far as known he had no relatives in Canada; his mother lives in England.

Bad Impression Created In Italy

Supports Cry That Britain's Policy Will Be To Spare Austria.

NO SIGN OF CLEAVAGE

LONDON, August 4.—The correspondent of the Times in Rome, telegraphs: It would be useless to pretend that Mr. Balfour's speech in the Commons on Monday has made anything but a bad impression here. The writer says that for two years it has been claimed by neutralist elements in Italy that England's policy would be to spare Austria. Mr. Balfour's speech made it more difficult to meet these assertions. It is strongly felt, says the correspondent, that the British Foreign Minister should have displayed greater regard for Italian public opinion. The Messaggero hopes that Baron Connino, now in London, will succeed in showing the danger of such declarations as Mr. Balfour's, and enters protest against the different tones used in regard to Austria and Germany. The Messaggero admits that Germany's record of ferocity is a benefit to Austria by comparison, but reminds Britain that, after three years, there is no sign of cleavage between the two empires, and suggests that the one best means of lessening the insolence and menace of Germany is to lessen the insolence and menace of Austria.

"America Will Send Over Lot of Untrained Louts"

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The State Department yesterday received a telegram which contains an account of the reported views of a certain German naval officer who stated that the military party treats America's entrance into the war very lightly. The message stated that members of that party say that 'America will send over a crowd of untrained louts in wooden vessels that we can sink with hand grenades," and even if the United States should send 5,000,000 men they will be scattered like chaff for lack of training.

Real Decision Expected

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The correspondent talked yesterday with a half-dozen military and Government officials, all of whom declared that conditions on the western front were satisfactory and as practically all of the first objectives had been organized and consolidated excellent progress is assured in the future. Every move reported by the allied and German armies furnishes further proof that a real decision is expected as the outcome of the battle of Flanders.

Military Governor Shot

PETROGRAD, Aug. 4.—Gen. Erdelli, military governor of Petrograd, has been killed. He was treacherously shot in the back.

Gen Erdelli, a despatch from Petrograd on July 26 announced, had been appointed military governor of Petrograd in succession to Gen. Polovtseff, who had resigned after failing to put down rioting in the Russian capital. Gen. Erdelli had been commander of the eleventh army.

RENEW INTERNATIONAL FENCE.

CORNWALL, August 3.—A number of government surveyors are at work along the boundary line between the United States and Canada remodeling and setting new concrete posts as markers for the boundary. The surveyors began at Rouse's Point and are working westward, the survey being continued the entire distance across New York State at the line. These surveyors will be followed by others, who will map the country lying across the boundary line.
